An Italian scientist writes an article in the Epoca Democratica, of Genoa, on the recent earthquakes in the Riviera. He endeavours, from the materialistic point of view, to comfort and reassure the survivors, by pointing out that the catastrophe was due to "a simple and fortuitous natural phenomenon," and warns his readers against imagining that "the shock which so tragically wound up the Carnival was a judgment on the excesses of the festive season." A correspondent of The Pall Mall Gazette writes that this statement of the Italian professor has for the poor people of the Riviera what will seem to us in England "an absolutely incredible amount of comfort." Superstitious fear prevails on the one hand, and a denial of any Providential Government of the world on the other. One's heart aches for the wretchedness of the "comfort" thus "administered to these poor, houseless, bereaved, and suffering people—ashes for bread!"

But it is not in Italy alone that a certain class of philosophers imagine they can reassure and console us by getting God out of the universe, and by explaining everything as the working of a law of matter. There are some who have so false an idea of the Christian's God and the Christian's confidence as to think that the darkly working and unconscious agencies of nature are more beneficent than He, and that fate, or blind law, are more to be trusted in than the Providence of God.

Such was not the feeling of the ancient heathen worshippers of the powers of nature; for, in every way, they endeavoured to propitiate those powers, in craven fear and dread. But to the believer in God there is no such craven fear possible; for he knows that the God of grace and the God of nature are one God, that He who created also governs, down to the falling of a sparrow, and that while He permits the great and apparently cruel forces of nature to work steadily forward along the line of their own fixed laws, He has in view the beginning and the end, controls all, and makes all to work towards the fulfilment of his will, in the training of the human race whom He has redeemed, and for the dissolution of the present and the creation of a new earth and a new heaven.

> Worlds upon worlds are hanging on his hand,
> Life and death are waiting his command.

The fool, who saith in his heart there is no God, thinks he has gone far to prove that assertion, when he has separated in his own mind all natural phenomena from the Father of the spiritual world.

Let us turn to what the Lord Jesus Christ says. He spoke of natural phenomena. He prophesied of what we now begin to see, of the outward signs of the hidden fiery forces within our earth, of "earthquakes in divers places," of a time of extraordinary natural disturbances; and his Apostles reiterated his words, speaking of the time coming when "the elements shall melt with fervent heat." "Be reassured," say the materialists; "these are but natural and fortuitous circumstances, all explainable by natural laws." To which we reply, "We also perfectly understand that there are natural laws which are working in the natural world towards the consummation to which our eyes are directed. But we feel no alarm. On the contrary, we are instructed that 'when these things begin to come to pass' (accompanied by certain signs also in the moral world), we are 'to lift up our heads' with joy, 'for our redemption draweth nigh.'"

These phenomena will recur. It would be a happy thing if faithful, loving, and joyful servants of God were prepared to go forth, whenever possible, on the recurrence of such visitations, not only to bring the needful temporal relief, but to teach dwellers in lands less enlightened than ours the true nature of the Christian's hope, and the blessed future which is opening out for them through all the "tribulations" of the latter to correct the narrow and superstitious notions of many of these poor people, which only produce strong and brief emotion, soon passing away. For the attribution of such visitations as earthquakes to some definite and local misdoing is misleading, and not calculated to produce any lasting spiritual good. It is said that in the North of Scotland an earthquake which occurred in 1608 was believed to have been caused by the Sunday salmon-fishing in the river Dee; and that in the last century the people of New England were "so awakened by the awful providence in the earthquake, that the women generally laid aside their hoop petticoats."

A precisely similar spirit of narrow interpretation of providential events showed itself in the men who asked of Christ whether the persons "on whom the tower in Siloam fell" were sinners above other sinners. We have his Divine teaching in the reply He gave, "Nay; but except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish" The persons destroyed were not greater sinners than others; nor, in the case of the man born blind, had he or his parents especially merited such a chastisement. Their countrymen found it difficult, no doubt, to conceive of such an affliction falling on a man except as a personal judgment.

Such conclusions are founded on a false or wholly inadequate idea of the God with whom we have to deal, while they are unjust towards men. In respect to the recent earthquake, the remark has sometimes been made, "Strange that the gamblers of Monaco should have been spared, and those hundreds of poor peasants who fell on their knees in the churches should have perished." How narrow is apt to be our reading of the Divine mind and purpose! May not God in his wondrous patience have spared the idlers and the vicious, giving them time to repent? while to those who died on their knees may we not apply those hopeful words of so large and loving an application: "Whosoever" in those awful days "shall call on the name of the Lord, the same shall be saved." These peasants were, doubtless, many of them sincerely calling upon the name of the Lord, according to the light they had, in that terrible moment; and that Lord is full of compassion and of great kindness, and willeth not the death of a sinner.

There are unconscious supporters of Divine prophecy on all hands. Jesus said that there will be "earthquakes in divers places." Geologists and others who have studied the phenomena of earthquakes and volcanic action tell us that we may expect a continuance of severe shocks in many parts of the world. These, with other "signs," our Lord said, are "the beginning of sorrows." The word "sorrows" is literally "birthpangs," and no doubt that word was purposely used to denote the heralding of a new creation, the birth of a new dispensation.

I trust that on this subject, now so palpably and so solemnly brought almost to our doors, men and women taught by the Spirit of God will be enabled to speak and to teach, so as to bring home to the souls of men the double lesson of wisdom which Christ taught, in his reply to the inquiry concerning the persons killed by the falling of the Tower in Siloam, and in his great prophetic utterances concerning the latter days.

Some slight acquaintance with the working people in the portion of Liguria, west of Genoa, makes me think they would readily receive the Gospel. Some years ago meetings were held in Genoa on subjects interesting to the working classes. Numbers of working people come in from the country to attend them. At one of these meetings, being asked to speak, I said what was most on my heart. In returning to our hotel at night my husband and I were followed by a silent group of working men and women, who lingered round the hotel door to say, "Good-night," with a very wistful expression in their faces. Two days later a deputation of working women waited a couple of hours during my absence, in the hall of the hotel. When I met them they presented me with a roll of paper, on which they had inscribed in Italian, in their own humble fashion, an earnest petition that I would meet them in a poor hall, which they could secure in a working quarter of Genoa, and that Nazareth." They said they had heard many things, but they wished now to hear only this—of the Man of Nazareth. I went to their meeting, and before many minutes were over, some of the women asked that certain of their relations—fathers, brothers, and husbands—might come in, who were around the doors outside. Of course, these were invited to come in. I spoke to them of "the Man of Nazareth," and I shall never forget the expression on their careworn faces; they seemed to be hungering and thirsting for the truth, which alone could shed any light on their obscure and laborious lives.

From that time up to this day I have often thought of them, with the earnest prayer that God would move some true Christians to take the message of salvation, not only to the cities—to Rome, Florence, and the Riviera cities—but to the poor people of the country, who probably are more ready to receive it than others.

JOSEPHINE E. BUTLER.

Mrs. Butler wishes to thank all those who have subscribed for the sufferers by the earthquake on the Italian Riviera, and to let them know that she has now received about £100 most of this having been subscribed in small sums by persons, many of whom were evidently poor. Mrs. Butler and her family are taking steps to have the money faithfully and usefully distributed, especially among the villages where the poor sufferers have been less noticed by other helpers. N.E. LONDON GOSPEL MISSION.

Mr. GERALD COULTAS has been conducting a very successful eight days' mission at the Cubitt Town Hall of this Mission, in Glengall-road, concluding on Monday week with a large tea and experience meeting. Many bright testimonies were given, and much praise offered for the blessing accompanying the Gospel during these special meetings, and for the conversions already brought under notice.

The work at the six halls in connection with this Mission is still being happily forwarded. Beside the large number of voluntary labourers at each branch, including some evangelists of gift, there are three brethren and two sisters who spend their whole time in spiritually ministering to the poor in quarters as wretched as any in London.

At Bow Common three of the more recent converts were till lately among the most deplorable beer-shop loungers to be found, leaving their families of little children half starved and nearly nude all day long in fireless rooms. But this, we might say, is all changed now, and their lives are affording a testimony to the Gospel not to be gainsayed.

Following up the work of the Mission among the match-factory girls at Bow, Mr. Chorley is very anxious to found a Training Home, a few miles out of London, for those who are pleading to be delivered from the hard experiences and worse temptations of factory life. Already five have been rescued, but what is wanted is a properly organised Home specially set apart for these girls, about two hundred of whom are attending the meetings, where they may be properly trained for domestic service.

The "Spring letter" of the Mission just issued would be gladly sent to any of its numerous anonymous contributors, upon application to the superintendent, Mr. William Chorley, 2, Marquess-grove, Canonbury, N.

THE FLOWER MISSION in connection with the King's Weigh House Chapel takes bouquets of flowers on Saturday afternoons, sent by friends in the country, to the poor people living in the neighbourhood of the East London Docks. The flowers are always highly appreciated. They are resuming work for another season on Saturday, April 16, and will be grateful for help, as visitors, or contributors of flowers. The hon. sec. is Miss Kemp, Darby-street Mission Schools, Royal Mint-street, Minories

LETTERS FROM ROME.—7.

There is no more unique, interesting, and far-reaching work in Italy than that of Signore Capellini among the soldiers at Rome. During the summer he visits the regiments which are coming to Rome, gives them books, and the address of his meeting, so that when they come to the city they know where to find him. Everyone who has been a stranger in a strange city knows how good it is to know someone there who he is assured will show himself friendly.

During my stay in Rome I only had two opportunities of visiting Cavaliere Capellini's meeting; on the first occasion it was too early, on the second it was a pouring Sunday night, and soldiers do not like to get their full-dress regimentals wet, and few were present to hear the preacher's eloquent discourse. I cannot, therefore, do better than present my readers with the following description given by a correspondent of The British Weekly, in its last issue:—

> On the evening of March 14, a very interesting ceremony took place, altogether unconnected with the public festivities which celebrated King Humbert's birthday, and yet indicating a new current of conviction and emotion in the national life, which imparted to it, if not yet a national character, still a marked inclination betraying the splendid susceptibility of this attractive people towards a nobler faith and a more intelligent progress. This was a large meeting of the Cavalier Capellini's Military Evangelical Church. Mr. Piggott, the Wesleyan minister, lent his chapel for the meeting, and assisted to promote its success, as, indeed, he and his body have done for many years of Signor Capellini's labours.
> It is now fourteen years since this work began, and it has the essentially healthy and hopeful merit of being Italian work, autochthonous in its origin and conducted by an Italian gentleman, whose service in the army has acquainted him thoroughly with the habits and necessities of the men amongst whom he works, and has trained his natural talent for organisation into the finest skill for employing the time, resources, and assistance at his disposal to the greatest advantage.
> The Cavalier Capellini belongs to an Italian family of good social standing, most of whose members are devout Roman Catholics, excepting his eldest brother, a celebrated savant and Professor of Geology in the University of Bologna, who is an avowed rationalist. It was during his time of service in the army that Signor Capellini was led to renounce Roman Catholicism. His regiment was in barracks in the Abruzzi, and there one day he found some ragged leaves of the New Testament. He read them, grew deeply interested, found the colporteur, who sometimes in his rounds left Bibles and books amongst the soldiers, secured a copy of the Bible, and received from him an introduction to the late Miss Burton, a lady who took a deep interest in Italian soldiers. So assisted, he became intensely impressed with the futility of all the religious resources that were at the disposal of his comrades, and consecrated his life to preach to them the simple Gospel of God's love and Christ's life and mediation. At first there were natural obstacles in the way of his work, but the death of a dearly loved mother left him free from immediate duties, and he began at once.
> After various attempts in the north and south of Italy, he decided to make Rome his headquarters, as with its constant garrison of 2000 men the whole Italian army must, in the course of years, pass through the temporary station here. Here, therefore, he has worked for fourteen years with an ever-increasing devotion and most profitable discretion. His city work is varied by visits to the camps in the Alban Hills and elsewhere during the grand manœuvres of the autumn months. The success of his work is extraordinary, and I believe it to be chiefly due to the manliness and sound judgment which distinguish all his plans and operations.
> From six to seven hundred soldiers yearly come within the range of his influence; of these about ninety to a hundred annually enrol themselves in the membership of the Military Church. Their stay in Rome is unhappily very short, but there are members and deacons of the church in every regiment, and the praise, prayer, and reading of God's Word, which Capellini has taught them to prize, are continued in whatever station their regiment may be placed. As every Italian is obliged to serve for three years before retiring into ordinary civil life, and as the men are consequently respectable and intelligent, they offer a splendid field for such work, and carry its results back with them to their homes in every part of Italy, from many districts of which Signor Capellini receives constantly increasing accounts of steady well-doing and evangelising.
> The king was requested by members of the clerical party to interfere with the work in its earlier stages. He asked if it demoralised the soldiers, made them disloyal or insubordinate. Even its enemies were forced to admit that such was far from being the case, and so, led to make himself acquainted with this quickening influence permeating his army, the large-minded sovereign of Italy declared in its favour, and took an early opportunity of signally distinguishing Signor Capellini by conferring on him the title of Cavaliere. Indeed, loyalty, patriotism, subordination, are watchwords with the Christian Military Church, and they found utterance last Monday evening in the eloquent addresses of the men, whose speeches expressed their deep devotion to the House of Savoy, "the day-star of Italy."
> Several officers were present at the meeting, and it is characteristic of the growing spirit of toleration that, as a rule, the officers encourage the efforts of Capellini and his assistants. But of course those who are closely bound up with the clericals show much hostility, and make access to their men almost impossible, and the civilian population are not yet sufficiently roused to the benefits of freedom to take an interest in the work, and make it independent of foreign aid. No work in this country growing rapidly into a fine national life is more deserving of the generous help of other nations, and none will economise such help more honestly, and make every franc go further in positive usefulness. The Cavaliere is himself provided for by his share of patrimonial property, and devotes all he has, and all he receives, to the inevitable cost of his great mission.

I must not omit to mention the beneficent work of Mrs. Burchell and her daughters among the poor Jewish women, whom she teaches various kinds of work, gaining all the time their confidence and affection, and leading them step by step to Jesus of Nazareth, by manifesting the sympathy with human need and suffering which was so marked a feature of his holy life. POLICEMEN AT EXETER HALL.

The large gathering of members of "the Force" and their wives at Exeter Hall, on Tuesday, last week, on the occasion of the fourth annual meeting of the Christian Police Association, was in many respects a memorable one. In the interval, between the afternoon and evening meetings, earnest addresses were given by some of the men, and, as was well remarked towards the close of the evening meeting, the keynote struck by every speaker was decision for Christ —a note which, it was evident, vibrated in many a heart. Fervent prayer had been offered at the afternoon conference and previously that a rich spiritual blessing might be poured out upon this gathering from many different places of members of a body whose influence is admittedly great.

Sir Charles Warren presided in the afternoon. The report then presented stated that during the past year the work of consolidation has gone steadily forward in many districts, which, besides, have put forth fresh branches. Of these there have in the twelve months been an increase of 44, making a total of 129, an increase that speaks much for the earnest spirit which pervades the members of this still youthful association. The Queen Anne's-gate Hall Police Institute, Westminster, has proved very useful to the younger members of the force, and in some of the provinces a mission hall has been fitted up for the furtherance of this work amongst the police, with the result, already, that the morale of the men has been greatly improved. The Association has now 3166 enrolled members. In not a few cases Christian policemen are actively engaged in rescue work, and, in Hull, they have established a Home for young people, which has been instrumental in saving some from a downward course.

Rev. C. H. Spurgeon followed with an address, the single aim of which was to lead to Christ those who had not yet found Him. With the staff of strong conviction, the bruises of which he himself still felt, he sought to impress them, and the more because he was anxious as far as possible to save others such bruising as he had experienced. He begged them to do nothing contrary to their conscience or their sense of right; true godliness would bring true manliness. Heartily sympathising with the police in their arduous calling, he expressed the belief that if the public knew half what their servants had to put up with they would treat them with far greater consideration than they did. Rev. E. A. Stuart also spoke.

Mr. J. Herbert Tritton presided over the evening meeting, which was opened with prayer by Lord Radstock. Canon Fleming said he remembered hearing Sir Harry Verney speak of the time when he had an order to pick out forty of his best men as a nucleus for the police force, and that the influence of those men had lived in the force ever since. Such a gathering of the men and their wives would not have been possible in Sir Harry's day, however. The police have the good opinion of the public at large. They see all sides of life, and a great deal of a very painful side. He urged them not to allow this to harden their hearts, and was rejoiced to have much proof to the contrary. He remembered well a man who, after fifteen years' service, was selected for an important post in the Charity Organisation Society, and should never forget the feeling with which he used to report the tales of sorrow he heard. Some people say the police are not always civil, but a remark of Lord Shaftesbury was sufficient answer to that. Said he:—"I never get an uncivil thing said to me, because I always speak in a civil way." As to the subject of temperance, twenty-one years ago J. B. Gough said:—"Are you doing the best you can for Christ? Are you making the most of your influence and example for Him?" That word came home to him as a minister of the Gospel. He felt that not being an abstainer he was not making the most of his influence. Since that day a thousand facts had come before him that made him wish he had taken the pledge earlier, but not one that made him regret having done so. He begged them to use their influence in this direction, and to be out-and-out for Christ. Then would they go to their work in a Christian spirit. Dr. Arnold's prayer before he commenced those duties which left him no time to think of anything else—not even of Christ—might be helpful to them, "I am going into a busy world to-day. My eye, ear, hand will be all so busy that I cannot consciously think of Thee. Grant, O Lord, that even then all may be done as unto Thee!" He commended to them also the words on the tombstone of one of the Lawrences, as indicating the motive which should ever animate them, "Here lies one who tried to do his duty."

Major Owen Hay spoke of the similarity of difficulty and temptation experienced by the two forces, the army and the police, enabling them the better to sympathise with one another. Those trials were the loneliness, the suddenness of danger, and the uncertainty to which they were exposed. That they might be calm and confident in the face of all these, they needed to have Christ with them, to be able to say with Paul, "I am ready." Rev. F. B. Meyer, of Leicester, referring to a notice he saw in a shop window when going one morning as usual to welcome those who were coming out of gaol, "This shop will be opened under entire new management," said that doubtless applied to many whom he urged to yield themselves at once to Christ as their new Master. Then, indeed, would they realise what so much they needed, not only the power, but the love of God. John Ashworth, having picked up a drunken man, whom he had seen pitched out of a public-house, and taken him under his care, the man presently looked up at him, and said, "Be you the Jesus Christ of Rochdale?" And truly Jesus Christ was living in Rochdale, in the nature of good John Ashworth. That, too, is what we all want, that Jesus Christ should come and live with us, and keep us from sin. Rev. F. A. C. Lillingston and Mr. Charles Inglis also spoke, pleading earnestly for decision for Christ.

SOUL-WINNING AND PRAYER UNION.—Promise for April 10 (Haggai ii. 7):—"I will shake all nations, and the desire of all nations shall come: and I will fill this house with glory, saith the Lord of hosts."

BRITISH SYRIAN SCHOOLS.—In an interesting account just published of a visit to six of these school, an "association secretary" states that the scholars evinced a correct Bible knowledge of sin, salvation, and other subjects set forth in the one hundred texts which all learn, also of the life of Christ and his work. Moslems, Druses, Latins, and Greeks have also acquired a clear acquaintance with Gospel truth through the medium of these schools. The Syrian children thoroughly enjoyed the examinations, and were evidently really sorry that the holidays had come, and that for a time they must part from "their beloved teachers." The writer adds, in view of what has resulted from the labours of Mrs. Bowen Thompson, "What hath God wrought!" The secretary is Miss Poulton, 18, Homefield road, Wimbledon.

NATIVE RACES AND DRINK.

In The Pall Mall Gazette of Wednesday, last week, a conversation on this subject with Rev. J. G. Gregson is recorded. The rev. gentleman makes some statements that are most discreditable to the authorities concerned, and, by implication, to this nation, in whose name they are supposed to act. Mr. Gregson said:—

"I complain of the action taken by the Bombay Government, first in forcing grog-shops upon an unwilling people, and then in punishing those who have taken the lead in protesting against the introduction of drink into the midst of a temperate population. The Government put up to auction the right to sell drink in a district. You outbid all competitors, and the district is made over to you. You set up grog-shops wherever you think you can force a sale. You use every artifice to tempt the hitherto temperate natives to drink, and the more you demoralise and intoxicate that community the greater will be your profit, and the richer you will become. You are the revenue collector for the Government. Your grog-shops are known as the Government grog-shops, and all the misery and destitution which you produce go to the debit of the Government. Kolaba was put up for auction. The virgin district was handed over to the purchaser. The grog-shops are now open in every village in Kolaba. They were in full swing when I was there. Until we began to push the liquor trade as a means of filling the Exchequer there were no grog-shops in Kolaba. We have only to withdraw our licence and support, and the natives will make short work of the grog-shops.

"I know a Mahratta gentleman who is the heart and soul of the strike against the drink in Kolaba. He is a Hindoo, a man of high character, one to whom the very thought of strong drink is an abomination. He is at this moment supporting out of his own purse lecturers who are going from village to village urging the natives to band themselves together against the introduction of this shameful vice. His emissaries are persecuted, and the authorities have issued a proclamation threatening the natives with pains and penalties if they make any opposition to the grog-shops. Some zealous natives who picketed the grog-shops, as the American women picketed the whisky saloons in the Far West, in order to dissuade their brethren from yielding to the temptation, have been incontinently flung into gaol. That is the practical lesson we have just given our Indian fellow-subjects of our desire to promote their moral improvement. It is being done under the British flag by the British authorities; and when questions are asked about it in the House of Commons ministers make cynical answers which evade the question.

"It is appalling to witness the extent to which we have corrupted the people of India. They had vices of their own, no doubt; but alike by religion, by custom, and by nature, they were temperate. Even to this day in Kolaba if a man of high caste drinks intoxicants he is fined 100 rupees before he can take his place among his own caste. Scores of millions never tasted alcohol in any shape or form. Now all is changed. Everywhere wealthy natives drink champagne; everywhere the poorer native is tempted to drink grog. The curse is becoming universal. It is a plague which is eating out the heart of India. The good which should be the outcome of missions and education is being neutralised by the evil effects of our drinking habits and social customs among the Christianised and civilised natives. Everywhere I found the same contagious leprosy of intemperance. We found India sober. We shall leave her drunken. None of the tyrants and devastators, those scourges of God, who swept in floods of fire and steel across Hindostan, have inflicted on her so subtle, so deadly a curse as that which we have brought in the name of civilisation, and, alas! with professions of Christianity."

Towards the close of last year, Canon Ellison, chairman of the C.E.T.S., addressed a letter to the Archbishop of Canterbury, urging the necessity of putting a stop to this liquor traffic among native races under English dominion. To give increased emphasis to that letter, and set in motion the machinery by which the desired end may be attained, a meeting of an enthusiastic nature was held in Prince's Hall, Piccadilly, on Wednesday evening, last week. Eight missionary societies and thirty temperance organisations were represented.

A rousing keynote, exactly fitted to the tone of the meeting from the first to last, was struck by the hearty singing of the song, "Sons of England, strike for freedom!" and then the Bishop of London, as chairman, delivered a vigorous speech. They had, he said, started upon a work which would tax their perseverance and zeal for years and years. Just as there seemed a prospect of the human race becoming one, there had arisen the cloud of a fearful evil which threatened to undo all the good which Christian missions had accomplished for the heathen. While the drink traffic between England and the native races was unregulated, there was much truth in the assertion which had been made that it was better to carry Mohammedanism to those races than Christianity, for Mohammedanism was temperate while Christianity is intemperate.

The first resolution, affirming that the traffic in strong drink, carried on by merchants belonging to Christian nations in India, Africa, &c., is a source of wholesale demoralisation and a stumbling-block to the progress of the Gospel in those countries, was given to Archdeacon Farrar to move. The resolution, he said, is very strong, but not in the least degree too strong. The drink traffic is one by which Englishmen make millions of money; it is a traffic by which some of those engaged in it obtain coronets, and are made hereditary legislators; a traffic by which we are told, some of the distillers and retailers make the shameful profit of 700 per cent.; a traffic which cannot be put down, and can be barely restricted, because, unhappily, so many of our countrymen have become interested in its maintenance; a traffic which renders the efforts of missionaries less successful than they would otherwise be; and a traffic which is declared to be a source of wholesale demoralisation and ruin. In short, what we have done must be summed up in one sentence, namely—we have made money out of their misery, and grown rich out of their degradation.

Having recently visited India, Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., seconded the resolution, and said that the drink traffic there rested not so much with the merchants as with the Government, and as we had retained the government of India in our own hands we were able to direct that power as we pleased. Loud cries of "Shame!" arose, as Mr. Smith maintained that we had introduced drink into India—thus supporting Rev. J. G. Gregson's assertion, that we had "found India sober and shall leave her drunken."

A resolution calling for legislative enactments for the repression of the traffic was ably commended to the meeting by Sir Charles Warren, and Mr. W. S. Caine, M.P. The former gentleman was received with prolonged cheering, which was repeated as, drawing upon his experience in South Africa, he proved how unjust our laws were in connection with that country. Those laws forced drink upon the unwilling natives, and thereby the work of the missionaries was rapidly being overtaken and thwarted. Mr. Caine showed that the terms under which the sale of strong drink is allowed in India protected Europeans, and even native soldiers in our employ, but were disgracefully lax towards the natives. An English tramp in the custody of the police was protected, but there was no protection for a native child of thirteen. And, further, if the priests of the native religions stood at the doors of the grog-shops to warn their flocks not to enter they were put into prison.

The resolution was carried with acclamation, and a representative committee elected. An overflow meeting was held in St. James's Banqueting Hall.

A pamphlet on "Trafficking in Liquor with the Natives of Africa," issued by the Church Missionary Society, throws further light on the disastrous results to the native peoples, of the temptations following upon the introduction of intoxicants. Feeling their inability to resist these temptations, and awake now to their fatal consequences, they appeal, through the missionaries, to this country to put a stop to the disastrous trade in spirits too long fostered by our legislature. Shall they appeal in vain?

OPEN-AIR MISSION.

The wet weather, last Thursday evening, tended to diminish the attendance at Exeter Hall, when this Mission celebrated its thirty-fourth anniversary, but it did not damp the spirits of those within, for the meeting was a very hearty one.

After tea, Sir Douglas Fox presided. The report was voluminous, but a mere abstract was read by Mr. Kirkham, the secretary. Thanksgiving was its first note for brotherly union among the preachers, for the increased amount of labour, for souls won to Christ, and for the absence of debt. A plea for an increased income followed, as it was felt that the Mission, which enjoyed the confidence of the Christian public, did not sufficiently share its liberality.

The statistics showed how wide an area is embraced in its operations. The members number 1086. The races, fairs, and other special gatherings visited, number 794, and 1160 missions were undertaken. Over a million tracts were distributed, making a total of nearly twenty millions since the Mission was established. About 200 open-air stations were occupied in London, and the total number of hearers for the year were reckoned at about 3,000,000. And all this work cost but £1742, leaving a balance in hand of £24.

The report further dealt with the art of securing an audience, the need of adaptation, the triumphs of Divine grace, as seen in some specimen cases of conversion, the admirable work done by the Manchester City Mission at 100 wakes and feasts, "A Mission to Mourners" in the cemeteries, and other topics bearing on street preaching.

Then followed the speeches. The Chairman believed that many of the people were seeking after truth, and that if the preacher could commend himself to them they would usually listen to his message. Sir William T. Charley, the Common Sergeant, said that in the stirring times in which we live aggressive effort is more needed than ever. Rev. T. Eynon Davies (Finsbury Park Chapel) gave a singularly interesting sketch of open-air preaching, from Adam onward to the present time, and tendered some seasonable counsel to the preachers. Rev. W. Williams, of Upton Baptist Chapel, Mr. John MacGregor ("Rob Roy"), the founder of the Mission, and Rev. Z. B. Woffendale also spoke, and doubtless the preachers went back to their posts of labour cheered by these hearty and wise counsellors.

KING EDWARD RAGGED SCHOOLS.—The forty-first annual report states that between the two schools and the night schools about 900 boys and girls are connected with this Mission. Several handicrafts are taught in the different classes, and boys and girls thus become fitted to occupy useful positions in society. These are also under sound Scriptural instruction. The Bible-classes are attended by upwards of 200 elder girls and youths, many of whom have given satisfactory tokens of genuine conversion. The Gospel services, held at the mission-room in King Edward-street, Spitalfields, on Sunday morning and evening, are well attended, and very cheering is it to know that about 200 adults attend the Tuesday evening mission service. The mothers' meeting, with over 300 names on the books, benevolent society, and other agencies, are also doing much to increase the value of this East-end institution. Besides a continuous visitation of the sick and poor, during the winter upwards of 3000 articles of clothing were given to young and old, and, at Christmas, 240 families were supplied with dinner in their own homes. The secretary is Mr. Charles Montague. 4, Bedford-square, E.

THE GOSPEL for the WORLD.

UNFURLING THE FLAG IN SCOTLAND.

(BY A SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

"'More than eighteen hundred years have passed since thy Son Jesus Christ went away from this world, saying that He would come again. Before He went He commanded his disciples to go into all the world, and preach his Gospel to every creature, but thy Church has neglected her Lord's commands. Rouse thy sleeping Church, we beseech Thee. Wherewith shall we meet Thee, if we have neglected to do thy will? How shall we look Thee in the face when thy lost ones bear witness against us? Have mercy upon thy Church, and let thy Church have mercy on the lost world, for Thou hast provided a ransom."

In some such words of pathetic confession and entreaty did Mr. Hudson Taylor preface his address in St. Andrew's Hall, Glasgow, last Friday evening. They may well be taken as at once the keynote and the explanation of the brief missionary campaign now in progress in the leading centres of population throughout Scotland. I do not know the exact inner history of this latest move, but the idea was surely a divinely inspired one, and all who truly pray "thy kingdom come" may fervently hope that it will do something substantial in helping on the fulfilment of that comprehensive prayer.

The time chosen for this Scottish visit seems appropriate. Of late years there have been in these northern regions many stirrings of the dry bones of orthodoxy and nominal Christianity. Those who call themselves Christians have been finding out more than hitherto that they are "saved to save." As Mr. Campbell White expressed it at the Glasgow meeting, to which I have referred, all the redeemed ones must be servants of their Redeemer and Lord. The memorable visits of Mr. Studd and Mr. Stanley Smith, before going to China, were the beginning of one epoch in the religious life of Scotland, of which it may well be hoped this present visit of Mr. Hudson Taylor, Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, and Mr. George Clarke, is but a second and a still more fruitful chapter. Fresh from the theatre of war in far Cathay, Mr. Taylor is able to supply the most recent facts as to progress in China, and the still outstanding spiritual needs of that vast and ancient Empire. Mr. Radcliffe is wholly possessed with the spirit of foreign missions, and the fire burning hot within him shows him to be a chosen instrument of God for this work. Many a dweller in Scotland, who gratefully remembers his evangelistic zeal in past days, will rejoice that he is spared to advocate in his later years, and in his own inimitable way, the larger cause of a world-wide proclamation of saving truth. Mr. Clarke's recent and successful labours in the Gospel in Scotland mark him out as one well fitted to take part in this campaign in urging the young converts, as well as older Christians, to an adequate consecration of life and purpose.

GLASGOW.

The series of meetings began in Glasgow, the first city of Scotland, in point of population and material resources. Conferences were held in the Christian Institute, on Thursday and Friday. Your limited space will not permit of my entering into detail; it will be enough to say that various friends, both men and women, who have laboured as heralds of the everlasting Gospel at home and abroad, supplied from their own experience most interesting and encouraging facts. Their evidence proved that the Gospel of Christ is, of a truth, a Gospel for the whole world, and that God is no respecter of persons. They showed also that doors of entrance are now flung wide open in all lands, and if those who have so long sat in heathen darkness continue to do so, the responsibility will lie with a supine and ease-loving Church, and not with any outside circumstance.

The Conference culminated in a mass meeting in the great St. Andrew's Hall. Its seating capacity is immense, and, though it was only three-parts full, the gathering was not unworthy of the occasion, even from the point of numbers. Watching for a time the inflowing stream, I could not help feeling struck with the varied and representative character of the audience. There were many men and women evidently belonging to the class that possesses wealth and social distinction. Most numerous, of course, were those in "the middle ranks" of the community, but there was a sprinkling of horny-handed artisans, and not a few of those who, if appearances could be trusted, were poor enough in "warl's gear." There were mothers with babes in arms, and young men and women in abundance. It seemed a happy augury that all sorts and conditions of men should be interested enough in the evangelisation of the world to be present, to hear further about a matter that is so near the heart of Christ as the evangelisation of his heathen.

Mr. Campbell White, a hearty friend of every good work in Scotland, presided at all the meetings of the Conference. He said he hoped the result of these gatherings would be that every worker would gain fresh courage, and those who had hitherto been idlers in the vineyard would be led to ask, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" At every meeting they had observed the Scriptural order, "To the Jew first," and therefore he would call on Rev. J. Wilkinson, of Mildmay, to speak about work among the Jews.

Readers of The Christian do not need to be posted up as to the history of this Mildmay Mission, with which Mr. Wilkinson has been so closely identified. Whether the Glasgow people are equally familiar with that good work I know not; but, from the intensity of attention and interest with which the great audience followed the speaker's earnest words, I should judge that most of those present were listening to the story for the first time. Mr. Wilkinson is in spirit as much a Hebrew of the Hebrews as the Apostle Paul claimed to be, and has been manifestly anointed of God to keep before his Gentile Church the claims of the chosen race. He described in some detail the origin and the growth of the work carried on by the Mission of evangelising Jews in London, and also told how it is now spreading throughout the country and on the Continent of Europe. He strongly emphasised three certainties to-day; (1) That all Israel shall be saved; (2) That all who seek to bless Israel will themselves get a special blessing; and (3) That, when they are blessed, the Jews will be the instruments of blessing to the entire world. With respect to the distribution of Salkinson's translation of the Hebrew New Testament, Mr. Wilkinson said that Jews all over the world are delighted with it. The work of its circulation is extending all over the Continent, among other places in Pomerania, Bohemia, Austria, Hungary, and Galicia. A rabbi, near Pesth, has lately been converted through reading this New Testament. God is awakening among his ancient people such an interest in Christian truth as has not been known since the days of the Apostles. We have been praying for such a moving of the Spirit of God, said the speaker, and the answer is coming. What a rebuke to Gentile unbelief, and what an encouragement to look for the time when thousands of Jews shall be found flocking to the feet of Jesus.

Mr. Radcliffe began by relating a most touching story of the conversion of a Jewish doctor, primarily through the words of a wounded boy whom he attended professionally during the American civil war. It was found necessary to amputate the boy's limb, but he would not take chloroform, for, said he, "My Jesus will help me to bear the pain." Later on, he said, "Doctor, I love you, because my Jesus was a Jew." Mr. Radcliffe made an appeal to all for a whole-hearted surrender to the Lord Jesus Christ, and passed on to his favourite theme, "Christ's neglected heathen." Many of us, he said, pray "Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven," but we seem to think that Scotland or Great Britain composes the whole earth. We miss the great beauty of the prayer if we forget that it includes India, Africa, China—the millions of neglected heathen. Let us get rid of our selfishness and hear the words of Jesus that come to each one of us—men of business, women of fashion, young and old, rich and poor: "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." How often it is business first and God's kingdom afterwards. How often we see our Christian ladies, like oxen bending under the yoke, bowed down by tyrant fashion. What heavy burdens they carry. Let them hear the words of the Lord: "Take my yoke upon you, for it is easy, and my burden is light." Then they will be able to stand and walk erect, for Christ Himself will bear their burdens. If we go forward at the Lord's command, the walls of our Jericho will fall before us; all obstacles will be taken out of the way, and we will be ready at twenty-four hours' notice to go to India, or China, or Africa, or to stay at home—to go anywhere for Christ. Let Jesus be sole, absolute monarch in our hearts, and in our midst, and we shall then be happy in his service.

As his custom is, Mr. Hudson Taylor prayed to God before he spoke to man. The choir had just sweetly sung the hymn in which the believer is exhorted to be, "Waiting till the Lord shall come."

"How many," said Mr. Taylor in his prayer, "are not waiting. How many do not know that the Lord is coming; and how many do not even know that there is a Lord to come." Then he poured out his fervent desire in the words with which this report begins. His address was largely autobiographical and descriptive of the wonderful way in which the China Inland Mission took its rise, and has grown to its present proportions; and how greatly God has blessed its efforts to carry the light of the Gospel into the different provinces of China. From his recital it could be plainly understood that the Mission has been built up on simple confiding trust in the promises of God. He has honoured that trust in a way which might well cause reflection by many other missionary organisations that have not developed a twentieth part so swiftly, though having a twenty-fold more extended machinery. This fact has often puzzled me, and I have long since come to the conclusion that the very simplicity of the machinery, and the small dependence placed upon it by the China Inland Mission, has been one of the main causes of its phenomenal success. It was a great thing to be able to say, as Mr. Taylor could say, that in a few brief years every province throughout vast China has been visited by the Gospel messenger, and now there are resident European missionaries in many of its populous cities, besides a growing number of native churches, which are as cities set on an hill in witness-bearing for Christ. Mr. Taylor closed his rehearsal of God's faithfulness in the past by a most pathetic appeal to Scottish Christians to come to the help of the Lord against the mighty in China. Christ's dying command was once more repeated and enforced. Coming from the lips of one who himself has given so much of his life to self-denying effort in the foreign field, the appeal had a special weight.

Some earnest words to believers from Mr. George Clarke, on the duty of whole-hearted surrender, closed a meeting of great interest—one, I trust, of a cumulative series. There was no attempt made to gauge the effect of the addresses by calling for volunteers for the mission field. Probably this was wise under the circumstances. The Scotch are a proverbially cautious race, and are not given to acting on the impulse of the moment. It is well that the cost should be fully counted before such a step is taken, though here, as elsewhere, delays are dangerous. It is impossible to doubt that, with such facts before them, and such appeals ringing in their ears, there will be some, at least, out of the great throng of young people present who will lay themselves on the altar of service, to go, as Mr. Radcliffe said, "anywhere for Jesus."

From Glasgow the trio of missionary advocates proceeded to Edinburgh, where meetings were held on Saturday, Sunday, and Monday, other leading towns being also on the programme for subsequent visitation. Of these meetings I hope to write in my next.

DEVOTIONAL CONFERENCES.

The Congregational and Baptist ministers would appear to have been much moved of late in relation to spiritual life. It is manifest that, without any formal objection against the political and ecclesiastical controversies which in recent years have been occupying Nonconformist meetings, there is a growing party of Congregationalist ministers who are going in strongly for the earnest godliness which was the strength of Dissent at a former period. The Conference at Hastings last autumn was the first open expression of the new awakening. Full reports of that meeting appeared in our columns, and these were reprinted in other journals. The Conference has become memorable as one of unusual spiritual blessing.

But that which is equally remarkable is the encouragement which this Conference in Hastings gave to expect a similar time of refreshing elsewhere. A simultaneous longing for such a blessing seems to have taken possession of Congregational ministers in different parts of the country. Announcements of no less than five such conferences have come to us, which have been held since the Hastings one, and others are in contemplation. The ministers of the London Congregational Union have met, not for ordinary business, but for special prayer and exhortation, and these meetings were continued over two days. In Liverpool pastors of the same order of churches met in a like spirit, and for the same object. In Portsmouth Baptist and Congregational ministers have recently united in prolonged meetings for supplication, and for taking common counsel on matters affecting the state of the churches and their own spiritual life. Lay officers of the two orders of churches took part in one of these meetings, which are reported to have been of a very hallowed and stimulating nature. Other two conferences were held during the last two weeks in March at Brighton and Bath, and these we are able to report more fully.

BRIGHTON.

The one at Brighton was termed a "Devotional Conference on Spiritual Life and Christian Work," and was held on March 21, and two following days. The conveners were Revs. W. Crosbie, A. Foyster, W. J. Smith, and J. Turner Smith. The object was thus set forth: "United, sustained, and prayerful waiting upon God cannot but have a beneficial effect in the awakening of a truer religious life and earnestness in our midst. The fact that we feel our need of such an awakening is in itself a sign that God is about to bestow his Spirit upon us afresh, if we seek Him with all our hearts."

Although "the hallowed influence" of the Hastings Conference was spoken of as having awakened the desire for this second meeting in Sussex, the Brighton meetings were manifestly summoned for the advantage of the churches, as well as of the pastors. Laymen, moreover, took a prominent part in them. On one evening there was an open meeting of an hour and a half for friendly intercourse among members of the different churches; this was well-conducted, largely attended, and was manifestly marked by very happy effects in the way of Christian fellowship.

The first evening meeting was held in the Congregational Chapel, London-road. Mr. M. H. Hodder, of London, presided, and urged prayer to God under present hopes and solicitudes, rather than too much speaking to man. The putting away of all that hindered true religious life was not merely the exhortation of that first address, but the burden of the prayers on successive meetings. Very appropriate was the word from Habakkuk, which was enlarged upon by Mr. Marriage Wallis: "I will stand upon my watch, and will watch to see what He will say unto me, and what I shall answer when I am reproved." Mr. Evan Spicer, the chairman of the Surrey Congregational Union, also spoke, and it was at once refreshing and novel to listen to the ministers offering prayers, and the laymen uttering wise and tender words unto edification.

It was a grand gathering on the following evening in the church at Clifton-road, where Rev. William Crosbie statedly ministers. The large area and side galleries were completely filled with an expectant and earnest-looking audience of Brighton Nonconformists, and others. Prayers were again numerous, and what struck us as appropriate and often missing in such devotional gatherings, was the tender, reverent, although familiar music, which accompanied the hymns. Mr. Evan Spicer presided, and uttered some sound and judicious counsels to church members and officers relating to the discharge of their mutual obligations. Rev. Charles New, of Hastings, followed on "the Baptism of the Holy Spirit." It is scarcely fitting to report this address unless this be done in extenso. It was one of great value; remarkably comprehensive, and abounding in the exposition and practical application of Scriptural teaching. Mr. New laid stress on the fact that the clearer and fuller apprehension of the Spirit's presence and grace in this dispensation was coming upon many as a new revelation, and one of largest hope and promise. Certainly the whole effect of that interesting and impressive service was to exalt dependence on the Holy Ghost, and to strengthen faith in the great truth of his blessed power in hearts and in the churches.

This was very evident on the following evening, when the united churches met for the observance of the Lord's Supper in Union-street Chapel. The prayers and address of Rev. W. J. Smith bore evidence of this spirit of expectancy and of earnest seeking. The attendance of pastors and office-bearers was large, while the area of the chapel was full of communicants. The address of Rev. William Guest, of Tunbridge Wells, who presided, emphasised the vast importance of a clear testimony as to the reality and vicarious offering of the Lord's atoning death, and pleaded that under the constraining motive of that great act of love, and as the result of the preceding meetings, the principle of belonging to Jesus Christ might henceforth, and more markedly, sway the lives of all.

BATH.

The soft and cloudless light of a spring day rested on the city of Bath as Congregational and Baptist ministers from Wilts and Somerset assembled on the 29th ult. for a three days' Conference. A paper in The Christian on the Hastings assembly had led to the calling of this. The place of meeting was Argyle Chapel, which is classic ground of Nonconformity in the West, as being the scene of William Jay's ministry for more than sixty years. The first meeting was one of very hopeful augury. The gifted young minister of the chapel presided—Rev. T. Stephens—and struck a right note in saying that the object of the meeting would, he hoped, be personal, to make Christ more real to every pastor, and that all might reach onwards to the better understanding of the Lord's words:—"As the Father hath sent Me into the world, so send I you." Rev. William Guest, of Tunbridge Wells, gave the opening address on "Ministerial Responsibility in relation to the age." If tempted, he said, to speculate as to matters unrevealed, a voice came to him that pointed to the degradation and ruin by sin everywhere going on. Equally profitable were comparisons between the present and the past. It was as true now as in Paul's time that "destruction and misery" were in the ways of sinners; as true as in Isaiah's days that "the earth was polluted under the inhabitants thereof." Nothing could meet this state of things, or save preachers from bloodguiltiness, but intense earnestness as lovers of souls. Examples from the devotion of the Apostle, and of the most successful preachers were urged. The Spirit of God was striving with men, as at the time of the flood, and on past great epochs of history, and there was everywhere an inarticulate cry for the very realities of the Christian faith. Ritualism, rationalism, or a one-sided evangelism, with their half-truths, which might be falsehoods, did not meet this cry. What is wanted is honest confession, and to get near to the Master for present help in the gravity, and wondrous opportunities of the time. Prayers of a very high order of spiritual longing, and in melting tones, followed. It was good to be there.

At the second meeting, Rev. G. E. Thomas, Baptist minister, of Bath, took the chair, and dwelt very tersely on the frequent phrase met with in the Acts, "Full of the Holy Ghost." It was clear that this fulness as applied to different characters warned us against prescribing a special mode of religious action and life. Rev. Charles New, of Hastings, spoke on the subject, "Is Pentecostal blessing still available?" These truths, the address set forth, were clear: the gift of the Spirit, beyond all that had been experienced, was the repeated promise of the Old Testament; John the Baptist's testimony of Jesus especially bore upon this; and as Jesus drew near his death He unfolded this promise very emphatically in his valedictory discourse. The blessing came upon Apostles, but also on the Gentiles. The gift was not miracle-working, nor stopped with converting grace, nor was it diversity of tongues. It was the culmination of the work and atonement of the Lord. It must be now looked for as his gift; must be sought with preparation, prayer, and complete surrender to Christ. This last point was powerfully enlarged upon. We must be ready for all the service the Spirit might call us unto, or suffering through our witness. After Jesus at Nazareth had uttered a discourse which began with, "The Spirit of Jehovah is upon me," the people took him to the brow of the hill to cast him down headlong. There were prayers with great searchings of hearts after this address, and a conversational utterance that wisely emphasised the latter part of it.

The following morning the ministers met in goodly numbers for the third Conference. Rev. F. La Trobe, Moravian minister, of Bath, presided. The pastors met, he observed, in the name of Jesus. His kingdom began by his death. He did not build up the precious stones until He laid down Himself as the chief corner stone. So, in like manner, as his servants die to self in Him, their success would begin. We could only escape from self-consciousness, the bane of work and of the heart, by the perpetual apprehension of Christ. Rev. J. Metcalfe White, of Tisbury, read a valuable paper on "Spiritual Health," or the ideal normal condition of a true Christian life. It is impossible to convey an adequate impression of the free utterances the address evoked.

For two hours there was from one minister after another an outpouring of heart over failures, difficulties, and aspirations in relation to personal religion, and especially as that bore upon the life of the churches. How to maintain the life of God in the soul amidst the multitudinous and endless engagements of the period was a questioning appeal of a younger minister, made with deep pathos. The whole discussion, marked by a fine brotherly feeling, indicated a singularly yearning state of spiritual desire, and, so far as appeared, there was entire unanimity in the confession of the importance of maintaining the doctrine of the cross.

The third morning Conference was presided over by Rev. W. Pettman, Baptist minister, of Bath, when Rev. W. G. Morgan, of Bristol, gave an opening address on "Power for Work." The following are some of the points dwelt upon:—The more we truly know of our weakness the more we shall seek power; this may not be got in a Conference, but the impulse may; with ministers, nowadays, extraneous claims, and even preparation of sermons, are sorely allowed to hinder the getting of this soul-power; work for Christ cannot be done except by habitual reliance on Him; the loss of power should always be traced to its source; there must be total abstinence from everything that hinders; moreover, everything must be kept out of churches that will keep out the Spirit of God; often, when tempted to say "Must I?" we shall have to fall back upon the "I must" of Jesus; dispositional power may be mistaken for what is Divine; God will never give power which is prostituted to any human end; we ought to study that which is involved in "winning" a soul; the self-surrender we should aim at is an attitude rather than an act. The discussion afterwards continued on this high plane of spiritual thought, so that prayers at the close poured out thanksgiving unto God.

Besides the private meetings there were two open ones. The first was held in Percy Chapel, when Rev. E. Simon efficiently presided. Revs. W. Roberts, of Salisbury, G. Robinson, of Mere, and others spoke. The last service was a United Communion. Rev. William Guest addressed the communicants, and thus the quickening engagements were closed.

THE RAILWAY MISSION.

CONFERENCE IN EDINBURGH.

The Mission to Railway Servants is one of the youngest of our religious organisations, but it has developed so rapidly that it is now among the powerful Christianising forces of the day. In Scotland it is even more youthful than in England, being little over two years old; but there its ramifications extend from Ayr in the south (where it began), to Aberdeen in the north, and probably outside of these limits. The second Scottish Conference of the Mission was held in Edinburgh on Saturday last, and most gratifying were the tokens of progress reported from all quarters. Delegates were present from a large number of places, and, as a rule, they spoke of excellent progress in their various districts.

In the afternoon the delegates met at Carrubbers Close Mission, under the presidency of Mr. D. Spencer, the general secretary, who gave some acceptable details as to the extension of the Mission operations outside of Scotland. Eight branches, he said, have been started during the past month, and new doors are opening on every hand. Looking back to the time, fourteen years ago, when Mr. Eliot Walton was carrying on a small local effort among railway boys, in London, and considering that now branch missions have been established at some 170 places throughout the kingdom, there is abundant cause for praise to God. Thousands of men have turned to God, and many of them are actively engaged in seeking to save their fellows. At the recent annual meeting in Belfast good accounts were given of the progress of the work in the North of Ireland. One gratifying feature of the work has been the help rendered by ladies, who have enthusiastically taken it up in different places, and have been rewarded by a success greater even than that of the brethren. In a large Midland town, an effort is being started this week through the instrumentality of a lady who is inviting a number of railway servants to tea at her house, with the view of banding them together for effort among their fellows. At a recent drawing-room meeting in London, seven men spoke, six of whom owed their conversion to the efforts of ladies.

A stream of testimony followed, by the delegates from Aberdeen, Bathgate, Boness, Coatbridge, Carlisle, Edinburgh, Glasgow, Greenock, Hurlford, Perth, and other places, all of them indicating more or less of progress and manifest fruit. Among the subsequent speakers were Mr. Archibald Campbell, Glasgow; Miss Elliot Lockhart, Edinburgh; Mr. Elliot, Portobello; all of whom are earnest helpers in the work; also Mr. Stedman, a railway evangelist, Mr. Eliot Walton, and Mr. William Brown, president of the Edinburgh branch. Mr. Walton has lately been visiting different places in Scotland, and several of the delegates testified to the awakened interest that had resulted; he is holding mission services in Edinburgh throughout this week.

Over five hundred of the men and their families met at Queen-street Hall for a social tea, and a large public meeting was afterwards held under the presidency of Lord Polwarth. His Lordship expressed a very deep appreciation of the obligations under which the public lie to the railway service generally, and spoke earnestly to the men of the value of these efforts to promote their highest welfare. He gave wise counsel as to the need of their adopting temperance principles, and urged them to seek, by testimony and by a consistent life, the salvation of their fellow-employés.

Mr. Spencer again gave some statistics as to the growth of the work, referring also to projects for planting the Railway Mission on the Continent, in South Africa, India, and Australia. The circulation of The Railway Signal has been much blessed to the spiritual good of the men. Cases of conversion through reading it frequently come to light. Mr. Hugh Brown, railway director, Glasgow, moved, and Mr. White Millar, of Edinburgh, seconded the adoption of a resolution of loyal congratulation to Her Majesty on the occasion of her Jubilee. Rev. John McNeil, one of the rising pulpit luminaries of Edinburgh (once a railway servant for several years), delivered a splendidly impressive evangelistic appeal to his "old companions," as he called them. We hope to transfer his suggestive utterances to our columns in an early issue, believing that in printed form they will be of service both to evangelists and to readers generally. Altogether the proceedings of the day were full of encouragement, and an earnest of still greater things to come.

BOYS' JUBILEE PARTY.

HOME OF INDUSTRY.

The dear lads left us last week, full of hope and health, all so grateful for all that had been done for them. Many of them had been dragged up in this great wilderness, and had never known kindness before. Many told us that they had gone to church and said prayers, but the simple way of salvation was altogether new to them. We have a good hope that not a few saw their need of a Saviour, and will be a blessing in the new land.

It has indeed been a Jubilee restful party, the Gospel has been sounded out to all. Every need has been met in the outfit provided; even a guide all the way.

Our faith is strong in the Lord, that, in the great Jubilee when within the veil, no more sowing or reaping required, but blessed rest from toil, entire satisfaction, and perfect safety shall be to each one through the atoning blood, as seen in the type, Lev. xxv.

Till then we go on happy in work. The next party sails (D.V.) May 19, Sardinian, and we hope to sail with a third party later on.

DEAF AND DUMB LAND.

In a book recently published, the author, Mr. Joseph Hatton, conducts us through this wonderland, of which so little is known by the vast majority of people. Yet there are 16,000 deaf and dumb children in England, of whom, it is said, the large majority can be taught perfectly well by a special method of instruction. How this may be done is set forth in these pages, in which the whole system of instruction adopted in the Asylum for Deaf and Dumb Children is brought vividly before us.

The Asylum has two homes, the one at Old Kent-road, the other at Margate. It is in the latter that we behold the little people that constitute the inhabitants of this "Deaf and Dumb Land," and as too we hear their language, and by the author's graphic portrayal are brought face to face with the features of their silent life, we are conscious of a deeper sympathy with these afflicted ones than ever before. In this Home at Margate there are 230 inmates, while in a branch at Ramsgate there are 90 others. In the new building, which has been erected on the site of the old Home in Old Kent-road, there will be accommodation for sixty or seventy of the younger children, who will be here retained for about a year. At the office, 93, Cannon-street, the records are kept of all the inmates of this Home, where so many children receive a training which brings them out of a state of weary isolation into a land of light and promise, in which they can live and work with comfort and joy, on something like terms of equality with their more fortunate fellows. The secretary is Mr. W. H. Warwick.

Y.M.C.A. NOTES.

Sunderland.—The report presented at the annual meeting of this association, held last week, states that the number of members and associates is 584, an increase of 110 on the previous year.

New Ross, Ireland.—A most successful meeting was held here on Monday week, when Mr. Robert McCann, travelling secretary, Ireland, and Mr. Hind Smith addressed the meeting, with the view of enlisting the sympathy of the public on behalf of the association, and of extending its usefulness.

Lincoln.—Over a hundred card-sellers and shoe-blacks who attended the late races were entertained to a free supper. At the close of the meeting a copy of St. John's Gospel was presented to each. Some thousands of tracts have been given away during the races by Mr. P. Wallis and members of the Association.

City of London—At a meeting in the Lecture Hall of this Association, at the Metal Exchange, Leadenhall-street, Mr. Hughman (the secretary), after speaking of the general objects of this effort on behalf of young men, said daily prayer-meetings are held in different parts of the city, one of these being in the vestry of St. Peter's, Cornhill, another at Finsbury Chapel. It is hoped also to establish similar meetings in Mincing-lane or Mark-lane. One of the prominent objects also is mission work amongst the poor. In the classes for lads in Whitechapel a good work is being done, and in Lambeth, on Friday evenings, a Service of Song is held, attended by some 400 persons. At Bermondsey and Limehouse, also, operations are successfully carried on. In the Mission Hall at Bermondsey, for which the Association is responsible, there are meetings conducted by soldiers, policemen, and members of the fire brigade. Canon Scott, in the course of his address, on the Character of David, pointed out the importance of all work, however humble, being done in a Christian spirit.

Hampstead.—The annual meeting of this Branch was held in the new building, Willoughby-road, on Tuesday evening last week. There was a large attendance, with Mr. H. Matheson in the chair. Since the new rooms were opened in October last, ninety-eight young men have joined the association—a fact which substantially proves that the premises were required; this number is being steadily augmented every week. The attendances at the Sunday afternoon Bible-class have increased to an average of about forty. Much blessing has been experienced in the tract distributing in connection with this class. The White Cross Society, the open-air services on the Heath, and other branches of the work, are greatly blessed. The Chairman said that everything done in connection with the Association was in subordination to the great work of saving young men, and the extension of the kingdom of our Lord and Saviour. He heartily rejoiced in the success which is attending the Association in its new premises. Mr. George Williams, in his usual genial, happy, and hearty style, and as "a young man yet," exhorted his hearers to be strong for Christ. They could maintain their strength only by nourishing their hearts upon the Word—the pure Word of God. Revs. Marmaduke Washington and Newman Hall followed with short addresses, which were greatly appreciated.

Shoreditch.—The annual meeting of this association was held on Thursday evening last, and its first report was of a very satisfactory character. There are nearly one hundred and fifty members and associates. Bible and educational classes are well attended, and a very extensive programme, including evangelistic work of various kinds, is contemplated as soon as the building, now occupied, has been suitably adapted. In the absence of Mr. George Williams, through the illness of his brother, the chair was occupied by Mr. Robert Dummett, who pointed out that in the study of Holy Scripture young men would find the best possible safeguard against the temptations by which they are surrounded, and how Christ Himself, the great Teacher, relied upon Scripture, not only in his replies to the temptations of Satan, but on many other occasions. Rev. T. E. Davies said the young men of to-day are the trustees of the future, and urged the cultivation of manliness, in the noble and Christian sense of that word. The conscience, as well as the body and the mind, needs to be cultivated. The highest type of man is the Christian, and the highest form of manliness is godliness. He was thankful for the earnest Christian spirit that prevailed amongst them, and begged them to stick to the grand old Book of their fathers and mothers, and to be dogmatic in defence of the faith of the Bible. Rev. Septimus Buss also spoke, pointing out the advantages to young men of such Associations

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait of the late Earl Cairns, with sketch by the author of "Brief Memoirs of the First Earl Cairns."

The other day, in Wiltshire, a farm labourer who took three eggs, valued at twopence farthing, was sent to gaol for a fortnight, although it was alleged that the food was for a sick and dying wife. The same newspaper which records this instance of what the Apostle James terms "judgment without mercy," gives an account of the case of a solicitor, in the same county, found guilty of fraudulently appropriating £3214, who was let off with nine months' imprisonment. It is difficult to arrive at the relationship between these sentences; surely even a country magistrate ought to have been able to find extenuating circumstances in the labourer's unselfish transgression.

A provincial contemporary, referring to a recent meeting in London to protest against the sweating system, says, with much force, that the question is by no means a narrow one of trade interests, and that the clothes-wearer, as well as the clothes-maker, is entitled to say a word upon it. We have from time to time expressed strong opinions with regard to the matter, looked at from the point of view of the unfortunate workpeople. The wretched starvation wages paid by the middlemen are the cause of a terrible amount of suffering and vice. To judge from modern revelations, it is not by any means in London alone that better-class tailors give out their work to middle-men and sweaters. The cry comes from Dublin, and other large cities, that sweating is the rule rather than the exception, and that the customer who pays high prices runs, in many cases, an equal risk with the patron of the slop-shop of "sharing his coat with typhus fever." This is not as it should be, and, perhaps a little inquiry on the part of those who purchase clothing, might be of benefit to those who spend their lives in making it.

A shadow ever follows upon light. There is now a Roman Catholic Bishop of Congo Land whose headquarters, it is said, will be at Loango, where a number of priests and some "Sisters of St. Joseph" will shortly open schools. Probably this fact will stimulate to even greater activity the Protestant missionaries already working with such remarkable success on the Lower and the Upper Congo. The land offers a wonderful field for Gospel triumph, and it must not be left in any sense to the "blind leaders of the blind."

The British Weekly lately quoted, from the official return published by the Propaganda, some unpleasant figures with regard to Romanism in India, from which it appears that Rome now has in India 2677 chapels, 940 European missionaries, 150 natives missionaries, 1566 schools, and that the total number of Romanists is nearly a million and a quarter. This result of three centuries of labour, amid a population of about two hundred and sixty millions, our contemporary seems to consider somewhat small, but surely the figures are lamentably large in the light of Rome's evil teachings. The spread of Romanism in India means simply the substitution of one idolatry for another; the replacing of one form of priestcraft by another equally dense and degrading.

Now that attention is being directed in so many unpleasant ways to Ireland, it is gratifying to record the success of much unsectarian Christian work in the sister island. One of the efforts in Dublin, the "Free Breakfasts for the Poor," at the Christian Union-buildings, continues to reach every Sabbath morning nearly 600 hungry people, and, providing these with a much-needed morning meal, also places within their reach the Bread of Life. The services at these breakfasts are earnestly joined in by hundreds who would resent anything like sectarianism, and in many cases the simple preaching of the Gospel of Christ has been powerful unto salvation.

The necessity for Christian effort in the direction of our workhouses, not merely upon the admirable lines described by Lady Brabazon in recent issues of THE CHRISTIAN, but in purely spiritual work, is very evident when it is remembered what in many cases the workhouse really is, and that in London one person in every five dies in the workhouse or the hospital. In too many instances the poor go to the workhouse only to die. Have we hitherto given sufficient attention to this field ready for the reaper's sickle?

Our esteemed friend, Dr. G. F. Pentecost, of Brooklyn, one of whose Gospel narratives we give in this issue, is now hard at work in the evangelistic field. At a ministerial meeting held in connection with the resignation of his pastorate, his fellow ministers cordially passed several resolutions expressing the high esteem in which he is held, their deep regret at his leaving the pastoral ranks, and their heartiest commendations in view of his work as an evangelist. We observe that his opening campaign at Cleveland, Ohio, is awakening much interest, and bids fair to be spiritually fruitful. We believe it is Dr. Pentecost's intention to visit Great Britain this summer.

A correspondent writes to The Christian Leader:—

> I have just been reading that a citizen of Milan put into his window a Bible printed in large type, so that passers-by might read therein, and that every day be turned over a leaf. Thus many read the Book and so continued its study from day to day. But one morning there was some commotion outside, and on inquiring the cause of it the good man was informed that he had not turned the leaf!

The writer then suggests the establishment of "Street Bibles," posters nicely printed, bearing a complete portion of the Scripture, to be enclosed in a case with glass front, and the Scripture to be changed from day to day. How many church notice boards might thus be utilised to proclaim the Gospel, and thus appeal to the heart and conscience. The public will read anything which is brought distinctly before their notice. Why not give them the Word of God? The Bible Society could render excellent service in preparing such a Bible.

A very strange and striking incident comes to us from Liverpool. Before a Diocesan Inspector took leave of a school, situated in a very poor district, after examination, he sought a few minutes' chat with the children. One of the things he asked was, Which of the ten commandments do you consider the hardest to keep? The answer seemed to be unanimous—the fifth. Thinking there was some misunderstanding, he asked them again. "The one about honouring the father and mother," was the reply. Is it not awful that the greatest stumbling-blocks in the way of these poor children should be their own parents? But what an encouragement to the Ragged School teacher!

We believe that there is no work which yields a richer spiritual harvest than that among young men, but it is refreshing to read recent testimony as to its truth. Rev. Alexander Ramsey (of Coatbridge) said at a recent Conference, that all the younger men in his Session graduated in the Y.M.C.A., and that the best men who have entered the pulpit during the last ten years trace the best of their qualifications to the same source.

At last it would appear that Free Trade has reached its limit. Mr. Arnold White draws attention to a question which is daily attracting greater attention—Free Trade in Paupers, as a matter of imperial importance. Whilst Mr. White and others, at a great expenditure of time and money, are organising colonisation, our shores are being invaded by hundreds and thousands who in the East-end of the Metropolis grievously aggravate the normal misery.

The attention of Dr. Hermann Adler has been aroused to the question. He writes:—"The extension of the social evil to my community may be directly traced to the overstocked labour market, and to the Russian persecutions continuing to this day, which cause thousands of Jewish girls to arrive at these shores without any means of subsistence." The philanthropist and the statesman alike have an interest in this sorrowful condition of things, and its evil results to our insular population.

We have just received the Special Annual Number of Regions Beyond. It is sometimes thought that those who addict themselves to the study of Prophecy are unpractical, and do little other work. It is indeed astonishing that such books as "The Approaching End of the Age," and "Light for the Last Days," which many people not half so busy as Mr. and Mrs. Grattan Guinness say they have not time even to read, should be written by persons who have also such a manifold work on hand as is described in this Regions Beyond. Those who feel they owe a debt to Mr. Guinness for his recent brilliant Scriptural and historic Lectures on Romanism and Prophecy, have an admirable opportunity of discharging it by helping the East London Institute for Home and Foreign Missions.

We hope none of our readers will pass over the eloquent and valuable missionary sermon by the late Dr. Harris, who was Principal of Cheshunt College, a truly spiritual as well as highly intellectual man, one of the last of that glorious line of preachers which died out with James Parsons, of York, and John Angell James, of Birmingham.

France has won an unenviable distinction by its contempt of Christianity. No doubt this is partly due to Romanism, which, by its own corruption, has caused infidelity, in a great measure, to supersede it. M. Lecomte de Lisle, who was last week (says the Paris correspondent of The Daily Telegraph), received into the Académie Française, "professes to look upon life as a mere unwelcome episode that interrupts the rest from which we are called into being and the repose to which we shall return." He "lauded the Pagan writers, but passed over with supercilious contempt all allusion to another era." M. Alexandre Dumas, who occupied the chair, "pointedly filled up the gap."

In the midst of the Orphic and Vedic poems, a little book—the contents of which would not take up as much space as a song of the Iliad or the Ramagana—was seen to fall from heaven. This little book related to men the most marvellous story which they had ever heard, and laid before them the purest, most intelligible, most consoling, and beneficial philosophy ever proclaimed on earth. Humanity suddenly felt that it had a new soul called forth by certain rhapsodists who had come from the little country of Judæa, reciting and propagating throughout the world their poem, which they declared to be divine, with so much conviction and enthusiasm that they suffered themselves to be crucified or thrown to wild animals rather than recant one word of it. The religious poems of antiquity then disappeared, if not from the memory, at least from the conscience of mankind, just as the stars, whose light is but for the night, vanish before the first ray of the sun.

Such a testimony from the popular French novelist, and the applause with which it was received, shows that atheism has not wholly taken possession of the literary men of France, and suggests that the Gospel, which is the power of God unto salvation, may be so presented as to be as acceptable to the most highly cultivated intellect, as our countryman Mr. McAll and his helpers have made it to the common people.

With reference to a note in our issue of March 24, Sir Charles S. King writes us from Ulster:

Few indeed, I firmly believe, of the Protestants of Ireland, would endorse Dr. McGee's views on Home Rule in your issue of March 17, and the very suggestion in your columns of there being a probability of a majority of British Protestants in favour of yielding to the clamour of priests and mercenary "patriots" will cast a sombre shadow around the fireside of many a rural manse, and many a lone farmhouse, throughout the length and breadth of this island.

We are sorry to find from The Missionary Herald that "the present financial position of the Baptist Missionary Society is grave in the extreme, and only a large and widespread increase in the receipts can avert a heavy and distressing debt." No Society is better entitled to support. The extent of its work abroad, and the monetary depression at home, create an anxious problem for faith, which must be taken to the Lord of missions. On the other hand, it is pleasant to read that the income of the American Board of Missions is advancing. The increase in one month (February) over the corresponding month of last year was 4000 dollars.

THE CALEDONIAN UNION.—This Union has been formed for the promotion of the moral and spiritual welfare of the Highlanders in London. Amongst those at its head are Hon. A. F. Kinnaird, Mr. Hugh M. Matheson, Dr. Dykes, Dr. Edmond, and Rev. Donald Macleod. Rev. Wm. Ross, of Cowcaddens, Glasgow, will conduct a service in Gaelic on Good Friday, at 11 a.m.; he will also conduct a Gaelic and English Mission in Whitfield Presbyterian Church .Drury lane .from April 7 to 13.

JESUS AND THE RESURRECTION.

"Go quickly, and tell his disciples that He is risen from the dead."—MATT. xxviii. 7.

The resurrection of our Lord Jesus Christ from the dead is the central fact of the Gospel history, and on its truth or falsehood everything stands or falls. If Christ be not risen, then the entire Christian system is founded upon a falsehood—we are in our sins, have no Saviour, and no salvation. But, if Christ be risen, then Christianity is builded on a fact, and we have a Divine Saviour, and an eternal salvation.

First.—Resurrection pre-supposes death.

(1) Resurrection is an impossibility if there be no dead to raise, therefore, when we speak of the resurrection of the Lord, we infer that He had been crucified, dead, and buried. The Jews to this day admit that He was put to death.

Jesus died.

They saw that He was dead already. John xix. 33.

To make assurance doubly sure—

One of the soldiers with a spear pierced his side. John xix. 34.

Pilate marvelled if He were already dead...when he knew it of the centurion. (The officer who was appointed to superintend the crucifixion certified to his superior that the condemned One was dead.) Mark xv. 44, 45.

The chief priests and Pharisees came together unto Pilate, saying, Sir, we remember that that deceiver said, while He was yet alive. Matt. xxvii. 62, 63.

It is evident they were satisfied that He was really dead.

Being dead, He was buried.

And laid Him in a sepulchre. Mark xv. 46.

In the garden a new sepulchre...there laid they Jesus. John xix. 41, 42.

These are the facts. What do the facts mean?

The death of Christ was not the death of an ordinary man, nor was it an ordinary death. It was the death of the Son of God, and his death was a sacrifice for sins, a penal death, a propitiation.

He was cut off out of the land of the living: for the transgression of my people was He stricken. Isa. liii. 8.

In that He died, He died unto sin. Rom. vi. 10.

Who his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree. 1 Pet. ii. 24.

Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that He might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh. 1 Pet. iii. 18.

Christ died for our sins. 1 Cor. xv. 3.

Second.—Christ was raised from the dead.

The resurrection was the work of God the Father.

Whom God hath raised up. Acts ii. 24.

Whom God raised from the dead. Acts iv. 10.

Him that raised up Jesus from the dead. Rom. viii. 11.

A messenger from heaven announced the fact.

And the angel answered, and said unto the women, Fear not ye: for I know that ye seek Jesus, which was crucified. He is not here: for He is risen, as He said. Come, see the place where the Lord lay. Matt. xxviii. 5, 6.

The resurrection was abundantly attested.

He showed Himself alive after his Passion, by many infallible proofs, being seen of them forty days, and speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God. Acts i. 3.

He showed Himself alive eleven times between his resurrection and his ascension.

To Mary Magdalen. John xx. 14.

To Mary Magdalen, and the other Mary. Matt. xxviii. 9.

No fact in history, sacred or profane, is more infallibly attested than that Jesus Christ was raised again from the dead.

These are the facts, what do the facts mean? They mean—

(1) That Jesus is proved to be the Son of God.

Declared to be the Son of God, with power, according to the spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead. Rom. i. 4.

(2) That we have an assurance of immortality.

We see in our risen Lord a man alive after death.

Because I live, ye shall live also. John xiv. 19.

He hath brought life and immortality to light. 2 Tim. i. 10.

If my immortal Saviour lives,
Then my immortal life is sure.

(3) That we have a living Saviour.

I am the Living One; and I was dead, and behold I am alive for evermore (R.V.). Rev. i. 18.

He ever liveth to make intercession. Heb. vii. 25.

(4) That the justification of believers in Christ Jesus is an eternal certainty.

Who was delivered for our offences, and was raised again for our justification. Rom. iv. 25.

Who shall lay anything to the charge of God's elect? It is God that justifieth. Who is He that condemneth? It is Christ that died, yea rather, that is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God, who also maketh intercession for us. Rom. viii. 33, 34.

(5) That we have a title to our inheritance.

The God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Christ from the dead, to an inheritance... reserved in heaven. 1 Pet. i. 3, 4.

If children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ. Rom. viii. 17.

(6) That we have union with Christ, and power for service.

Wherefore, my brethren, ye also are become dead to the law by the body of Christ; that ye should be married to another, even to Him who is raised from the dead, that we should bring forth fruit unto God. Rom. vii. 4.

(7) That we have victory over death and the grave.

But if the Spirit of Him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, He that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you. Rom. viii. 11.

But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the firstfruits of them that slept. For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead. For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive. 1 Cor. xv. 20—22.

If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God. Set your affection on things above, not on things on the earth. For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with Him in glory. Col. iii. 1—4.

Jesus said, I am the resurrection and the life: he that believeth in Me, though he were dead, yet shall he live. And whosoever liveth and believeth in Me shall never die. Believest thou this? John xi. 25, 26.

TO OUR READERS.—SECOND LIST.

THERE are somewhere about five thousand English-speaking missionaries in the world, and it is our great desire that every one of them should have the advantage of receiving The Christian regularly. For many years some of these have been on our own free list. One friend of missions instructed us to supply fifty Missionaries; and others a smaller number, direct from the Office. Many of our subscribers, after perusing their weekly copy, address it to some worker in the mission-field, with whom they are personally acquainted, or with whose address we have supplied them.

Letters have reached us again and again from Missionaries who have thus received The Christian, expressing their warm thanks, and telling how their hearts have been refreshed and cheered by its contents. An aged returned Missionary, connected with one of the leading Societies, was in the habit of posting his copy to a native English-speaking pastor on the East Coast of Africa, a man of considerable natural ability, who was thus kept abreast of the spiritual teachings and activities represented in the Paper. As in the future, native agency will be an increasingly important element in Missions, it is very desirable that native Christians who understand English should have the opportunity of being similarly instructed.

In our Register of English-speaking missionaries to whom The Christian is regularly posted, there are:—

66 Church Missionary Society.
75 London Missionary Society.
48 Wesleyan Missionary Society.
20 Baptist Missionary Society.
28 Moravian Missionary Society.
42 American Methodist Episcopal.
50 China Inland Mission.
14 Presbyterian.
76 Miscellaneous.

No doubt many more copies are sent out by our subscribers than we are aware of. We shall be greatly helped if all who are thus forwarding the Paper abroad will oblige us with the names and full addresses of those to whom they are sending it, in order that we may enter the details in our Register, and thus avoid duplication.

We append the names and addresses of the seventy-five Missionaries of the London Missionary Society, with the initials of the friends who are sending them The Christian. We shall follow on, week by week, with the names of the Missionaries on our Register, connected with other Societies, until the list is exhausted.

Although we are continually adding Foreign Missionaries to our free list, it is impossible for us to carry out our desire to send The Christian to each of the five thousand, without the generous co-operation of our readers. But with the recollection of the hearty and grateful appreciation of the benefit, expressed to us personally as well as by letter, from brethren labouring, some in Europe, and others in the most distant and isolated parts of the world, we cannot but believe that our readers will cordially unite with us in conferring this benefit upon the various workers in the mission field throughout the world.

BLESSING AT NEWPORT, MON.

Prayer was asked, in The Christian, for a blessing on a Commemorative Convention, to be held here on the 25th ult. We desire now to offer praise for the manifest answer vouchsafed.

The Committee of the Young Men's Christian Association kindly granted the use of their hall; and its president, J. F. Fawkner, Esq., took a prominent part in the proceedings.

Our brethren and sisters gathered together in large numbers, so that nearly, or quite, all the various sections of the church of Christ in the town were represented.

Cherished memories of the wondrous blessing in 1871 afforded a theme for grateful praise, as the larger number of those present had themselves been "partakers of the benefit," and recalled to mind the deeply interesting features of the Mission Services held at St. Paul's sixteen years ago, by the venerated Robert Aitken.

The pressure of a felt need was not, however, forgotten. God's people in Newport are longing for a further manifestation of the power of the Holy Ghost. "Wilt Thou not revive us again, that thy people may rejoice in Thee?" expressed the earnest desire of their hearts. The blessed work of 1871 has gone on in our midst unceasingly to the present day; but there is a cry on all hands for a mightier work of the Spirit than has of late been experienced. We want to see more evident signs of thorough consecration amongst believers, and the ingathering of souls to Christ. J. T. W.

BRAZIL.—One of the richest planters in the province of Rio de Janeiro has decided to liberate his three thousand slaves and to establish them on his own plantation.

ROMANISM AND PROPHECY.

An excellent examination took place on the evening of March 29 on the recent lectures of Mr. Grattan Guinness. The competitors were divided into the following sections:—

(1) General students;

(2) Members of the Civil Service Prayer Union;

(3) Missionaries of the London City Mission;

(4) The Readers of the Church of England Society.

SUNDAY LABOUR.—The Bulletin Dominical records many hopeful signs of a growing regard of Sabbath rest on the Continent. In Stuttgart 600 shopkeepers have engaged to close their shops on Sunday. In Carlsruhe, a second distribution of letters has been suppressed. In Alsace Lorraine public-houses are legally closed till noon, &c.

NOON-DAY PRAYER MEETING.

ROUND THE WORLD.

At the Aldersgate noon prayer meeting on Tuesday, last week, Mr. E. Trotter, who left this country about twelve months ago, and has since voyaged round the world, gave an account of the wonderful way in which the Lord blessed his work in various places that is full of encouragement for those who would witness for Christ, wherever they are. Both going out and coming home the voyage was singularly free from storm. Though the captain was at first opposed to anything like evangelistic work, yet he gave his consent to meetings being held, and some blessed times they had, especially in the evening, when the sailors and officers would come round and listen to the Gospel story. One result of this was seen the next day after arrival at Auckland, New Zealand, for at the noon prayer meeting, held in the Y.M.C.A. room, a young man who, though in his berth at the time, had heard the address, came up and said, "I heard you speaking the other evening." He was deeply anxious, but shortly after gave himself unreservedly to Christ, and worked heartily with the Christians in the town. Curiously enough, it was afterwards discovered that Mr. Waldegrave, Lord Radcliffe's son, had previously been with the father of this young man, a colonel of a regiment in India, and also had made the acquaintance of his mother and sister at Malta, and that at the very time they were anxiously praying for his salvation, he had come out on the Lord's side. A wonderful work of conversion was going on at Auckland. The Lord is blessing Mr. Fell's labours at the Sailors' Rest, where large meetings were held day after day, and at their close between sixty and seventy men united in praising God for what He had done for them. The work of blessing spread over the town; the Y.M.C.A. meetings held in the middle of the day, and continued for a fortnight, were attended by upwards of one hundred business men. In other parts of the island that were visited the Lord's work seemed to open up in a wonderful way. Two Anglican missionaries had before been preaching all through the island, and found the people were hungering for the Gospel, ready to receive the living Christ.

In Australia, Mr. Trotter had the pleasure of meeting Dr. Guinness. The Y.M.C.A. work at Melbourne and other towns is carried on with great vigour.

A remarkable illustration of the way in which workers widely separated from each other were yet linked together, was supplied in the fact that Mr. Edwin Bainbridge, who lost his life through the volcanic explosion which accompanied the earthquake in New Zealand last year,* left behind him, in the diary found in the ruins of the building, a statement showing that he had attended the meetings already spoken of at Auckland, and had realised great blessing to his own soul. On that most awful night he called together those who were in the house in which he was staying, and read to them the story of the dying thief on the cross, pointing them to Jesus, who is willing to save all who look to Him. His last words were, "Thank God, his strength is sufficient for me."

THE McALL MISSION.

On Thursday Rev. R. W. McAll gave some account of the progress of the Mission in France, with which his name is so closely associated. There are, he said, ninety-nine stations in fifty-six cities and towns of France. In several of the Departments there is as yet, however, no representative of Protestant truth. For the preaching of the Gospel of Christ the door is now open wide in every part of France. Humanly speaking, there is no obstacle except the want of funds for the planting of stations all over France and in her colonies. Though there is great hardness of heart, and the consciences of the people seem for the most part to be in a state of slumber, yet wherever we have been able to go, faithfully and earnestly proclaiming the Gospel, we have found a work to do for Christ. It would be a grand thing, indeed, if we could overspread that fair land with the knowledge of the glad tidings of salvation. We have been cheered by many tokens of the Divine Spirit working with us, in many turned from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God. Though we have not been able during the past year to enlarge our boundaries, by opening fresh stations, yet there has been a considerable increase in the attendance at the various meetings, both those for adults, and children and young people. In Paris this increase has numbered over 40,000, and, including the Provinces, to between eighty and ninety thousand, while the total attendance, at the different meetings, has been over a million. When it is remembered how infidelity has spread amongst the people, and that we go to them preaching the simple Gospel of Christ and Him crucified, there is indeed much cause for thankfulness.

But let us go now to Creil, a manufacturing town with about 5000 or 6000 inhabitants, some thirty miles from Paris, on the Great Northern Railway. Here, in one of the manufactories, amongst the great body of French and Flemish workmen, there are three or four Englishmen, who with their wives and families, in the midst of that dark and neglected town, are proving themselves true followers of the Lord Jesus Christ, and that they have the Saviour's love in their hearts. They felt, on looking around on their fellow-workmen, as if they could do nothing — they could not even speak in French. At last it occurred to them to ask that a missionary might be sent from the McAll Mission in Paris, to found a station in connection with the works. Permission having been obtained from the firm, a weekly meeting has ever since been held in the large dining-hall, with great encouragement and many tokens of the Holy Spirit's presence.

The anniversary was a delightful meeting. The large hall was filled with men (many of them in their blouses), their wives and children. They joined heartily in the singing of the hymns. Those few families of English workmen got earnestly to work amongst their French brethren. It was a real evangelical alliance. The Scotch Presbyterian was appointed to the post of honour at the door, and was busy in showing the people to their seats, giving them books, and pointing out the hymns to be sung. The Congregationalist sang a solo—one of those Gospel hymns so familiar to us. The Baptist presented to one of the French workmen a good large Bible. This man, before those meetings commenced, was totally ignorant of the Scriptures, but now, when for the first time he was in possession of a book which had become to him the book for his heart and life, there was a light on his face which spoke plainly of what it was to him. The Englishman tried to speak to him, but somehow the French words he used seemed to turn into English on his lips. But he was trying to tell the man that the Bible he was handing to him was the greatest treasure he could have in the world. And in the gleam of sacred light on the Frenchman's countenance, as to the meaning of which we can never be deceived, we got a glimpse of his heart, the language of which translated into English would be:—

> Holy Bible, Book Divine,
> Precious treasure, thou art mine.

In this spirit he took it home, to be his own precious book, for the comfort and teaching of himself and family. To witness such a scene as that, to see the kindling of the light of the Divine Spirit on the countenance of numbers of Frenchmen, was compensation, indeed, for any sacrifice or self-denial in leaving work and friends in England fifteen years ago to commence the Mission in France, which already had been so wonderfully blessed. Mr. McAll, in conclusion, warmly acknowledged the work that is being carried on by Mr. Smetham Lee in connection with the Y.M.C.A. in Paris.

M. Ruben Saillens, remarking that it seemed a shame to neglect to enter in at the open door for the preaching of the Gospel to be found in every part of France at the present time, spoke of the work of the Mission in Corsica. In this island, with its 260,000 people, there are two representatives of the Gospel, in the persons of the two agents of the McAll Mission. He spoke also of a work carried on in the very centre of Paris, in the Boulevard Sebastopol. Here there is a meeting every Thursday of those who almost entirely have come out from Roman Catholicism and infidelity. And on an evening in the middle of Lent, an evening usually given up to folly, a kind of revival of the Carnival, the young men and women who were in the habit of assembling there, provided a religious treat for their friends. They formed a choir, and learned some hymns; they secured the attendance of two ministers; and, in response to their invitation, the room was filled with those who, in the very midst of so much irreligion and infidelity, were glad to come to listen to the singing of the sacred hymns, and to the telling of the sweet old Gospel story.

REVIVAL IN NORTH WALES.

Mr. Radcliffe sends us a copy of The Carnarvon and Denbigh Herald, which contains an account of a wonderful work of revival which has been going on in Festiniog. An active worker in the movement has been Mr. J. B. Allanson, solicitor, Carnarvon, who invited Mr. Radcliffe, and Mr. Meyer (of Leicester), to hold meetings in the Guildhall, which he had himself taken for the purpose. These brethren were greatly rejoiced at the abundant way in which the Lord had used Mr. Allanson (who was himself only converted a year ago) in the conversion of his fellow citizens. He has been working in connection with the local Salvation Army corps, of which he is treasurer.

The correspondent of The Herald says:—"The whole place is changed. In the dinner hour now all you hear is the singing of hymns, which are taken up in one quarry after the other, the sounds of praise answering each to the other as, at quarry after quarry, the noon prayer-meetings are commenced by the singing of one of our grand old hymns. In the working places, and in the streets, none of the oaths and cursing which used to be so prevalent can now be heard. Talk about revivals and moral reforms; such a thing is to be seen at Festiniog now-a-days as has scarcely ever been heard of, certainly never witnessed to the extent we now see it! Our only trouble is that the change has been so rapid; but although rapid it has been thorough, and the men who have been converted at the Army meetings are red-hot missionaries to their fellows, sticking at nothing in their efforts to spread the knowledge of the good they themselves have received, and to win fresh converts. The publicans' trade is suffering seriously in Festiniog. It is astonishing the changes which have come over the habits of the people, especially the young men, and those who, formerly, were the worst classes of the population. Even the publicans, whose business is so injured, have not a word to say against the Army. Either from policy or conviction they are most civil to the officers."

In a communication to The War Cry, from Mr. Allanson, describing a particular meeting, he says, "Such a descent of the Holy Ghost has never been seen before in Festiniog, and not for many, many years in any part of Wales, and almost all we could say was, 'Glory be to God!' So deeply had God's presence made itself felt in our hearts, that we could scarcely realise that we had any part in this wonderful meeting."

RAMSGATE.—The report for 1886 of the St. Luke's Invalid and Convalescent Home gives an account of the work done, and shows the spiritual blessing, which has marked it in past years, to be still most cheering to the workers. During the year 420 inmates have availed themselves of its benefits; many of these were workers requiring rest, and others were invalids who needed much care. Mrs. Hathaway (née Hosking) has continued her daily personal supervision, and active interest and teaching, as before her marriage; her husband also helps in its work.

ANGLO-INDIAN EVANGELISATION.

The aim of this Society is to minister to the spiritual necessities of those of our fellow-countrymen who, living in remote parts of our vast Indian Empire, and in many cases entirely cut off from religious influences, verily live in a dry and barren land. Few in this country, even of those who are most earnest in regard to missionary effort, realise the great need of thousands of our own people. At the annual meeting of the above Society at Exeter Hall, on Monday, last week, this point was pressed home by all the speakers.

Rev. J. H. Fordyce, the secretary, in speaking upon the report, said there has been an increase in the number of agents, who, each with districts of several hundred miles in extent, beginning in Southern India, stretch right away to Assam in the east, and Scinde in the west. Already there have been precious fruits, indicating that the Holy Spirit is working with them. Among the planters of Assam there is urgent need for evangelistic effort. In view of the fact that so many Englishmen are entirely cut off from the means of grace, are, indeed, as "sheep without a shepherd," the importance of the Society's work is becoming more generally recognised.

The Chairman (Mr. S. Smith, M.P.) bore testimony from his own knowledge to the value of this work. There are many small and scattered stations in which there is no regular ministry, and here, but for the visits of the Society's agents, there is real danger lest our countrymen should lapse into Paganism. This danger is intensified when it is remembered how great is the influence upon the natives of Christian character. It is by the power of righteousness more than prestige that we hold India. The natives know that our rule is more just than has been that of their own princes. Such men as the Lawrences and the Havelocks are the very salt of our Indian Administration. But the conduct of some of our officials in that country is not at all of a kind to strengthen our position. Intemperance and other forms of evil are increasing to a terrible extent, and, unless steps are taken to prevent it, India in the course of another century will be devastated thereby. The work done by the Society's agents is therefore of the utmost value, for there can be no more powerful instrumentality than the examples of men who, living in the fear of God, seek the well-being of the natives. If this were more generally understood the Society would receive far greater support than it does.

Lieut.-Gen. Brownlow endorsed the claims of the Society to support as a powerful auxiliary to the extension of Christ's kingdom in India. Every missionary knew that the open and unblushing neglect of God's service and commandments by so many of our people is one of the greatest hindrances to the spread of the Gospel; while the godly life of a Christian layman will do more to recommend the Christian religion to the natives than the preaching of the missionary. Englishmen are narrowly watched, and the eloquence of a Christlike life cannot be exaggerated.

Rev. J. Gelson Gregson also impressed upon the meeting the great importance of this work amongst our own countrymen, which had been too much overlooked by missionary societies. He expressed his astonishment at the difference made between taking the Gospel to so-called heathen, and so-called Christians who were not really so. Christ Himself made no such distinction. Those who accepted Him were his disciples; the others, whoever they were, were as the heathen. "What we want," said a Buddhist, "is to see men living Christianity." Therefore, it is of the first importance that earnest effort should be made to influence Englishmen in India. He did not anticipate that Christian missions would make very great progress amongst the heathen if they could not appeal to the lives of our own countrymen, as illustrating what Christianity is.

General Touch and Rev. J. Johnson also addressed the meeting, their testimony being very much to the same effect.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Rev. W. Hay Aitken, who has recently conducted a mission at St. Cuthbert's Wells, which was greatly blessed of God, is this week holding a series of special services at St. Jude's, Mildmay Park. Meetings are held at 11 a.m. and 8 p.m. each day.

Rev. J. and Mrs. Mountain closed a nine days' mission in Oamaru, New Zealand on February 13, which has made a great impression on the town; and there are many evident tokens of Divine blessing on the mission.

Chatsworth-road Tabernacle.—Special evangelistic services, conducted by the pastor, Rev. J. Bain, have just been concluded in this church. Large audiences were present each evening, and a rich answer to prayer was vouchsafed. The Benevolent Society is doing a good work amongst the poor of Lower Clapton by means of its soup kitchen, and the supply of coals, bread, &c. Gospel services are held in the Manor-rooms, Hackney, on Sunday evenings, and are attended by large numbers of the people.

Mr. Henry Thorne.—From March 19 to 29 Mr. Thorne was engaged conducting a Gospel mission in Burnley, which has resulted in great blessing to many. No Gospel service was held without inquirers. In two instances husband and wife were converted together, whilst in a third the husband was converted one night, and he brought his wife the night following. With the Christian people, too, Mr. Thorne's influence has been very powerfully felt. The Y.M.C.A. has been greatly blessed, and many will have cause to thank God for this visit.

Soldiers' Institute, Gibraltar.—Rev. W. Bradbury has been conducting Gospel meetings among the soldiers at the Institute. His faithful testimony has been owned and blessed of God among saved and unsaved. The new Institute is progressing rapidly, and when finished we are looking forward to another visit from Mr. James B. Wookey. We shall value the prayers of Christians at home in this important work. G. Holmes.

Indiana, U.S.—There has been in progress at Franklin, Ind., one of the most remarkable revivals ever known there. In a town of less than 4000 population, there have been more than 500 persons added to the churches within the last few weeks. A deep and thorough work is being done among the students in the college, many of whom have already accepted the Saviour. One saloon keeper has been converted, and others are obliged to leave the place because the business is so dull.

Liverpool.—The ten days' mission, by Mr. Leonard Weaver, recently held in Stanley Congregational Church, Liverpool, has been greatly blessed of God. Night after night its attendances increased, and the interest deepened. Large numbers remained to the after-meetings, and many anxious ones came into the inquiry-rooms. Of these a large number, it is believed, have been truly converted. Some of the poorest people of the district were brought to the services by the Christian workers, and are now rejoicing in the blessings of salvation. At the close of these services, which will long be remembered, not only by those to whose conversion they were blessed, but also to God's own children, Mr. Weaver conducted a four days' mission at Knotley Ash, in the mission-hall connected with the church, which were also well attended and greatly blessed.

Mr. J. M. Scroggie at Bristol.—This evangelist, whose ministry was greatly valued here at his first visit in company with Messrs. Moody and Sankey in 1882, conducted a mission at the Y.M.C.A. New Hall, assisted by Mr. George Robert Cairns, from America, from March 13 to 31. The Bible-readings for Christians were a means of leading to fresh consecration of heart and life in the Lord's service, while, at all the evening meetings for preaching the Gospel, the power of the Spirit with the Word was abundantly manifested in the numbers of anxious souls seeking and finding the Saviour in the after-meetings. Mr. Cairns proved a valuable co-partner with Mr. Scroggie in the work, both in singing and in the inquiry room. With a heart full of love for the unsaved, he so sings the Gospel, that not only the power of his voice, but the earnest sympathy of his heart, is felt by the audience, so that Mr. Scroggie has frequently risen to preach to a company already prepared to receive the truth by the message of the Gospel pathetically offered in song. The evangelists commenced a mission, on Sunday last, at Mr. Charrington's Assembly Hall, London.

Carrubbers-close, Edinburgh.—A week of Gospel services has been held here specially for children, by Mr. William Brown, of Edinburgh. He brought into requisition, through the magic lantern, his fine collection of pictures, reproductions of paintings by Raphael, Doré, and others. These are a source of attractive interest to the young people, and afford much scope for the exposition of Gospel themes. Over a hundred remained for conversation every night, and the results have been encouraging to the teachers who assisted in the work. Mr. Brown and Dr. Moxey have been holding Gospel temperance meetings in different places, the former, who is a soloist, using very effectively pictorial illustrations of the songs that were sung.

FLOWERS are greatly needed to carry on the Flower Mission to the shop employées in Oxford and Regent-streets, in connection with the Central Institute of the Y.W.C.A. The people in the workrooms greatly appreciate these flowers, and many shops can only be entered in this way. Wednesday is the day for taking them round, and all parcels should be addressed, The Flower Mission Secretary, 17, Old Cavendish-street, London, W.

ITALIANS IN ENGLAND.—A meeting in support of the mission recently originated, to Italians resident in this country, was held recently. General Lowry, who presided, pointed out the need of looking after the spiritual welfare of these strangers, who in many cases through neglect are lapsing into indifference and scepticism. Rev. G. C. Mold, chaplain to the Mission, also spoke earnestly of the sad moral condition of these people, who, however, in many cases have evinced much gratitude on hearing that an effort is to be made on their behalf. A mission-room is one of the great needs of the work. Services are held every Sunday afternoon in St. John's, Clerkenwell, Rev. W. Dawson, the rector, warmly supporting the Mission. Miss Mayor, 20, The Avenue, Blackheath, S.E., is one of the secretaries.

THE LONDON Y.W.C.A.—A Thanksgiving meeting and Conversazione, in connection with the acquisition of the new head offices of the Y.W.C.A., at 316, Regent-street, W., will be held there on April 19, the day before the annual meeting in Exeter Hall. Hospitality is offered to all the secretaries who live at a distance, and have not friends in town who can accommodate them. Admission to the meetings will be by ticket only. We have received an elegant illuminated show-card of the "Cloak-room and Parcels' Office" at the above address. It has been prepared in the hope that ladies will purchase them (price 1s.), and obtain leave to have them placed in the railway-station waiting-rooms and shops in London. Annual tickets for use of cloak-room, 5s. each, can be obtained from the Secretary. This is a move in the right direction.

WORKERS FOR ABROAD.—With reference to the recent offer in our columns to provide a lady worker for Sardinia with a home, Mr. W. T. Float, of the Missionary Intelligence and Registration Office, 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C., writes:—The example set by this friend is worthy of imitation by many Christian families residing abroad. There are, no doubt, those who, although they cannot support a worker in the field, would yet gladly accommodate such an one in their own home. On the other hand, there are some earnest lady workers who are longing to go forth, if only some such friends would receive them. We should be happy to be the connecting link if those friends will kindly write us on the subject. Rev. J. E. Thomas, of Sardinia, has asked us to make all arrangements regarding his offer. If any ladies are desirous of responding to his appeal, will they kindly communicate with me?

EVANGELISTIC WORK IN GERMANY.—In an extract from the German report on this work, special reference is made to the training of evangelists in the Johanneum at Bonn, the only institution of the kind in Germany, over which Professor Pfleiderer was last year called to preside. The account of evangelistic services, conducted by Rev. E. Schrenck, is also very cheering. At Cassel these services were continued for over a fortnight by request of thirteen clergymen and some members of the Royal Consistory, and were greatly blessed. Wiesbaden and other places have also been visited with similar results, both the morning Bible readings and the evening services being very well attended. So many doors are now being opened for such evangelistic effort that the need is already felt for more such preachers, strong in the Spirit. Prayer is earnestly asked on behalf of this work, which, small though it is, God has certainly recognised.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, APRIL 10.—PSALM LXIV.

'A CRY of God's elect, when persecuted for righteousness' sake, to their Deliverer and sure Avenger. The Psalm will adjust itself as an experimental utterance to the lips of Christian faith, whenever brought into contact with the evil forces of the prince of this world, so as to suffer affliction for the Gospel's sake; for it expresses the condition, and the hope, of one actually imperilled for the truth. How aptly a portion of this Psalm applies to Christ needs not be pointed out."—A. Pridham.

4.—That they may shoot in secret at the perfect.—"In secret" is better rendered by Delitzsch and Kay "in their lurking places, or coverts." In its application to Christ, the word "perfect" is accurately descriptive, and, in its application to his people, it is comforting to know that it is their connection with Him which brings down upon them the secret machinations of the wicked one. "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou Me?"

6.—They accomplish a diligent search.—"They are ready with a cunningly wrought out plan." —Delitzsch.

8.—So they shall make their own tongue to fall upon themselves.—"The 'tongue they whetted like a sword' (3) is turned upon themselves. So with those who slew Christ, lest the Romans should come and destroy their city."—Kay.

10.—All the upright in heart shall glory.—"The Psalm began in the first person singular, 'Hear my voice, O God,' but it ends by comprehending all the righteous. He who is most anxious about his own salvation will be found to be the man of the truest and widest love to others."—C. H. Spurgeon.

MONDAY, APRIL 11.—PSALM LXV.

"The four Psalms lxv.—lxviii. are closely related. There is an indication of this in their titles, which designate all four as both Psalm and Song: (1) In each of them the universality of the Church is clearly contemplated; (2) all carry us into God's Temple; (3) all speak of the awful reverence due to God; (4) all are full of grateful praise for God's mercies; (5) lxv. and lxvii. refer to God's bounteous gift of harvest, while lxviii. is the great Pentecostal Ode sung, therefore, at the conclusion of harvest."—Kay.

1.—Praise waiteth for Thee, O God, in Sion.—The Hebrew for "waiteth" is "is silent." Hengstenberg quotes from the Berleb Bible, "It is not loud praise that corresponds to the infinite majesty of God, but a reverential silence before his presence which holy souls employ in giving expression to their intensest love."

2.—O Thou that hearest prayer, unto Thee shall all flesh come.—As Zion with its ark of the covenant in David's tent accessible without the hindrance of the burdensome Levitical ritual (which was at Gibeon) was an anticipation of Gospel grace, and of access to God through Christ, so David, in spirit, anticipates the extension of this spiritual worship to "all flesh." Comp. Acts xv. 16, where James finds the Gospel dispensation described in the words of Amos speaking of the re-erection of "the Tabernacle of David," "that the residue of men might seek after the Lord."

3.—Iniquities prevail against me.—"Unhappy is the man who despises these enemies, and worse still is he who counts them his friends! He is best instructed who knows their deadly power, and flees for refuge to Him who pardons iniquity."—C. H. Spurgeon.

9.—Thou visitest the earth, and waterest it.—Viewed spiritually, this is "symbolical of the descent of the Holy Spirit after Christ's ascension." The description of the harvest which follows recalls our Lord's words John iv. 35.

TUESDAY, APRIL 12.—PSALM LXVI.

1.—Make a joyful noise unto God, all ye lands.—All ye lands is in Hebrew, "all the earth," which shows the universality of the dispensation to which the Psalm points. The LXX. have as a title, "A Psalm of the Resurrection," apparently in reference to its allusion to the Exodus from Egypt (ver. 6), which was typical of the resurrection.

5.—Come and see the works of God.—"Such glorious events as the cleaving of the Red Sea and the overthrow of Pharaoh are standing wonders, and throughout all time a voice sounds forth concerning them, 'Come and see.' Even till the close of all things, the marvellous works of God at the Red Sea will be the subject of meditation and praise; for, standing on the sea of glass mingled with fire, the triumphant armies of heaven sing 'the song of Moses the servant of God and the song of the Lamb' (Rev. xv. 3)."—C. H. Spurgeon.

6.—There did we rejoice in Him.—But, alas! how soon did this joy end (Ps. cvi. 13), "They soon forgat his works." Hence the exhortation to Christians is, "Rejoice in the Lord alway." And, lest they should forget his works, "Do this in remembrance of Me."

9.—Which holdeth our soul in life.—The Hebrew is literally, "which putteth our soul in life." (See margin.) A striking expression, denoting what God has done by uniting, with Christ as their Head, all his believing people. See Eph. i. 20, &c.

12.—We went through fire and through water.—"Fire and water are, as in Isaiah xliii. 2, a figure of vicissitudes and perils of the most extreme character."—Delitzsch.

18, 19.—If I regard iniquity in my heart, the Lord will not hear me: But verily God hath heard me.—Consequently the result showed that the Psalmist did not regard iniquity in his heart. See a similar argument used by the formerly blind man in John ix. 31:—"God heareth not sinners: but if any man be a worshipper of God, and doeth his will, him He heareth." Hence Jesus must be a worshipper of God, and doer of his will, for He has opened my eyes.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 13.—PSALM LXVII.

Hengstenberg gives as the leading thought of this Psalm, "that the blessing of God upon Israel will at a future time allure to Him all the nations of the earth." This would seem to point to its being a Millennial Psalm, or rather a prayer that Israel may be pardoned and restored to God's favour, and so made the centre of Millennial blessing to the earth.

1.—God be merciful unto us, &c.—There is a manifest allusion to the blessing to be pronounced upon Israel (Numb. vi. 23) by Aaron and his sons. This blessing is in abeyance, whilst Israel is rejected for having rejected their Messiah.

2.—That thy way may be known upon earth.—The restoration of Israel, as a nation, to God's favour is the first step to God's way being really known upon earth. The present evangelisation of the world will not find all willing to accept the Gospel, but will "take out of them a people for his name" (Acts xv. 14).

3.—Let the people praise Thee, O God.—"People" is plural, and is better rendered "peoples" by R.V. "The peoples" are the nations of the earth in contrast to Israel.

4.—Thou shalt judge the people.—Again render (as R.V.) "the peoples." The reference is not to the final judgment, but rather, as the parallel, "govern," shows, to the administration of government on earth during the Millennium. See Psalm lxii. 2—4.

6.—Then shall the earth yield her increase.—A reference to Lev. xxvi. 4: "Then ... the land shall yield her increase," &c

7.—God shall bless us; and all the ends of the earth shall fear Him.—The Psalm closes on its keynote. The blessing of Israel, the prelude to the conversion of the world. The evangelisation of the world should be the aim of our efforts during the present dispensation.

THURSDAY, APRIL 14.—PSALM LXVIII.

"Obviously a song to be sung at the removal of the ark, and in all probability rehearsed when David conducted it with holy joy from the house of Obed-edom to the prepared place on Mount Zion. It is a most soul-stirring hymn, at once surpassingly excellent and difficult. Its darkness in some stanzas is utterly impenetrable."—C. H. Spurgeon.

1.—Let God arise, let his enemies be scattered.—In Numb. x. 35 we read that these were the words spoken by Moses "when the ark set forward."

6.—God setteth the solitary in families.—"In families" is, literally, "in a house" (see margin). Viewed spiritually, the house is "the household of faith"—"the house of God" (1 Tim. iii. 15).

9.—Thou, O God, didst send a plentiful rain.—Delitzsch renders this, "a shower-like abundance of good gifts, descending from above."

10.—Thy congregation hath dwelt therein.—The word for "congregation" in Hebrew means "living ones." It seems to denote the inner circle of true members of the Church of the living God.

11.—The Lord gave the word: great was the company of those that published it.—"Of the women who herald victory, there is a great army."—Delitzsch. As in the victories of Israel, women took a prominent part in publishing the glad tidings (Exod. xv. 20; Judges v. 1), so in the publication of the greatest victory of all—the victory of Christ—the weakest instrumentality is used. See, as an illustration, Acts viii. 1—4, where, not the Apostles, but all except the Apostles, being "scattered abroad, went everywhere preaching the word."

13.—Though ye have lien among the pots.—'God's saints have been in worse places than among the pots; but now they soar aloft into the heavenly places in Christ Jesus."—C. H. Spurgeon.

15.—The hill of God is as the hill of Bashan.—Omit "as," which is not in Hebrew. "Hill of God" is a Hebraism for a mighty hill. Such was Bashan, a type of the world's greatness. But "the loftiness of nature is as nothing before the Lord. He selects Zion, and passes by the proud uplifted peaks of Bashan."—C. H. Spurgeon.

18.—Thou hast ascended on high.—The ascent of the ark to Mount Zion is a type of the ascent of Christ to heaven. See Eph. iv. 8. "The true development of the Divine intention of the earlier passage."—H. C. G. Moule.

FRIDAY, APRIL 15.—PSALM LXIX.

"Upon lilies" is the meaning of "Upon Shoshannim." "In this we have the lily among thorns, the lily of the valley, fair and beautiful, blooming in the garden of Gethsemane."—C. H. Spurgeon.

1.—Save me, O God; the waters are come in unto my soul.—Ever since the Deluge, waters in Scripture have been used as a type of Divine judgment against sin. The key to unlock the meaning of this Psalm is Luke xii. 50.

5.—O God, Thou knowest my foolishness.—The pronoun expressed gives in the Hebrew an emphasis to "Thou." It is as much as an appeal to God's knowledge of what alone Christ could call his "foolishness," not his own but that of others imputed to Him, that He might by bearing it put it away.

8.—An alien unto my mother's children.—A point not to be overlooked in the controversy as to whether the Lord's brethren who "did not believe in Him" (John vii. 5) were the children of Mary.

22.—Let their table become a snare before them.—The difference between this spirit of imprecation and that of Jesus who prayed for his murderers, is best explained in Rom. xi. 9, where this verse is quoted with the words, "For David saith." "The Apostle does not put these imprecations directly into the mouth of Jesus. He only says that what the Psalmist there, in the spirit of prophecy, invokes upon his enemies, has been fulfilled in those who wickedly laid hands upon the Holy One of God."—Delitzsch.

SATURDAY, APRIL 16.—PSALM LXX.

This is an extract of five verses from Psalm xl. (13—17), here put by itself as one Psalm. "It is a fit pendant to Psalm lxix., and a suitable preface to Psalm lxxi. This memorial Psalm ('to bring to remembrance') acts as a connecting link between the two Psalms of supplicatory expostulation, and makes up with them a precious triad of song."—C. H. Spurgeon. The only difference between these five verses and those in Psalm xl. is the introductory "be pleased" of the latter, which is here wanting, and the substitution of "God" for "Lord," which is characteristic of this second book of Psalms (xlii.—lxxii).

5.—But I am poor and needy.—"He became poor, that ye through his poverty might be rich" (2 Cor. viii. 9). The great supplier of the need of others—the wisdom of God—could say, "the Son of Man hath not where to lay his head" (Luke ix. 58).

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE

To the OLD & NEW TESTAMENTS.

This Edition is COMPLETE and unabridged.

It has all the Words and References that were given in earlier and far more expensive Editions.

It contains 757 pages,

2,270 closely-printed columns, and about

PORTABLE EDITION. 3/6

"'CRUDEN'S COMPLETE CONCORDANCE' in a well-bound and conveniently-sized volume issued at 3s. 6d., seems one of the marvels of modern book production. Messrs. Morgan & Scott's portable edition is of this class. There has been copious controversy on the merits and demerits of Cruden's great work; but we prefer to believe in Lowndes's opinion that 'Cruden's Concordance should be in every library.' It is uncommonly complete, the definitions of leading words remarkably accurate, and the references exceedingly correct."
Publishers' Circular, March 15, 1887.

"The best cheap edition of 'CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE' that we have seen is the one published by Morgan & Scott—a portable edition, clearly printed on good paper and well bound, unabridged, and with the proper names newly translated, all for 3s. 6d. Even the poorest Christian may now have a Concordance to help him in studying the Word of God with profit."
Christian Leader, Mar. 17, 1887.

Mr. C. H. SPURGEON writes:—"Your Concordance at 3s. 6d. must be a great boon to ministers. We could very well dispense with a Concordance to the Apocrypha. As in all other respects it is an unabridged Cruden, I am greatly rejoiced to see it produced for so small a sum. May you sell tens of thousands!"

MAGAZINES FOR APRIL.

The Home Visitor (1d. W. Hunt & Co.) makes a stand for Protestantism, with its article on "A Monk's First Misgivings of the Church of Rome."

Service for the King (2d.) tells of "work at Northampton," amongst the sailors in Smyrna, and Jews in this country, with tidings from scattered workers.

The Christian Treasury (Marshall Bros.), by its stories of the standard-bearers of old, and of the history of the Huguenots, incites to similar heroism in these days.

Old Jonathan (1d. Collingridge) has a character and charm peculiarly its own, which are to be found in this number, as in previous ones, in rich abundance.

The Sword and Trowel (3d.), besides the continuation of the article, "Lord Shaftesbury's Missions," has a paper which will excite attention, on "How far Pastors may be Responsible for the Spiritual Condition of their hearers."

The Brooklyn Magazine (10d.) has a graphic and interesting sketch of religious observances among the Tennessee mountains. The number also contains four of the last sermons preached by Rev. H. Ward Beecher.

Amongst the varied attractions of Illustrations (3d. Kent & Co.), there is a profusely illustrated article on Dr. Barnardo's Homes, and sketches of many points of interest on the Great Eastern Railway.

The Indian Female Evangelist (Nisbet, 3d.), the magazine of the Indian Female Normal School and Instruction Society, kindles fresh interest in the hearts of its readers, as it tells of "Our Work and the Workers," and of the people amongst whom these labour.

Good Company. 2d. Woodford, Fawcett & Co. Rev. J. Jackson Wray always provides for his readers a feast of good things in this monthly. Not least in value or interest is the article on "Birthday Lessons," which continues the series of "Week-night Tabernacle Talks," herein published.

The Reaper (1d. Houlston & Sons) is full of cheery encouragement for workers engaged in gathering in the golden grain. The number is a very good one, and will prove helpful to all, reminding them how great is the reward given for all faithful labour for Christ.

The Sabbath-School Magazine. 1d. John McCallum & Co., Glasgow. This is a very valuable companion, either for the Sunday scholar or teacher, and especially so is the paper by Rev. J. Somerville, of Edinburgh, on "Conduct and Character."

In The Sentinel (1d. Dyer) there is "A Warning," by Mrs. Josephine E. Butler, as to a dangerous sign of the times—the easy way in which the first principles of jurisprudence, which are the foundations of the liberty and justice purchased for us by our forefathers, are now being set aside.

Our Own Gazette. 1d. 18, Paternoster-square. This chronicle of Y.W.C. Association news, besides its usual quota of thoughtful reading for hours of recreation, has a contribution on the Emigration question, which will be helpful to those who are thinking of this cure for many troubles experienced by our workers in this land.

In its own fashion Eastward Ho! (6d. Kent & Co.) maintains a good fight against the social demons of the day. In the current issue there is much instructive matter, including one of Mr. Langbridge's rhythmical ballads, on the foes that invade the Englishman's home. There is also a marvellously graphic description of Ben Hogan's Gospel services among the miners of Montana, which we hope to transfer to our columns.

Footsteps of Truth. 3d. Shaw & Co. The current number has several articles of interest, prominent amongst them being "The Duty of Christians with reference to Infidelity," by Mr. H. L. Hastings. In another, "Unity Maintained," there is a reminder, always timely, in view of the divisions that exist amongst Christians, of the oneness of those who are in Christ.

The Friend of China. 1d. Morgan & Scott. This little monthly, the organ of the Society for the Suppression of the Opium Trade, continues to give all information concerning "the strange merchandise" with which England has wrought so much mischief in China. The universal condemnation of the trade by all Chinamen who desire the welfare of their country, and by the enlightened opinion of so many missionaries and others, should have a powerful effect in influencing public men and public opinion against its continuance.

The Fireside. 6d. 7, Paternoster-square. "The Christian aspect of Socialism," one of the articles in this monthly, is a thoughtful review of a subject much agitated now, based on the words, "Render therefore to all their dues." The careful perusal of the same would be beneficial to the two classes whom the author styles "the haves" and "the have nots." The serial, "Missionaries in Many Lands," bids fair to be very interesting. Day of Days and Home Words (1d. each) are, as ever, freshly bright as they speed forth on their errand of cheer throughout the land.

It is impossible to over-praise the delicate beauty of the illustrations of The Century. (1s. 4d. T. Fisher Unwin.) Those that accompany the article this month on Canterbury Cathedral are remarkably fine. The instalment of President Lincoln's Life, though not startling, is of very genuine interest, as showing how he was educated and prepared for the noble anti-slavery work he was destined to do. The amusing chapter on "English as she is taught" is calculated to cause serious reflections on the defects of our educational methods. St. Nicholas (1s.) is a rare storehouse of entertainment for the young people—a full feast of beauty and playful mirth.

There is ample variety in Good Words. The brief introductory article on "Bible Characters," by the late Charles Reade, novelist, sharply whets the appetite for more. Mr. John Burns imparts much information interesting to ocean travellers in his account of the equipment of the Cunard steamers. Thoughtful students of nature will consider with zest Sir Wm. Thomson's paper about "The Sun's Heat," and general readers will not miss Mr. Rae's sympathetic sketch of Lord Shaftesbury's work as a Social Reformer. In The Sunday Magazine Archdeacon Farrar pays an eloquent tribute to the Bible as first on the list of "The Teachers of Mankind." Rev. T. Champness's little paper, entitled "A Redeemed Slave," will be useful to preachers of the Gospel. Mrs. Linskill's powerfully written story grows in tragic interest. (6d. each. Isbister & Co.).

Religious Tract Society. Our readers who were attracted by the recent sketch in these pages of Rev. James Chalmers, of New Guinea, will welcome the first of a series of papers from his pen in The Sunday at Home. There is also a seasonable article on Christ's betrayal illustrated by a fine drawing of a terra-cotta, by George Tinworth. The artist, however, should take some lessons as to Eastern customs from Miss von Finkelstein. In The Leisure Hour Mr. R. Heath writes on his favourite subject—France. We hope Mr. Langbridge's admirable "Saturday Song" will find its way into the popular recitation books. Our Little Dots (1d.) will charm those for whom it specially caters. The Child's Companion and Tract Magazine (1d. each) are, as usual, full of interesting and instructive matter. The Cottager and Artisan (1d.) and Friendly Greetings (1d.), two other well-known contributories to the stream of pure literature, are also excellent and entertaining. The Girl's Own Paper (6d.) has this month a short but excellent sketch of the students' branch of the Women's Christian Education Union. Particulars are also given of a new prize competition for needlework, in making clothing for the poor; we hope the competitors will be legion.

Partridge & Co.—The Welcome (6d.) has a charming variety of entertaining matter. "A Trip on the South Indian Railway" will be attractive to the general reader, while to many of our readers the article by G. Holden Pike, on our old friend "John Macgregor (Rob Roy)" will have a deeper interest. The numerous illustrations are exceedingly good. The British Workman (1d). contains in its principal illustration, and in an interesting article on a "Restless Day of Rest," a strong appeal on behalf of the country postman, to whom the Sabbath brings no cessation from his labours. Its companion issue, The Band of Hope Review (½d.) is as full of instruction and profitable entertainment as ever, which is saying a good deal. The Children's Friend and Infant's Magazine are simply delightful. The Friendly Visitor, Family Friend, and Mother's Companion (also by the same publishers) are each in their several ways excellent. Many views of woman's mission in the great harvest field are presented to us in Woman's Work. 4d. Some, eminently practical, speak of work done in some out-of-the-way corner during a season of rest from ordinary labours. Such a season is coming now for many, and these thoughts will stimulate them to go and do likewise.

Messrs. Cassell & Co.—With such a wealth of good reading as emanates from this enterprising house, month by month, spare hours need never hang heavily. All tastes are catered for, instruction, profit, and entertainment being well supplied. Bishop Ellicott's Old Testament Commentary (part 31. 7d.) reaches to 1 Sam. xxi. In The Countries of the World the reader is carried to the Antipodes, and gains an insight into the beauties of Tasmania and the Australian Bush. The Life of Christ. The re-issue in monthly parts (price 7d.) of this valuable work, by Archdeacon Farrar, will be heartily welcomed. The work is embellished with upwards of 300 beautiful and well-authenticated illustrations, and with the first number there is a steel engraving of the author. Part 6 of the Illustrated History of England (7d.) brings us to the stirring events that culminated in the "Magna Charta," extracted from King John at Runnymede. The Encyclopædic Dictionary (1s.), in this part, continues its exhaustive account of the origin and meaning of words beginning with H.

EASTER.—We have received from Mrs. Reynolds, of Peoria, a few copies of an elegant book of poems for Easter, compiled by herself, and to be sold for the benefit of Christian work in her hands. The price is one dollar. We will forward a copy for 4s., post free. Peoria was the last place where, with Major Whittle, our beloved friend P. P. Bliss, held a series of meetings before the terrible death of himself and wife at Ashtabula. Mr. and Mrs. Reynolds are two of the most useful workers in their region of U.S.A.

A NEW DAY NURSERY.—Last Thursday Princess Mary, Duchess of Teck, opened the new day nursery, or crèche, and mission buildings which have recently been erected in East-street, Baker-street, in connection with Portman Chapel. Her Royal Highness was accompanied by Lady Cairns and Lady Lilia Sherbrooke. After making a tour of the building, the Princess entered the Mission Hall, the school children assembled on a raised platform outside meanwhile singing the National Anthem. Her Royal Highness formally declared the buildings open, and expressed a desire that they might prove a boon and a benefit to all concerned.

ST. BRIDE'S YOUTHS' INSTITUTE.—The fifth annual meeting was held last week, and the report states that the year's labours have proved of real benefit to a large number of lads. There are at present 150 on the books, making a total of members since the opening of 1200. It is satisfactory to know that many on leaving the Institute become associates of the Y.M.C.A. The average attendance during the year has been greater than before. Lord Brabazon, who presided, said such institutions are of great value in contributing to the welfare of the empire. In addition to the amusements and instruction provided in the Institute, the lads enjoy all the advantages of a home. Rev. Hugh Price Hughes also addressed the lads, giving them much practical teaching.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER AND PRAISE.—Prayer for blessing on the following special missions:—Mr. F. E. Marsh, at Port Glasgow, April 10 to 24; Rev. W. Haslam, at St. Peter's Church, Congleton, April 9 to 19; Mr. Josiah Spiers, at Woodside Hall, Woodside-park, near Barnet, April 11 to 15, and at Blue Ribbon Hall, Tottenham, April 25 to 29; special mission at Christ Church, Boscombe, Hants, to April 16; Mr. John Elliott, at Kingskerswell and Brixham, South Devon.——Praise for blessing on meetings at Sunderland, conducted by Mr. F. E. Marsh.——For blessing among young coloured people in Georgia, during a visit of Mr. James Wharton, and prayer that God may give them to grow in grace, and in the knowledge of the Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

NATIONAL LIFEBOAT INSTITUTION.—At the annual meeting of this truly national Institution it was stated that last year four new stations were formed, each of these being provided with a lifeboat. The 293 lifeboats which form the fleet of the Institution were launched 286 times for actual service in rescuing life, besides about 800 times for exercise and inspection. Upwards of 700 lives and thirty-three vessels were saved by their instrumentality, while 28 lifeboat-men lost their lives in the noble attempt to save others. The Institution has also expended nearly £7000 in rewards and grants to widows and orphans of lifeboat-men drowned during the year. It has been determined that all the boats shall be submitted to a test as to their self-righting and other properties; and that if they do not fulfil a higher standard than has before been fixed they shall be altered or replaced with the most improved type of boat. Mr. Charles Dibdin (14, John-street, Adelphi) is the secretary.

Among the Churches.

* We shall be happy to receive from our readers brief items of news for this page, respecting Christian work carried on, or progress achieved, in connection with any evangelical church at home or abroad.*

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The Bishop of Ripon, who was seriously ill last week, is now recovering.

Rev. W. H. M. H. Aitken, with other clergymen, has been conducting a very successful ten days' mission in the churches of Hyde.

The Bishop of Exeter is anxious to establish a Diocesan Mission Association for the purpose of affording ministerial help to small parishes.

Rev. W. M. Statham (for several years the minister at Hare-court Congregational Church, Canonbury) has been ordained curate of St. Margaret's, Ilkley, Yorkshire.

At Hereford the clergy of the archdeaconry have resolved to celebrate the Royal Jubilee by instituting a pension fund for their own order, which is to bear the name of Victoria.

Bishop Caldwell, of Madras, recently ordained no fewer than sixteen native clergymen at one time. This is said to be the largest number ever ordained on any single occasion in India. It is estimated that there are 260 native clergymen in India and Ceylon connected with the two Anglican societies.

BAPTIST.

A members' reunion is held quarterly by Rev. T. Hancocks, pastor of Zion Baptist Chapel.

Rev. Walter H. Purchase resumed his ministry at the Baptist Chapel, Leominster, on Sunday evening, March 27.

During special services at Rowley, Durham, conducted by the pastor, Rev. E. W. Jenkins, seventeen persons decided for Christ.

Nearly seven hundred persons have been added to the church at Great Grimsby in the nineteen years' pastorate of Rev. E. Lauderdale.

Fifty persons have been baptized since the opening of the chapel in Christchurch-road, Worthing (Rev. C. D. Crouch, pastor). The various agencies of the church have been well sustained.

The Lancashire and Cheshire Baptist Association has 111 churches connected with it, many of which have been fostered into vigorous and self-supporting life during the fifty years since its formation.

The membership of the church at Parson's Hill, Woolwich (Rev. J. Wilson, pastor), had an increase of ninety-one during the past year. The Sunday afternoon lectures given during the last four months are spoken of as a great means of good to the town.

A Conference on "the deepening of spiritual life" was held at South-street Chapel, Greenwich, last week, under the auspices of the North-West Kent division of the London Baptist Association. Revs. A. Sturge, F. B. Meyer (Leicester), C. Spurgeon (pastor), and others took part.

METHODIST.

Methodism is steadily developing in the Rhondda Valley, Wales.

The Juvenile Missionary Society at Walworth collected, last year, over £60.

Rev. Thomas Waugh is conducting a mission at Hargreave-street Chapel, Burnley.

The Band of Hope and temperance societies at Roupell Park are in a very flourishing condition.

At Castle Donington lately a public service was held for the purpose of recognising forty-five new members.

Revival services, continued for six weeks, have been held at Maulden, near Ampthill; over seventy persons professed to find salvation.

During the mission at Littleborough, conducted by Captain Warner Dennis, there was a service for women, at which nearly 800 attended.

Boroughbridge is to be the head of the new circuit formed by the division of Ripon. Each place will have fourteen others attached to it.

A successful three weeks' mission has been conducted at Mount Zion Primitive Methodist Chapel, Whitehall, Bristol, by Mr. John Wooldridge, of London.

Rev. George Eddy has just concluded a most successful mission at Park-road Chapel, Newcastle-on-Tyne. Many young men have come out on the Lord's side.

A most successful old scholars' meeting was held at Mumbles in connection with the men's Bible-class, under the presidency of Mr. John Angel. About sixty attended.

An "army of 10,000 consecrated givers" is being recruited among the American Methodists, each member pledging himself to give ten dollars a year to church extension from the year 1880.

At the Manchester Foreign Missionary anniversary, held last week, Rev. J. Calvert, speaking of Fiji, said that at the commencement of Her Majesty's reign there was not a Christian in that country, whereas now there is not a heathen.

Considerable increase in the membership is reported from Accrington, Bolton (Bridge-street), Darlington (North-road), Keighley, Liverpool (Great Homer-street), Newport, Monmouthshire, Ripon, Rochdale (Union-street), Rotherham, Southwark, and Warrington.

At Cottingham, in the Kettering Circuit, one Sunday, as the preacher had not arrived because of a snow-storm, the people cried mightily to God for a blessing. This was the beginning of a wonderful revival throughout the district. At several places numbers were led to Christ, and at Rothwell forty seniors joined the class.

PRESBYTERIAN.

The Haverstock-hill Church, which is about to celebrate its third jubilee, has had an increase of over fifty members during the year.

The members of the Walsall congregation have gathered a class of 200 young people belonging to the least cared for among the community, and the results have been very satisfactory.

At the second annual Conference of the Free Church Guild in Aberdeen last week, the attendance at the various meetings was very large, and all the speakers were listened to with breathless attention.

On March 24 Rev. Z. B. Woffendale and friends of Somers Town Church entertained 350 young women employed at Messrs Eley's establishments at King's-cross and the Gray's Inn-road, at tea. A Service of Song and several addresses followed.

CONGREGATIONAL.

The fiftieth anniversary of the Tolmer-square Church has just been held.

During his four-and-a-half years' pastorate at Soho-hill, Birmingham, Rev. W. Pierce admitted 388 members to Church fellowship.

Nearly 1200 persons have been received into Church fellowship during Rev. J. W. Atkinson's eighteen year pastorate at Latimer Chapel, East London.

Rev. W. J. Woods, of Manchester, has accepted the unanimous call of the church and congregation at Clapton Park, and will commence his ministerial duties on May 15.

Mr. Gipsy Smith, of Hanley, has been conducting an evangelistic mission at High-street Church, West Bromwich. The spacious building was crowded night after night, and large numbers professed Christian decision.

At a meeting held last week in Finsbury Park Chapel, reports were read showing how the various branches of the work have prospered under the pastorate of Rev. T. Eynon Davies. The number of church members is over 300.

In the various schools connected with the church at Francis-road, Birmingham (Rev. W. F. Clarkson, pastor), about 1000 persons are receiving religious instruction, nearly 200 being on the roll of the adult class. Mission work of all kinds is vigorously prosecuted.

Rev. Robert Balgarnie, who recently held a series of mission services in George-street Church, Ryde, says that the eighty-four persons who then decided for Christ "were not casuals from the streets, but persons who had long been on the threshold of the kingdom, needing but a final step to enter it."

A series of meetings commenced about twelve months ago in the common lodging-houses of Britannia-street, Leicester, by a number of men connected with Melbourne Hall, has been very successful, and a Sunday-school has been formed, one "class" consisting of between 70 and 80 of the children of hawkers and tramps. A small hosiery factory has now been secured and furnished for this mission.

SALVATION ARMY.

In eight weeks seventy persons have professed salvation at Sheffield.

At Kilburn, over sixty soldiers have been enrolled during the last three months.

At Chelsea, at the close of a day's earnest prayer and effort, twenty persons yielded to Christ.

At the Oxford Depôt, only opened a month since, over thirty came out for salvation in three days.

The success of the Salvation Army at East Grinstead is the wonder of the whole neighbourhood.

Nineteen converts were publicly and solemnly enrolled at Nimes as soldiers; each was presented with the "S's."

Special meetings held in a shed at Bradninch (Devon), resulted in twenty-four persons giving themselves to Christ in one week.

At Calais there are already thirty young men who have taken a bold and determined stand for salvation. Some of these were the worst of the disturbers at the opening meetings.

At North Finchley, men leave the public-houses to hear the glad tidings of salvation; happy hearts and homes are continually being made, and a grand work is being done amongst the children.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

In The Tyneside Echo a writer protests against the sale of intoxicants at the Newcastle Jubilee Exhibition.

Rev. J. W. Horsley, in "Jottings from Gaol," says the proportion of female incurable drunkards exceeds the male by about 22 per cent.

Principal Fairbairn, speaking at Oxford the other day, said total abstinence is not a question of self-interest but a sacred and imperative duty.

The debasing influence of the drink-traffic is well illustrated in a card issued by a publican at Worcester, containing a shameless parody on portions of the Sermon on the Mount and the Decalogue.

At a crowded East London women's temperance demonstration, last week, Mrs. Hilton stated that she had been an abstainer for forty years. During the twenty-five years she had worked amongst the East-end people she had seen crowds swept off the face of the earth through drink, and crowds of children left to suffering and sorrow.

A Christian club for working men, to be conducted as an adjunct to Gospel temperance work, has been opened in connection with St. Paul's mission, Glasgow. The office-bearers must be abstainers, but any well-conducted men will be welcomed as members. Rev. J. Paton, its promoter and first president, is sanguine that the club will prove a great aid in the church work of the parish.

FOREIGN.

As the result of a recent law, 12,000 of the lowest public-houses in Holland have just been closed.

Mr. T. W. Glover writes from New Zealand that King Pawhiao has established Prohibition through his country.

Rev. E. T. Bealy is Rev. J. G. Gregson's successor as secretary of the Soldiers' Total Abstinence Association, India, suggested for the post by the Commander-in-Chief.

Rev. Horace Waller states that in some places in Africa the wages of native labourers, even of boys and girls, are actually paid in spirits!! If so, it is a burning disgrace and shame.

"Five hundred per cent. increase in the trade in women's and children's clothing" is reported as one result of Prohibition in some towns in the Southern States of America.

A Total Abstinence Society was started at a meeting of the boys of the Foochow Church Missionary College, China, in June last. Two hundred Chinese, mostly adults, are now members.

In conformity with a requisition, signed by 48,255 Swiss citizens, the Spirit Monopoly Bill, passed last year by the National and State Councils, will be submitted to the popular vote.

At a great temperance meeting, recently held at Barbadoes, the circuit ministers and Good Templar seamen of H.M. ships Canada and Lily spoke, and over 100 signed the pledge and "donned the blue."

The Murphy temperance meetings at Farwell Hall continue to attract immense audiences. Dr. Noble, ex-Alderman Young, a recent convert, and several others, recently addressed a special meeting for lawyers and doctors. Both meeting and addresses were of rare interest.

"In some instances the reporting is admirable. We think we hear the living voice, and see the living man. We 'ne'er shall look upon his like again.' He is a king of men; commanding, and finding everybody eager to obey: and all the while utterly lost in his work, and as devoid of self-importance as a new-born babe. The tiny thread of narrative is used to string together these parabolic scenes."—The Record.

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

BELGIUM.—Out of the 113 miners who lost their lives in the recent catastrophe at Borinage, twenty were members of the evangelical church in Pâturages.

CONGO.—At the Baptist Missionary Society's station at San Salvador, on the Congo River, special services were held in December, with a view to bring the people to a decision for Christ. The result was that over one hundred persons gave in their names and decided for the future to follow Jesus.

ROMISH PERSECUTION.—In San Giovanni Lupatoto, near Verona, several German Protestants are employed in glass-works. Until February last, they were accustomed to meet for public worship in a large hall belonging to a public-house, but the priests have now threatened to excommunicate any person who may supply them with a room for worship. The hall above-named was purified from heretical taint by a copious shower of holy water!—Evan.-Kirch. Anzeiger.

INDIA.—In the Cuddapah district a rich harvest seems to be ripening for the sickle. Rev. W. H. Campbell, of the London Missionary Society, says:—Everywhere the work is developing in interest as well as in extent. I have recently had news from various parts of the district, of people coming to our agents and begging to receive baptism. In one village, Gudur, where Shantayya, a native evangelist, has been working, six Sudra farmers have signified their intention of receiving baptism, while another of our evangelists, whom I sent for a month to Cherneopalle, reports that four people there are ready to be baptized.

BETHLEHEM.—The Journal Religieux says that about thirty persons of this town and about the same number from the neighbouring town of Beit-Djâla (which has a chapel and about 150 evangelical Christians) have announced their intention of joining the Protestant Church. This fact is the more encouraging because the opposition of Islamism to the Gospel has been stronger than ever, and the Romish propaganda has been carried on with extraordinary vigour. A piece of land has been secured, conveniently situated for these new converts, on which to build a place of worship.

JAPAN.—The third General Synod of the Reformed Churches was lately held at Tokio in a large room formerly built for the purpose of attacking and opposing Christianity. Nearly one thousand persons were present at the opening session. The delegates numbered sixty-one, representing forty-four parishes, and 4300 communicants, showing an increase of 70 per cent. in the last two years. Japan is not only following the political and religious adminstrations of the West, but also its methods of helping benevolent works. Some of the highest ladies of the land recently held a bazaar, which yielded a profit of £600.

UGANDA.—Mr. Mackay, in a letter dated Sept. 28, says:—"Some teaching is going on. I have visitors every day, and with some I have read and re-read in the past month two or three of the stiffest books in the New Testament. The Word of God is living and powerful. Now and then I have a fair number collected in the library, and we have a prayer-meeting or an address." On Monday, March 14, a telegram from Zanzibar was published, stating that letters from Uganda had reached Zanzibar that morning, dated January 24. The telegram said that "the English and French missionaries were well, and quiet restored, but the converts were still hiding."

SPAIN.—In a letter written from Madrid, Mr. Albert R. Fenn says:—We recently spent a day in the old Roman town of Sagunto. There are a few there who read the Scriptures; the leader among them took us to his house, and gave us supper before leaving. His sister-in-law has a New Testament which her uncle obtained in 1817, while the Inquisition still existed. When her uncle gave it to her, he said, "Follow the directions of that book, and you need nothing else." The givers of that book probably never knew that it bore fruit; only that God had said that his Word should not return to Him void. Last Sunday we received into fellowship five men and one woman—a special answer to prayer that God would save men. I find, on looking over the past twelve months, that thirty persons have been added to us, and all through the year there have been inquirers, and candidates for membership. We were gladdened on Monday night with several new cases. Our village meeting has an attendance of over one hundred, with the greatest order and attention.

PARIS.—According to a German paper, there were in Paris in 1789 rather over 500 Jews; in 1806, about 3000; in 1842, 12,000; and in 1872, 40,000. It is estimated there are now about 50,000. As a specimen of the increase of Jews in the various branches of the public service, it may be stated there were in the Army in 1821 1 Jewish general, 1 chief of battalion, and 3 captains. In 1883 there were serving under the French flag 5 generals, 5 colonels, 9 majors, 25 chiefs of battalions, 90 captains, 89 lieutenants, and 104 sub-lieutenants.——The dangers to which young girls are exposed are numerous; but, happily, they are being provided against by many Homes, where board and lodging are supplied at about 1s. 2d. a day and under. Careful endeavour is also made to find suitable situations. Besides Miss Leigh's Home—77, Avenue de Wagram, for English Governesses, &c.—there are the Maison Hospitalière, 14, Rue Deguerry; and one for domestic servants, 85, Rue Legendre; also one for young women in shops, 27, Rue Jean Jacques Rousseau, and probably others of a more private nature.—Le Christianisme.——The two lectures which M. Bægner, secretary of the Paris Foreign Missions, gave at the beginning of March, have made a deep impression. One friend gave 10,000 francs for a mission on the Congo, and 5000 francs towards the new Mission House. The result of the two collections was 1200 francs.—L'Evangéliste.

THE POOR CHILDREN'S AID SOCIETY have, unfortunately, a very large constituency. They estimate that there are in London alone 37,000 ill-fed, ill-clothed school children. To give this army a needful dinner is one of the ends in view of this association, and a conference was held at the Mansion House last week to devise means for its accomplishment. Is not the body more than the multiplication table?

FOX AND KNOT SCHOOLS AND MISSION.—At the annual meeting of this Mission on Friday last, the hon. secretary (Mr. John Stabb) reported that, during the year ending January 31, 356 children had been under instruction in the schools, receiving in addition to a good elementary education, careful religious and moral training. Much blessing has attended the Divine services held on Sundays and Thursdays, which are conducted by a London city missionary, and the various temperance and other agencies in connection with the Mission are in a healthy and vigorous state. Rev. T. S. Hutchinson pointed out that the attention given to the religious education of the scholars is the great feature of the schools. Rev. U. Davies, and the Lord Mayor, who presided, also dwelt on the importance of instilling Christian truths and principles into the minds of the young, and upon the value of the work of the Mission in this direction. Mr. Stabb's address is 6, Norcott-road, Stoke Newington.

THIS Association, instituted in 1844, is employing over 120 experienced and faithful men; labouring under the direction of the Parochial Clergy, to visit the poor from house to house and room to room; conduct Bible-classes and cottage lectures; report cases of sickness and distress; and help generally in the spiritual work of the many poor and populous parishes to which they ase appointed.

£900 in New Subscriptions or Donations will be required during the current quarter to maintain the existing grants.

The Committee earnestly appeal for the above mentioned sum before the close of the financial year on March 31.

AN EXCELLENT TEXT-BOOK for BIBLE CLASSES.—Sabbath School Magazine.

The Number "SEVEN" in Scripture.

Compiled by S. A. BLACKWOOD, C.B.

Tinted Covers, 1s.; Limp Cloth, 1s. 6d.; Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 2s. 6d.

"Readers of history, and observers of nature alike, have often remarked on the frequency with which the number SEVEN occurs, and on the peculiar significance which, in all times, has attached to this number. Readers of the Bible, too, cannot well have failed to notice how frequently this particular number occurs in Holy Scripture; but many of them will be astonished to find the extent to which that number enters into the structure of God's Word, when they read a little book by Mr. S. A. Blackwood, C.B., entitled 'The Number Seven in Scripture.' This gives a complete and exhaustive record of all the passages in which the number appears, quoting about three hundred instances in the Old Testament, and one hundred in the New Testament. It will be found to run through the whole of the Bible, commencing with the institution of the seventh day, or Sabbath in Eden, and concluding with the various series of 'sevens' in the Apocalypse. The variety may be gathered from the following:—

Seven Utterances of God in Eden.
Seven Sayings of Christ on the Cross.
Seven Weepings of Joseph.
Seven Excuses of Moses when commissioned to deliver Israel.
Seven Prayers of Jesus recorded by Luke.
Seven Miracles recorded by John.
Seven Resurrections mentioned in Scripture.
Seven 'Walks' described in the Epistle to the Ephesians.
Seven Beatitudes in the Revelation.

"As the Author observes, 'We must surely acknowledge that a Divine design has caused this particular number to be so frequently employed, and to enter into the composition of the books of the Bible books written by so many hands, and at such various periods. Whatever other object the Divine Author of the Bible may have had in view in making such frequent use of the number, it seems to be generally believed, for one thing at least, that it was intended to convey the idea of completeness or perfection. Its first employment on the occasion of the completed work of creation is strongly in favour of this presumption.'"—The Quiver.

Dr. CRANAGE'S undeviating aim is to TRAIN the boys committed to his care, not only in mental acquisitions, but in their whole moral and physical being; believing that as much pains and unremitting attention are required for the latter as the former. Attention is given not only to the studies which the boys pursue, but to their recreation, games, and amusements—upon the principle that almost every incident affords material for improvement, and opportunity for the formation of GOOD HABITS. All education is on a Christian basis.

The boys attend with Dr. Cranage, on Sunday Mornings, the evangelical ministry at Christ Church, Wellington (Rev. T. L. Butler, M.A., Vicar), and in the Evening, the Services at his Mission Hall, in the town, conducted by himself.

Five exhibitions, dependent on entrance examinations, are generally offered each April, July, and December; two of the value of twenty guineas per annum for seven years, for boys under twelve years of age; two of the value of thirty guineas per annum for five years, for boys under fourteen; and one of the value of sixty guineas per annum for boys under sixteen, for three years. All for boarders in the School-house. The boys must not have attained the respective ages before the first of the month in which the examinations are held.

The School-house is delightfully, and most healthfully situated within a mile of the Railway Station of Wellington; it is well adapted for its purpose, and constructed with the necessary appliances. The School-room, Reading-room, Dining-hall, Lavatories, and Dormitories are spacious, airy, and convenient; the Dormitories are fitted generally with "cubicles." The Play Grounds are very extensive, and well suited for healthy recreation. There is a Gymnasium, Fives-court, and Cricket-ground, with a comfortable hut.

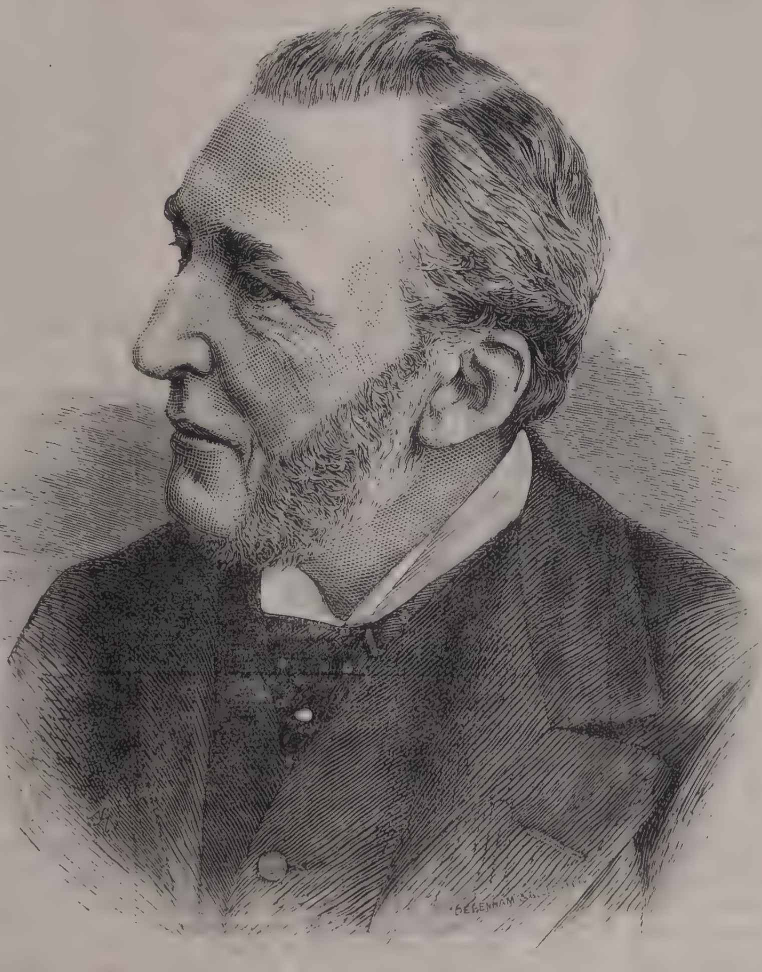
THE LATE EARL CAIRNS.

By the Author of "Brief Memoirs of the First Earl Cairns.*

THE subject of the present portrait and sketch, Hugh McCalmont Cairns, now better known as the first Earl Cairns, was born at Belfast in 1819. He was descended from an old Scottish family, long settled in the North of Ireland.



DEBENHAM SC.

(From Photograph by Messrs. Debenham & Gould, Bournemouth.)

In childhood he showed the promise of the great gifts which afterwards made him famous in his profession, and his early piety foreshadowed the devout and consistent type of his Christian character. When he was only ten years of age, the closing words of a sermon preached by Hugh McNeile, late Dean of Ripon, "God claims you," entered the child's heart as a call from heaven; he thenceforward obeyed, with singularly unswerving faithfulness, throughout his illustrious career.

With all his delight in spiritual work and instruction, Hugh Cairns was a thorough boy, excelling in boyish games and delighting in athletic exercises. He was also a diligent student, both at school, and afterwards at Trinity College, Dublin; and he finished his brilliant course there by coming out first-class in classics, when only in his eighteenth year. In his college days the young student had established a habit of early rising; and now, when he began to study for the Bar in London, he awoke regularly at four o'clock in the morning to work at law-books. But, before commencing his work, he gave the first two fresh hours to prayer and religious study.

After Mr. Cairns had been called to the Bar, he attended regularly at his chambers, allowing nothing to interfere with this duty, although for a long time he received no work to do. Devotion to duty characterised his life; but duty to God he set in the forefront. A single instance will illustrate how this principle guided his actions. Early in his professional career he was offered a very important brief by a leading barrister. But the pleasure given him by this unexpected opening did not cause him to hesitate as to declining it when he found that, in order to make himself master of the case, some hours of the intervening Sunday must be used in the study of it. "Six days in the week," he said, in returning the brief, "I am your man. On the seventh day I am God's man only." "Them that honour Me, I will honour," is a sure word of promise. Thenceforward Mr. Cairns's progress in his profession was a steady rise until he reached its summit.

In 1852, he was returned as member of Parliament for Belfast, and continued to represent that borough in the House of Commons, until his elevation to the judicial bench. In the spring of 1856 the desire of his heart was fulfilled, in his marriage to Mary, daughter of Mr. McNeile, of Park Mount, county Antrim. He brought his young bride to grace his London home, and, cheered by her bright and meet companionship, worked at his profession with renewed ardour. The custom, which he had faithfully maintained, of consecrating the early freshness of the morning to God, was an especial aid in forming the serene strength of his character. He rose daily at six o'clock, to secure an hour and a half for the study of the Bible and for prayer, before conducting family worship at a quarter to eight. Even when the late hours of the House of Commons, and the early hours claimed by his hard-working life at the Bar, left him often not more than two hours for his night's rest, this determination to allow nothing to come between him and communion with his God continued to prevail. He walked with God as a son with a father; and lived a life of prayer and dependence upon Him. Before beginning any work which required more than usual effort and wisdom, he spent the more time in prayer; he ever felt it to be the main-spring of his success.

In 1858 Mr. Cairns was made Solicitor-General; shortly afterwards he was knighted, and in 1866 he became Attorney-General. In 1867 he was made Lord Justice of Appeal, and created a peer. In 1868 he was first made Lord Chancellor ,the youngest of this century, and again a second time in 1874; and he held office until 1880.

Earlier in his career when he was asked whether, under the pressure of his duties, he would not be obliged to give up teaching in a Sunday-school,† which he had done from his boyhood, he replied with emphasis, "Certainly not!" And he was ever ready to advocate from the platform or elsewhere every religious or social measure for the benefit of the masses.

* Nisbet & Co.

† Two other Lord Chancellors, Lord Selborne and the late Lord Hatherley, have shared with Lord Cairns the distinction of having been Sunday-school teachers.

In the spring of 1875, Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey were completing their evangelistic campaign through the United Kingdom, by a series of meetings in different parts of London. Lord Cairns had invited Mr. Moody to visit him at Bournemouth, and, being thoroughly satisfied as to his simple and genuine piety, and great natural powers for the work he had undertaken, resolved to give him his hearty support. He was frequently to be seen on the platform as an earnest listener to those wonderful services, for which thousands have thanked God. The meetings were attended by multitudes gathered from every class in society, and representing every shade of opinion. Amongst the crowd, on one occasion, a Jew, urged by mere curiosity, had made his way to the platform, and to his exceeding surprise found himself close to the Lord Chancellor, who little thought what results for eternity were linked with his attendance there that day. This Jew had a special admiration for Lord Cairns's intellect and talents, and wondered to see that he could find both time and inclination to be at the service. He watched him narrowly, noticed his cordial hand-shake with Mr. Moody, and then, to his astonishment, observed that the Lord Chancellor took from his pocket a Bible and a hymn-book. Seeing the deep interest with which Lord Cairns listened, the Jew began to think that this preaching must be well worth his own attention; and soon his heart became rivetted by the wondrous story of the life and death of Jesus of Nazareth—the Redeemer of the world. He returned to listen, a few evenings later; and then remained for the "after-meeting," in much anxiety of mind. He had been completely shaken from his old moorings, and he could find no rest until he dropped anchor in the faith of a crucified and arisen Saviour. Six weeks later he came forward to confess Him before the world, by receiving Christian baptism, and since that time he has been a faithful witness for "Jesus Christ, the King of the Jews."

Amongst the many religious and benevolent Societies to which Lord Cairns gave his cordial support, those that seemed to lie nearest to his heart were the Bible Society, the Church Missionary Society, and the Irish Church Missions; only less did he value the Coffee-house movement, the Scripture Readers' and City Missionaries' Societies, and very intense was his interest in the Homes under Dr. Barnardo's energetic care. He was also one of the vice-presidents of the Bible-women and Nurses' Association; and he and Lady Cairns, with a rare and beautiful charity, year by year, during the autumn, when they were all away in Scotland, set apart several rooms in their charming house at Bournemouth, to receive for a restful holiday a succession of tired workers, Scripture readers, City missionaries, and Bible-women, wearied and worn in their constant round of devoted service amongst the dwellers in the haunts of sin and suffering, in the noisy streets and crowded courts of London.

Whilst at his winter home at Bournemouth, Lord Cairns was a generous supporter of various good and charitable works in the place. He would even come down from London, when he could with difficulty spare the one night, that he might not for the cabmen and donkey boys, when an excellent supper was also provided for them.

Deepest of all was his interest in the Young Men's Christian Association; and very liberal was the help he gave towards the purchase of a building for a public hall, gymnasium, and home in connection with that institution at Bournemouth. On Sunday afternoons he conducted a Bible-class for some of the young men of the Association, in which, during his absence in town or in Scotland, his place was filled by one or other of his many friends in Bournemouth.

The frequent visitors to the happy home of Lindisfarne, or better still, those who dwelt there, could tell how Christ-like was Lord Cairns in his daily life. Full well will they recall the pathos of that voice, now silent in the grave, as in tones of touching humility he prayed, evening after evening, when leading the family devotions, "If there were a kindness we might have done to anyone, and have left undone, or might have done it in a kindlier manner, O Lord, forgive us, and enable us to be more thoughtful for others for the future." The influence of his character and life made itself felt amongst his servants; and great was their reverent attachment to their master.

On March 18, 1885, Lord Cairns came to London to support Lord Shaftesbury's amendment with reference to Lord Thurlow's resolution in favour of opening the Natural History Museum, Kensington, on Sunday afternoons. But when the time came, Lord Shaftesbury was ill, to the deep regret of everyone within and without the House of Lords; and thus he was prevented from speaking for the cause so near his heart, because it concerned the honour of the Lord of the Sabbath, and likewise no less concerned the working men, whose day of rest was thereby imperilled. Thus it devolved upon Lord Cairns to move the amendment, standing in the name of Lord Shaftesbury, which he did in a masterly speech. The amendment was put, and carried unanimously; and so that steadfast and devoted friend of the English Sabbath, for the preservation of which he had been working diligently even during his illness, won his victory "by the good hand of his God," and through the voice of his friend.

Lord Cairns presided at the meeting of the Church Missionary Society in Exeter Hall, on March 24, "for considering the claims of the Heathen and Mohammedan world." Little did those who heard him then, pleading that the people who walk in darkness might see a great light, think that they were listening for the last time to the deep earnest tones of that melodious voice, or that the concluding thought in that noble speech would, within eight days, be repeated by his dying lips: "It is our great work here to follow in the steps of our great Master."

The next day Lord and Lady Cairns returned to Bournemouth, trusting that he would regain his health and strength; but on the following morning, whilst out riding, he was caught in a severe storm, and the chill that followed brought back some of the anxious features of a previous illness. In the night of March 31, alarming symptoms began to appear, and the following morning his beloved ones were called together for earth's last farewell. Our country was losing one of the ablest of her sons, whilst his life had only reached the mellowed ripeness of its prime. He might have looked forward to many more years during which he might again have been a trusted counsellor of the Queen, whom he reverenced with devoted loyalty, and a leader in the affairs of the nation, to whose service he had dedicated his life; but no word of regret for life cut short, or of desire that it should be prolonged, was heard from those fast-closing lips. For many hours he had been unable to speak, but every faculty of his gifted mind remained perfectly clear to the very last. Only half an hour before his departure he spoke in a clear, full voice, words of faith in Christ, of peace through Christ, of witnessing for Christ, and of life with Christ.

He was surrounded by those whom he loved; and they watched beside him almost as in a dream, so suddenly had the dread sorrow entered into their home. "These were his last words," wrote his tenderly-loved eldest daughter:—"'Being justified by faith, we have peace with God, through our Lord Jesus Christ.' Our one object should be to testify our love to Him. God help us all in this room, and everyone else, to live in this faith, and to die in this faith, for Jesus Christ's sake. This is the only faith to live and die in." Then, after pausing for some time, his voice rang out, 'God so loved the world, that He gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have eternal life — eternal — ETERNAL life.' And yet again, after a long pause, we heard him faintly say, 'It is necessary for each one of us to follow in the steps of our great Master...Let nothing come between us and this.' Then he leaned his head on my mother's shoulder, and fell asleep in Jesus—'The life of them that believe, and the resurrection of the dead.'"

Thus was the nation bereft of a Christian statesman, a large-hearted philanthropist, an upright lawyer, an eminent judge, and one of the most distinguished of its Lord Chancellors. Widespread and sincere was its mourning for such a loss. The name and fame of Earl Cairns will long be fragrant in its best and happiest memory.

THE WITNESSING CHURCH.—3.

A MISSIONARY SERMON

By the late Rev. JOHN HARRIS, D.D.

"Ye are my witnesses, saith the Lord, that I am God."—Isa. xliii. 12.

If the design of the Christian Church be essentially that of a missionary witness, we may expect to find that every page of its history illustrates and corroborates this truth. No law of nature can be obeyed without advantage to him who obeys it, nor violated, without avenging itself, and vindicating its authority. The same is true of the laws of the Christian Church. And accordingly, we find—secondly, that in every age it has prospered or declined just in proportion as it has fulfilled or neglected this primary law of its constitution. This might be demonstrated by an induction of the great facts of its history. But on an occasion like the present, we must confine ourselves to general remarks.

And here, need I remind you that the period of its first, its greatest activity, was the season of its greatest prosperity; that it expanded without the aid of any of man's favourite instrumentality—learning, eloquence, wealth, or arms; that it achieved its triumphs in the face of it all; that though persecution ten times kindled her fires, the blood of the Church ten times put them out; that it saw some of its bitterest foes become its champions and martyrs, and new territories constantly added to its domains; that its progress from place to place was marked by the fall of idol temples; the banners of the Cross floated over the thrones of idolatry, and God caused it to triumph in every place? And why all this, but because the Church was acting in character, answering its end, fulfilling its office, as the witness of Christ to the world.

Oh! had we witnessed the activity of its first days, had we heard only of its early history and triumphant progress from land to land, how naturally might we ask, "How long was the Church in completing a universal conquest? At what precise period did India embrace the faith of Christ? How long was it before China was evangelised? Was there not a year of jubilee on earth, when the Gospel had been preached to the last of the species; and in what year did it occur?" Alas for the Church, that these inquiries should sound so strange! and alas for the world! and alas, too, that the most striking historical illustrations of the design of the Church should be those drawn from its neglect of that design!

Need I remind you that the cessation of its activity was the cessation of its prosperity? From the moment the Church lost sight of its appropriate character, it began to lose ground to the world. Its members, instead of witnessing for God, began to bear false witness against each other. When it ought to have been the almoner of God to the world, it became the great extortioner, absorbing the wealth of the nations. When it ought to have been the centre whence radiated the light of life, it was the focus drawing to itself the learning and the vain philosophy of heathenism. When it ought to have been the birthplace of souls, it was the grave of piety, so that in order to live it was necessary to leave it. When its members should have been the peacemakers of the world, it was a camp—the great school of war. When it should have been checking political ambition, it has been used as the great engine of States. When to the world, it has itself been a great martyrium, in which to witness for God was to burn. And the strength of the Church, which should have been all put forth in aggressive efforts, has been wasted in the strife of eternal discords.

What was the history of the Christian Church—what has been the history of any branch of that Church, when it has once lost its essential aggressive character, but the closing scenes of Judaism enacted over again? What do we see, in such a case, but the spirit of piety displaced by the spirit of discord? Scribes, Pharisees, and Sadducees—the proud, persecuting, and worldly, among its members? The great doctrines of grace supplanted by outward forms? What do we see but the Son of God rejected, betrayed for money, deserted by his professed disciples, delivered into the hands of his enemies, receiving the mockery of homage, crucified afresh, and put to an open shame? What, then, do we see in that Church but fearful signs of approaching judgments? till at length, when it ought to have been vanquishing the world, the world, like the Roman army, advances, besieges, and destroys the Church.

But as every departure of the Church from its aggressive design is sure to be avenged, so every return to that character has been divinely acknowledged and blessed. Had we no facts at hand to prove this, the calls which our Lord gave to the seven Asiatic churches to repeat their first works, and his promises of prosperity if they did so, would lead us to infer it; the uniformity of the Divine procedure would warrant us to expect it; the very return itself, implying, as it would, a Divine influence, would itself be a proof of it. But facts are at hand. The history of every Protestant Christian Church in Britain, during the last fifty years, demonstrates that every return to spiritual activity is, in so far, a return to Divine prosperity. Ascertain the measure of holy activity and devotedness in any Church, and you have ascertained the measure of its internal prosperity. So that a person might at any time safely say, "Tell me which branch of the Christian Church is the most Scripturally active and aggressive in its spirit, and I will tell you which is the most prosperous."

And the reason of this is sufficiently obvious. The planet is then moving in its appointed orbit, the Church is then moving in a line with the purposes of Omnipotence, and in harmony with its own principles. If, before, it has been hampered with forms, customs, and corruptions, at every effort which it now makes to move, some portion of these old incrustations of evil fall off; a desire to advance aright sends it to consult the Word of God; a concern to retrieve its past indolence fills it with a zeal that calls on "all men everywhere to repent;" the conversions which ensue furnish it with the means of enlarging its sphere of activity. The existence of all this both proves the presence of the Divine Spirit in the midst of it, and leads it to earnest cries for still larger effusions of his influence; and thus by action and reaction, an increase of its prosperity leads to importunate prayer for larger impartations of the Spirit, and larger impartations of the Spirit necessarily produce an increase of Divine prosperity.

Brethren, look at the Christians and Christian denominations of Britain at present, and say, what but their activity for God, and the salutary effects of that activity on themselves, constitute the sign

Take away this, and what single feature would remain on which the spiritual eye could rest with pleasure? Their orthodoxy? That would be their condemnation: for, if their creed be scriptural, activity for God is necessary, if only to make them consistent with themselves. The numbers they include? the world outnumbers them; and it is only by their aggressive activity, blessed by God, that they can hope to keep their disproportion from increasing. Their liberality? Apart from this Christian activity, where would be the calls on that liberality? It is this which brings it into exercise, and by exercise augments it. Their union with each other? This activity for enlarging the kingdom of Christ is almost the only bond which, at present, does unite them; take away this, and almost the last ligament of their visible union would be snapped. Their spirit of prayer? That has been called into exercise almost entirely by means of their Christian activity; for, feeling the utter insufficiency of their own endeavours, they have earnestly entreated God to make bare his arm in their behalf.

Their aggressive spirit, then, in the cause of human salvation, whether at home or abroad, forms, at present, the principal sign and means of their visible prosperity. Amidst scenes of political strife, it has brought to them visions of a kingdom which is not of this world. Amidst scenes of ecclesiastical discord, it has provided one standard around which all can rally against the common foe. Amidst the icy selfishness of the world around, it has called forth warm streams of Christian liberality. It has given employment to energies which would otherwise have been wasted in the arena of angry controversy. It has given a heart to the Church, stirred its deepest sympathies for the world, brought large accessions to its numbers, enlarged its views, and brightened its visions, of the reign of Christ, filled many of its members with a sense of self-dissatisfaction, of utter dependence on God, of aching want and craving desire for something more, and something better, than it yet possesses; so that its loudest prayers are prayers for the promised outpouring of the Holy Spirit: from all of which we infer that a full return in faith and prayer to the aggressive design of the Christian Church would be a full return to its first prosperity.

RETURNING ISRAEL.

Mr. W. Greene sends us the following extracts of a private letter, from a friend at Jerusalem:—

Many striking changes have taken place, during the last four years, in Jerusalem and through the land. Each day sees an increase in the Jewish inhabitants of Palestine. No matter what port or other regulations are made for their exclusion, or temporary stay, still they come and remain. Houses are being built up by hundreds.

Last spring I made a visiting tour to their eight or nine agricultural colonies, scattered through the land, and was delighted at what I saw in many of them. Several of them are soundly prosperous in material things. They have taken hold, with brave hearts, of the task of making the land bloom again, and God is acknowledging and blessing their labour.

It is a glorious time. The plans of God are hastening to an end. The outward signs keep pace with the work He is doing in the hearts of his children. The change will come suddenly, for that is what compels men to acknowledge

THE JUBILEE YEAR.

"Then shalt thou cause the trumpet of the Jubilee to sound on the tenth day of the seventh month; in the Day of Atonement shall ye make the trumpet sound throughout all your land.

"And ye shall hallow the fiftieth year, and proclaim liberty throughout all the land unto all the inhabitants thereof: it shall be a Jubilee unto you; and ye shall return every man unto his possession, and ye shall return every man unto his family."—Lev. xxv. 9, 10.

The Jubilee Year! the Jubilee Year!
The bondman rejoices to hail it near;
Sevenfold Sabbath, and Year of Grace,
The burdened, and weary, and poor, to bless.

'Tis the Day of Atonement! The utmost bound
Of Israel's land hears "the joyful sound"
Of the silver trumpet, which, loud and clear,
Proclaims the gladsome Jubilee Year.

Fifty years' burden of sorrow and wrong
Falls from their shoulder, and homeward they throng
To their fathers' possessions, their childhood's home,
Like doves to their windows, they come, they come.

The fraud and the folly, the struggle and strife,
Of half-a-century's human life—
The usurer's riches, the poor man's cares,
Are all dissolved by this Year of years.

To Moses Jehovah rehearsed the tale
Of the glories hidden within the vail;
In Jeshurun's ears did their king recount
The things he had seen in the holy mount:

Shadows on earth of the things above,
The Father's grace, and the Brother's love;
Promise of glorious things to come,
The enduring substance, the Heavenly Home.

Deliverer, Jesus, my Friend—in Thee,
Jubilee, Sabbath, and Home, I see:
Thou hast wearily laboured that I might rest;
Thy soul was afflicted, and I am blest.

The atonement is made; and the trumpet's voice
Bids every sinner "Rejoice! Rejoice!"
The Gospel proclaims an eternal release,
And bids the debtor go home in peace.

O God, for grace not to set our love
On the earthly things, but the things above!
For while the Jubilee year draws nigh,
They lessen in value, and fade, and die.

In a little while shall the firmament ring
With the trumpet that heralds earth's patient King,
Who has sat so long at his Father's side,
That the world may know how He loved and died.

What then shall profit the stores of wealth,
Whether justly gotten or gained by stealth:
When every object of man's desire,
In the flaming flood rising ever higher,
Proclaims our God a consuming fire?

Enter thy chamber, and safely hide
In the riven Rock, in thy Saviour's side;
Escape for thy life! to the mountain haste!
Till all the sorrows be overpast.

The anguished earth is expecting the sound,
And the creature cries from the cursèd ground:
"Thou risen Lord, by thy brethren slain,
Come, bless the world with thy righteous reign."

But man, whose nature He deified,
To his Brother, who sits at Jehovah's side,
Cries out in his madness, "Away! away!
Let me eat the husks of the swine to-day."

Oh, charm him wisely, Almighty Love,
Let thy Spirit's breath o'er his heart-strings move;
Let the listening angels hear him cry,
"To my Father's house I will turn and fly."

O Lord, from sin set our spirits free,
And quickly come for thy Bride—and me;
And every soul of thy loved ones bring,
To share the throne of our Saviour-King.

BEN HOGAN and the MINERS.

(From "Eastward Ho.")

If I have made it clear that the Western miner's life is a hardening and demoralising one, the difficulties of Christian missions among them will be obvious, and the success of the very simple one I now relate will be appreciated by those interested in the lives of these singularly interesting men.

I met the Miners' Evangelist face to face at mid-day, walking up our steep, unpaved main street, and I wondered whose were the stalwart, muscular limbs, and shrewd, coarse face of the rough-looking stranger, with the keen eyes and firm mouth, reminding me of an old print of Martin Luther, if one could imagine the great Protestant champion with trooper's moustachios. From his appearance I saw at once that he was a rough man of the people, and a Western American, but I could not guess his occupation. Then I heard a miner delightedly recognise a renowned champion pugilist, and the news spread rapidly that the famous "Ben Hogan" had come, and a good free fight was expected. But the champion boxer disappointed the boys by the astonishing form of his freely-scattered invitations, personally given. He sought and found them where we could not search, entering their worst haunts, in season and out of season. Then he descended the mines, and toiled up the bleak hill-side, where the bright-eyed little chipmunk peeped out of their holes, through the sage-brush, to see the tall stranger stoop to enter log-cabin and shanty and hut. He asked all whom he met to come and hear a word he had to say to them next Sunday evening, in the Theatre. It was "rough on the boys" (as they said) to have their pet pugilist turn preacher! But a general conviction was abroad that they would go, if only from curiosity, to hear their visitor. Another wave of disappointment swept over the roughest in camp when Ben refused inviting offers of free drinks of "eye-openers," "corpse-revivers!" "mile-off-whiskey" (to be scented a mile off), and "rattlesnake gin," avowing himself a strict teetotaler, and they began to feel he was a "social fraud."

Entrance to his mission service was to be free to all, the hour being fixed to accommodate the miners as they left their day's work. Our missionary was a man of a resolute and broad mind, earnestly desirous of helping any influence, however eccentric or "unorthodox," which might get at the least get-at-able element in our midst. He therefore told us in church that he should close St. John's that special Sunday evening, and offer his friendly support and co-operation to Ben, and he advised his little congregation to put aside prejudice and conventional feeling, and attend the revival meeting. The Dissenting minister did the same. Of course, some were shocked and aggrieved, and people who seldom or never went to church were loudly indignant at the "vulgar bad taste of it all." But all really interested in the miners—not as money-getters, but as men and brothers—agreed that Ben should have a fair chance, where others had failed, and they energetically helped to spread and back his invitations, and promised to help to lead the hymn-singing. The attitude taken by our Church and the Methodists made an excellent impression on the miners, and was gratefully acknowledged by the new missioner. The evening came all too quickly for the few earnest preparatory workers. But the miners responded well to their vigorous appeals to come and give Ben Hogan a fair, quiet hearing. So dense a crowd packed the rough theatre that even stairs and entrances were blocked long after every seat was filled. On the stage sat Ben Hogan, the Episcopal and Dissenting missionaries on either side of his desk, on which lay Bible and hymn-book. Cheap editions of selected hymns, Moody and Sankey, were liberally supplied. When the noise of the miners' inrush was stilled, Ben briefly called upon our clergyman to open the meeting, which was done with some Church collects, the Confession, and the Lord's Prayer. Then a hymn was given out:—

> What a friend we have in Jesus!
> All our sins and griefs to bear;
> What a privilege to carry
> Everything to God, in prayer!

Then an extempore prayer by the Methodist minister, and the hymn

> Hasten, sinner, to be wise;
> Stay not for the morrow's sun.
> Wisdom, if you still despise,
> Harder is it to be won.

Then a chapter, which the ex-pugilist read aloud, with evident difficulty at the longest words, from Romans viii.

And then, coming forward to the centre of the footlights, standing facing the dense crowd, with folded arms—a picture of remarkable athletic strength and vigour—Ben Hogan addressed the "boys," and, after his first words of thanks for their attendance, was listened to with breathless interest—every eye fixed on him through a long, exhaustive address. He said he had a story to tell them, which would interest many there who had known him as another man, and "it wouldn't hurt the others to listen." He then gave a long, graphic description of his life as a prize-fighter, interesting them at once—indeed, he was listened to throughout with absolute attention. He gave them minute technical details of his training, which now and again raised loud laughter; of his successful career, of his speedy falling into the fast, drinking, vicious ways of his class. He told of his attendance, from curiosity, "just as most of you have come to-night, boys," at a "revival meeting;" of his gradual "conversion," first to temperance principles, then, at last, to the steady Christian life. Then of his settling down as a married man, in a simple, poor, but happy home, with wife and child, working at anything for an honest living, against the jeers and scoffs of old patrons and comrades; of his struggles with poverty and sickness, upheld by the sense of right and the gentle ties of home-love; of his feeling impelled to go and speak to the dwellers in the "Cities of Destruction," whence he had fled; of how he had gone from camp to camp, "with all the Lord's armour on," just to tell the miners of the sure end of such lives as his had been, unless they turned at once, as Christian had turned, and listened to those who loved them in the old homes, in the old, far-off days. Their voices spoke to them now again, through his calling them to "Repent and be saved." In terribly forcible, earnest language he denounced the vices of the camp life: the three demons of drink, gambling, profanity—three big steps down the road to ruin.

His strong, deep voice rose and fell with his emotion striving to express its volcanic force through his rugged, homely words and emphatic accompanying gestures. He called them his brothers, one and all—his dear, erring, wandering brothers. He begged them not to go on breaking the hearts of those who had loved them—of mothers and wives and sisters—who loved them still. He had done it, and knew how hard it was to turn before it was too late. "Mend your ways! Be strong men! not cowards, led by every vain deceit of camp life!" he almost shouted, imploringly. "Come home! come home!" flinging out his open arms towards them, as if, with a gesture of inimitable spontaneous longing, he would draw them out of "their deep seas of sin and trouble on to the safe rock of salvation." His eloquence was the irresistible earnestness of his appeal, the realistic truth of the experiences from which he drew his moral arguments, and this fairly swamped its illiterate, or illogical failings. Then suddenly he dropped on his knees, and, with closed eyes and folded hands, he prayed aloud for them—such a prayer!—his whole earnest, uncultured, brave, simple soul in every rugged word. He asked forgiveness for the harm his past example had done; he prayed not only for their souls for Heaven, but for "their lives," their precious lives to-day—so wasted, wrecked, and useless. He prayed that they might that night be given back "to You, Brother Jesus, who bought them all with Your own precious blood—to You Brother Jesus, who need them, and art standin outside the doors of their hearts now, knocking loudly for them!" And the rough miners knelt in silence, a great crowd of bowed heads; they knelt at Ben Hogan's feet as little children kneel at their mother's knees. His terrible earnestness, the agonised entreaty and grief, and yearning love in his voice; the deep, sobbing breath which shook his "Amen," were in themselves great powers. A low, intense wave of responsive ejaculatory murmurs, half-suppressed sobs and groans, showed how the miners understood that pleading prayer, and that their hearts had been reached at last. Then, rising, Ben Hogan gave out a hymn, which was sung as I have never heard a hymn sung before or since. It went straight home—it was the story of each rough life there; for, like the earth and stone-crusted ore of their gold and silver mines, the miners' hearts were sterling metal, though encrusted with the vicious habits of their class, buried beneath the soil of our neglect—the shame of our indifference. And Ben's true words were as the smelting fires through which the dross was to be burnt away and their purification accomplished. Grey-bearded reprobates, side by side with young drunkards and gamblers, sang, some in broken voices, all with their hearts and souls, the words of the simple hymn—

Where is my wand'ring boy to-night—
  The boy of my tend'rest care—
The boy that was once my joy and light,
  The child of my love and prayer?

Chorus:

Oh! where is my boy to-night?
  Oh! where is my boy to-night?
My heart o'erflows—for I love him, he knows—
  Oh! where is my boy to-night?

In another brief, rugged address, Ben Hogan brought those words home. He painted the contrast between the life of the godly, sober, honest worker and that of the drunken, reckless sinner. He asked the "boys" to choose which life should be theirs. Then it would be with them, as the hymn he now gave out told them

I am resting so sweetly in Jesus now:
  I sail the wide sea no more;
The tempests may sweep o'er the wild, stormy deep,
  I am safe, where the storms come no more.

After the Methodist minister had offered the final prayer and blessing, the missioner asked those who wished to change their lives to stay behind and talk freely with him—he was at their service all night if they needed him—and to come up to his desk and take the pledge at once.

As I left the theatre a long, quiet file of miners passed from their seats to the stage to sign the temperance papers, and Ben was in the thick of his noble work. Driving up the hill in the mule-drawn express waggon, it was strange and hopeful to note the Sabbatical desertion of saloons and closing of stores, and the one thought absorbing me was the hope that the good influences of to-night would be not emotional and evanescent, but permanent and solid, like the missioner's convictions. The next day I was delighted to hear that so many of the boys had assured Ben of their wish to begin amended lives, and had so earnestly begged him to stay in their midst to help their newly-formed resolves, that he had engaged the theatre for his addresses every night that week. It ended in his staying three weeks, so loath were his hearers to let him go, always speaking to a dense crowd. He had to promise to make their settlement the headquarters of his simple mission for a year, going thence to other mining camps. The men got up a collection voluntarily for the board and lodging expenses of "The Evangelist of Butte," as they called him, and thanked him heartily for agreeing to their plan. Soon good promise was given that the work so strangely begun would last; for the saloon and bar-owners held an angry meeting to consult as to what steps they must take to guard off bankruptcy, so greatly did their gains fall off, and many helplessly decided the matter by closing and packing off to other more congenial camps where no miners' evangelists and broad-minded Church missionaries could so unkindly combine against rich proprietors for the sake of reckless, lawless miners. Of course, the conversions were not so missioner desired, but this fact proved the solidity of the effect produced on many; and never again did the same tide of godless, immoral living swamp the camp as before Ben's arrival. For, as Adam Bede says, "A good solid bit of work lasts, if it's only laying a floor down. Somebody is the better for it being done well besides the man as does it."

Many kept the pledge, and many broke it; and there was one sad breakdown when, in Ben's temporary absences on one of his mission tours, a pugilist—by no means a "converted" one—visited the camp, and so revived old tastes and prejudices that, alas! the "boys" attended in crowds a free fight of so brutalising a kind that in the end strong reaction set in again. Ben's words, taking them behind the scenes in his graphic, homely descriptions of the pugilist's life, were recalled; ruinous betting disenchanted many, and the frightful intemperance and quarrelsome ways of brutal pugilists made them good texts for Ben's denunciatory discourses on his return, and the delinquent "boys" were soon shamed back into order; but it had been a terrible lapse into old ways, and its consequences saddened many. Miners so often migrate from one camp to another, in search of higher wages, that this changing feature of their lives is disheartening to the mission worker.

Ben Hogan's stay, like his work, was, perforce, therefore, for a season; but, wherever his hearers went, they carried away with them the remembrance of his burning words of faith in God, of love for his fellow-man, of his brave, practical work in their midst, and would be the better for it. He truly cared for his rough brothers, and understood them, being himself a rough working-man. Knowing that life was all too short for such work as his, he let not "his purpose fade, he left no task undone," and set them an impressive example of the power of simple earnestness in well-doing not likely soon to be forgotten by anyone who gratefully rejoiced to have taken part, as I was permitted to do, in the memorable mission of the Evangelist of Butte.

THE BOYS' BRIGADE.

THIS is the title of a movement which was started in Glasgow in 1884, and which has already reached from Wick (in the extreme north) to Penzance. It is simply a means to retain the lads from twelve to seventeen who break away from the Sunday-school, and its success may be measured by the number of boys at present enrolled—6022.

One hour during a week evening is devoted to a short service and drill, but the principal work is a Bible-class on Sabbath evening.

We welcome the movement quite as much on behalf of the teachers, as for the sake of the lads. It presents the opportunity for Christians in the volunteer force to consecrate their training to the service of God. The officers of the four London companies are nearly all members of the London Scottish. How much scope there is in London for its volunteers to become good soldiers for Jesus Christ by training the older lads of the ragged schools in habits of obedience, discipline, and Christian manliness!

Friends who wish for details should communicate with Mr. W. A. Smith, 22, West Nile-street, Glasgow.

EAST LONDON EMIGRATION.—By means of the East London Family Emigration Fund, in the management of which the late Lady Hobart for many years took so active a part, 125 emigrants were last year sent to Canada. The emigration season has now commenced, and many working-men, with good characters, are earnestly seeking help to enable them to go out to a land, where, as so many friends testify, persons "cannot help getting on if only they will work and are steady." In describing what she witnessed during a visit to the homes of many who had emigrated to Canada, Lady Hobart wrote: "It was really delightful to see how happy the people were; the steady, quiet, family life, and cheerfulness, and such safe caring for the children. How different from their former lot in East London!" A strong recommendation of the association is that working expenses are almost nil, amounting in one year to merely 5s. 8d.! ANGELS UNAWARES.

In a recent meeting, at the Aldersgate-street Young Men's Christian Association, a City manufacturer stated that some time since he was in great distress and anxiety. It was pointed out to him that God had said, "Call upon Me in the day of trouble; I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify Me." Acting on the suggestion, he and his wife did call upon the Lord, who abundantly answered; and praise and gladness filled their hearts and their home. Just at this time a conference of one of the religious bodies was being held in the neighbourhood of their house, and, accommodation for the delegates being solicited, they offered to receive two. Only one came, and he a Scandinavian. He proved to be a man of beautiful Christian character.

Just at this time, having received the Lord into their own hearts, these friends were greatly exercised about the needs of the world. It suddenly occurred to them that, close at home, were the hands working in their city factory. Having greatly enjoyed the conversation of his Swedish guest, it occurred to the employer that he would ask the men and women and young people in the factory if they would like to hear his friend give a short address. They replied, "Yes; they had no objection." So he came and told them, somewhat diffidently in his broken English, something of his own spiritual experience. During the day a petition, numerously signed, was presented from the operatives, asking that the Swedish gentleman would address them again the next morning. He gladly responded, and this time, being invited, he spoke with great liberty and power; he pressed home on their acceptance the Lord Jesus Christ as a personal Saviour. At the close of the address, the employer, quite unused to evangelistic work, but being very desirous to secure some immediate result from the deep impression evidently made, asked those who had enjoyed the address, and would like the speaker to come again, to testify their approval by a hearty clap. They all responded. Being thus encouraged, he asked those who would promise not to make it "hot" and disagreeable in the factory for any who desired to begin to live a Christian life, to testify their goodwill in the same way. So many heartily responded that he was encouraged to ask that any who would like to accept the Saviour, and begin the new life at once, would testify their desire by coming to the front. He was astonished at the result of his inquiry. Men and women were seen kneeling down all over the factory—at the tables and at the machines, crying for mercy and acceptance. A group of four boys, in deep earnestness, were seen kneeling together at one machine. There was no work that day, but one continuous pointing of anxious, seeking souls, to the Lord Jesus Christ in the Word of God.

Ever since that day it has not seemed out of place to commence the work in that factory with singing and prayer, and weekly meetings established for the workers have been well and heartily sustained. Certainly God's grace was manifested on this occasion out of the line of our customary notions. May its sovereignty often be manifested in many new phases in the coming days in the City of London!—Association News.

FRANCE.—Monsieur le Pasteur Lassalle is located at St. Just-en-Chaussée, and is one of two pastors having the spiritual oversight of an immense district in the Department of the Oise, extending over a distance of 200 miles. I am well acquainted with the locality, and can testify to the almost insuperable difficulties that test and try the faith of these zealous workers. For all this work there are only two pastors, a colporteur, and one schoolmaster-evangelist. With all the help these poor folk are able to supply themselves, and that received from the Societies existing in Paris, it is quite impossible to meet existing demands, while the appointment of a third pastor to assist in this itinerant mission work—pressingly needed as it is—is quite impossible without outside assistance.

THE GOSPEL for the WORLD.

ROUSING THE SCOTTISH CHURCHES.

EDINBURGH.

Moving from town to town, one is rejoiced, in these bright spring days, to find the farmers busy casting their seed into the soil, now released from the chilling bondage of winter. For the husbandmen this is eminently the season of hope and faith, as well as unremitting toil. Having broken up the fallow ground, he is scattering with a generous hand, and covering in, the corn, in the confident assurance that summer suns will shine and rains will fall, and the autumn time will bring its rich reward of harvest plenty. Which things are a figure of the spiritual processes at work, in connection with the missionary campaign. In past months and years the evangelist has been putting in the Gospel plough, and awaking many from cold indifference and unconcern. The breath of God has been blowing on the people and preparing them to receive the good seed of the kingdom. During their brief stay in the beautiful Scottish capital, the three missionary evangelists have been very busy. They have conferred with the pastors, seeking to awaken their interest and enlist their powerful aid in embuing the churches with the missionary spirit. They have addressed large gatherings of young women and young men, affectionately beseeching them to consecrate the dew of their youth to the noblest of all ends—the gospelising of the heathen at home and abroad. They have spoken to mixed assemblies, setting forth the duty and privilege of every believer to be a fellow-worker with God, and pressing home the need for an entire consecration of heart and life. Apart altogether from its direct results in the increase of foreign workers, this movement ought to do something in raising the tone and standard of Christian life among the churches. The audiences have been fairly good, certainly not so good as they should have been, considering the magnitude and importance of the subject. No help has been afforded by the Edinburgh daily press, though the meetings were well advertised. I have not seen in the intelligence columns of any of them a line to indicate that such a movement was in progress. Religious matters, it would seem, are poorly represented just now in the press of the Capital. The leading journal seldom loses an opportunity of satirising evangelical doctrines and their advocates, while the new paper The Scottish Leader does not, I understand, come up to the expectations formed with respect to it.

THE DOOM OF THE UNBELIEVING HEATHEN.

In several of his addresses Rev. J. Hudson Taylor has given out very plainly his interpretation of Scripture teaching on this subject. Many people, he said, say it is a serious question, whether we are doing any good at all by going to the heathen. Are we not increasing their responsibility and their guilt? They are not responsible now because they have never had the offer of the Gospel. Are we not putting them in a worse position than before? Such are the objections that are urged to missions. We need to take all our thoughts about God and his relation to the world from the only book that is authoritative. But taking that as an argument we reply, if it were worth anything, we ought to carry it to its logical issue, and say, What a pity it was that the Gospel ever came into the world at all, putting people in a worse position than before. If we consider it in that way we see its absurdity. But let us turn to Paul's letter to the Romans, and see what God says about the position of the heathen. The Apostle says, "The wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men." You think, perhaps, that no doubt there is far more in London, Liverpool, or Manchester. Do you think Bombay, and Calcutta, and Pekin, have got none? Some of us do not speak much of the vileness of heathendom. We do not feel called on to be the devil's reporters; we prefer to represent what God is doing. But we could tell you some fearful things about that ungodliness and unrighteousness against which the wrath of God is revealed, even though it be found in Hindoos, or Africans, or Chinamen. Some people seem to think that the heathen has a very good excuse. They have never had the Bible or heard of Jesus Christ; why, then, should they be lost? Well, God's Word says they are "without excuse." How will He deal with them? In Rom. ii. 6 we read, "God will render to every man according to his work." There will be a revelation of the righteous judgment of God in that day; He will render to every man as justice requires. There will be "indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish upon every soul of man that doeth evil, of the Jew and also of the Gentile." So you see the Gentile in his heathen darkness is not exempt. There is no respect of persons with God. "As many as have sinned without law" shall be saved, because they have no revelation? Oh no! "shall perish without law; and as many as have sinned in the law shall be judged by the law...For these having not the law are a law unto themselves." They know that the things they do are not the things they ought to do. "Is God unrighteous who taketh vengeance?" If so, "How shall God judge the world?" Yes; the heathen sin knowingly. But they do not know, as we do in Christian lands, what is the power that can deliver them. It is only as we accept Christ as our Saviour for this present life, as well as from the penal consequences of sin, that we are delivered from its thraldom. And since the heathen are so bad, the question comes, Where does the fault lie? Does not the blood-guiltiness rest on us who have in our hands the remedy, and who withhold it? If we withhold the Gospel, how shall we look in the face of the Lord—we who have disobeyed his command, we who might have gone, but have not gone, to seek and save the lost in heathen lands? How many Chinamen have told me they wished they could live different lives. They do not know where to obtain the power, but we do. How can they obtain this power unless we go and preach the Gospel to them? We do want to take to heart the Scripture statement of the position of the heathen, otherwise our efforts will be emasculated by the idea that because they have not had the Gospel therefore they are saved.

A DISOBEDIENT ARMY.

In the same address Mr. Taylor dwelt most impressively on the crime of disobedience to the plain command of God. We are all proud of our soldiers, he said. When we read the account of the wonderful charge at Balaclava, we were proud of those men who at the word of command rushed to certain destruction. We felt that Great Britain had gained fresh laurels from the valour and obedience of her sons who went straight into the jaws of death, in obedience to the order of their superiors. I hardly need to apply the lesson. We Christians are soldiers in another army. We have a Captain whose word of command has been handed down to us:—"Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature." And yet we all sit still. Imagine a general, having marshalled his forces, and brought them into the presence of the foe; he calls his officers, and directs them each to go in a particular direction, but they all decline to go: not one of them moves. What should we think of such an army? Are we not very like them? And what is the result? We are losing blessing at home. It is my solemn conviction that if we do not have a great wave of missionary revival, we, as a nation, will largely rush into infidelity. Our Master is a very wise and loving Master. He could evangelise the heathen without us, but He knows his Church cannot afford to lose the privilege of sharing in the work. It is in his love that He prompts us to go. How many churches in this land are not more than half or three-quarters full. If a large our church pews at home would soon be too small. If the foreign field had its proper hold upon us, home missions would be developed. The ends of the world are now brought to our very doors. The language is no hindrance. Still, God's people stay at home. There are thousands in this country who might go to Africa, India, South America, China, or the Continent, at their own charges and preach the Gospel. We have about thirty in the China Inland Mission, ladies and gentlemen who are thus preaching the Gospel and helping forward the work with their own private means. Why should not thousands do the same thing? You little know what a blessing you are losing by staying at home.

CHURCH DECLENSION AT HOME.

At the meeting for men held in Dr. Whyte's church, Mr. Radcliffe read a striking extract from a speech by the late Dr. Duff to the effect that if the British churches continued to spend such a large proportion as they were doing on home work, as compared with that devoted to the heathen, such criminal selfishness would result in deterioration. On this point Mr. Radcliffe referred to some statistics, supplied to him by the publishers of The British Weekly, as to the state of the major denominations in England, including the Church of England, Methodists, Independents, and Baptists. The result of these statistics he stated to be that in the case of one or two of these churches, especially one (which he did not specify) there was an absolute retreat; the number of members in 1886 was less than in 1885. Others are standing still, and none of them are keeping pace with the natural increase of population in Britain. And this, notwithstanding the vast sums that are being spent in connection with churches, besides Sunday-school effort and other volunteer agencies. So that we find the words of Dr. Duff, spoken some thirty years ago, have come to pass.

TO YOUR KNEES, O ISRAEL!

At one of the meetings in the Free Assembly Hall Mr. Radcliffe said that what we want with respect to this matter of the Gospel for the world is not so much exhortation as prayer to God that he would open our eyes, as the prophet prayed that the eyes of his young servant should be opened. Then we should see that the hosts of the Lord who are on our side are far more than the hosts of those that are against us. Oh, that at the coming Assemblies of the Presbyterian Church in this city in May there may be a great opening of the eyes of ministers, and elders, and members of the churches at these meetings; and through them to be spread over the country! Then we should get to the Second Book of the Old Testament. There would be a mighty Exodus of ministers and of people. Our eyes are closed—not by the Lord, but by Satan, so that we seem to think the Lord's house is to be built only in South Britain and North Britain, and in Protestantism. A poor miserable hut it would be, filled only with Protestant saints. If the scales were to fall from our eyes, and the mighty Spirit of God gave us willing hearts, the result would not only be the seeing of the Lord's command, but the doing of it with alacrity. It would be a glorious exodus that would bring blessing to far-off parts of the earth; but you cannot bless Africa from Edinburgh without a blessing coming straight back to Edinburgh again.

MR. CLARKE'S FERVID APPEALS

have been thoroughly in line with the addresses of his companions. To the men assembled in Free St. George's Church he addressed a strenuous exhortation to manliness of life and action. "Quit you like men and be strong." It is a slur upon Christian manhood that in Christian effort of all kinds there are nearly one hundred women engaged for one man. At the noon prayer-meeting in the Free Assembly Hall, on April 4, Mr. Clarke presided; in his address he dwelt on the powerlessness of much of the Christian life of to-day, and the encroachments of worldliness. He described the West-end society in London as being honeycombed with infidelity and with disregard of Christian principle. While the people are thus living for the gratification of the moment, many of their spiritual teachers are unfaithful to their trust and do not lift up a warning voice.

AN IMPRESSIVE MEETING.

The most impressive of the series hitherto was the closing meeting in the Free Assembly Hall on the evening of Monday, April 4. Mr. Hudson Taylor began his address with the startling statement that since the proceedings began, three-quarters of an hour before, 2700 persons had gone into eternity in Africa, India, and China; that is, at the rate of 300 in each country every fifteen minutes! Have we ever realised this solemn fact? And have we thought of the inspired words:—"If thou forbear to deliver those that are drawn unto death, doth not He that pondereth the heart consider it?" How many times has the condition of the heathen cost us a meal or a night's rest? Then Mr. Taylor referred again to the teaching of Scripture as to the fate of the unbelieving heathen. Who, he asked, are responsible for their damnation, but the Church, since God has provided a remedy? Who are starving the people, but those who are withholding the corn? Christ says, "Go ye," and we reply, "Master, we will not." Are we really half saved? For our own souls' sake we must not forget the heathen. Notwithstanding all our neglect, I believe God is going to pour out such a spirit of missionary revival as the world has not yet seen. Oh, young friends, will you not give yourselves up to your Master's service, and carry the light of the Gospel to some of those millions who are going down to unblessed graves? The evangelisation of the world is a thing that comes very near home. Do you wonder that the children, even of godly people, are growing up to be ungodly? Our children look at us not as we are on platforms, but as we are at home, and if they see that we are not faithful to our Master, is it wonderful that they do not believe in our religion? If the Christian Church would but take up her true position, five years would not pass before the whole heathen world would be reached.

In supplementing these solemn and searching words, Mr. Radcliffe told of some who were with him during his visit to Scotland two years ago. Stanley Smith and Charles Studd are now at work in China, and the former has already had the joy of baptizing sixty-two Chinamen, besides starting an opium refuge. General Haig has since been through great parts of Arabia, like Caleb spying out the land, and seeking to find suitable spots for missionary effort in connection with the Church Missionary Society—and this though he is almost a confirmed invalid, the result of jungle fever in India. Among other interesting facts mentioned by Mr. Radcliffe was the going out, some time since, of two Norwegian young women, to whom the missionary call had come. What an example for their more highly favoured British sisters! Then a very promising effort is about to be begun in the region of the Soudan territory, 3000 miles long by 700 broad, and almost unexplored. It has a population of 50 millions, probably far more, and not a single missionary. Some young fellows from Cambridge are going into this unknown country without being sent, except by the Holy Ghost. One of these attended a recent Conference at Ramsgate. He seemed quite a stripling, and had very little to say about himself; but when he spoke to the people, it seemed as if the Holy Ghost were moving in the meeting. He had already penetrated 500 miles into the interior of Africa, beyond where any white man had gone. He is going out with the view of supporting himself, saying to a chief, "I will build for you a better house than you have got," and afterwards going on to another place, teaching the people there useful arts, and at the same time preaching the blessed Gospel. Before closing this interesting statement Mr. Radcliffe called for a move to the front on the part of Scottish young men, hoping that some devoted David Livingstone would be empowered by God for the foreign field. The name of Livingstone is one to conjure with in Scotland, and on several occasions has been used with much effect the mention of his consecrated life and service for his beloved Africa, devotion to whose interests he sealed with his life-blood.

After some earnestly solemn words from Mr. Clarke, at his invitation a considerable proportion of the audience stood up as indicative of their desire to be wholly consecrated and used of God, as He might lead. An after-meeting followed, to which many remained, and listened with all-absorbing attention to words of wise, affectionate counsel by Mr. Hudson Taylor. From the teaching of the Word, fortified by incidents in his own experience, he exhorted all to take every matter in their life, big or little, to God, in the confident belief that He would point out the plain path to be followed, and would provide all things necessary for the fulfilment of his commands. A holy awe seemed to brood over the company, the Spirit of God being manifestly at work. At the close of this second meeting several lingered yet longer, and conversed with the evangelist as to the things that had been spoken. Probably that meeting will have the honour of supplying some of this year's tribute of a hundred recruits for the Inland Mission.

HELENSBURGH.

Little need be said about the one day's visit to this pretty town on the Clyde. Meetings were held afternoon and evening. At the former meeting Mr. Taylor and Mr. Clarke addressed Christians earnestly as to the duty and privilege of a fully consecrated life; the rest of soul that comes from recognising the constant care of the Good Shepherd, and the fruitfulness of a life completely under his control. The evening meeting, at which all three brethren spoke, was devoted to an exposition of the claims of the great heathen world on the best devotion of the Christian Church, and the spiritual destitution there that so vividly contrasts with the excess of Gospel light at home.

SOLDIERS IN CAIRO.—In a letter just to hand a Christian soldier stationed at Cairo says that he and a few other Christian comrades are endeavouring to provide a place of recreation for the soldiers stationed there away from the wine-shops, &c. They have a reading-room and coffee-bar, and meetings are also held. Much good might be done among their other comrades if they had the means to carry on the work. After Mr. Caine's revelations concerning Cairo, some of your readers may perhaps feel an interest in our soldiers there. Papers for the reading-room would also be very acceptable. Corporal W. Moon, Ordnance Store Corps, Cairo, or myself, will gladly be mediums of communication on behalf of the work.—Yours faithfully, Geo. Holmes.

"THROUGH THE EYE TO THE HEART."—Mr. J. Downe Cox has a novel way of reaching the people. He has drawn on cloth a series of original pictures suitable for exhibition at special meetings and entertainments, whether indoors or in the open air. In the course of his addresses, which can be adopted either for adult or juvenile gatherings, Mr. Cox presents, earnestly and forcibly, the advantages and blessedness of a life of godliness, temperance, thrift, and purity, the illustrations making a lasting impression upon the minds of the hearers. During the summer months Mr. Cox goes from village to village on his tricycle, and the novelty of the pictures at once secures and arrests the attention of an audience. Anyone desiring the services of Mr. Cox during the coming season should communicate with him at once. His address is 63, Stockwell Park-road, Clapham, London, S.W.

Canon Wilberforce is expected to sail for New York, April 14, for a tour through the States and Canada. We trust he may return in renewed health and vigour.

Visitors to Malvern will be glad to know that the Worcestershire Baptist Association have commenced holding services every Lord's Day in the Assembly-rooms, prior to their building a chapel, and are well supplied by different ministers of the denomination.

PROPHETIC CONVENTION.

The fourth annual Convention for the Study of Prophetic Scripture, connected with the world-wide Prayer Union for the coming of the Lord, will be held on the 27th, 28th, and 29th inst., in the Conference Hall, Clapham-road, S.W. The following invitation has been issued:—

Again, dear friends in the Lord, we invite you to our annual Convention for the Study of the Prophetic Scriptures. With an ever-deepening conviction that the second mighty crisis of the world's history is at hand, and that the Lord will soon be on his way to our earth, we would direct your thoughts to the Word which He has caused to be written for our guidance in these last times. We ask you to assemble with us, that we who fear the Lord, and think upon his name, may speak one with another, and lift up our hearts with one accord to Him; that we may anticipate the presence of our King with rejoicing, and, at the same time, solemnly consider how we may abide the day of his coming. The signs of the times become more and more portentous as the years roll on. Around us lie the ruins of many a worldly institution; the fabric of society is tottering; lawlessness and insubordination are rampant; government becomes more difficult. The inventive skill, the energies, and the wealth of men are being devoted in an unwonted proportion to the preparation and munitions of war; never since there was a nation has the world been so filled with armed men. And the internal condition of the peoples is no less threatening than their external relations, for among all of them civil strife is casting a shadow of Socialism before it. There is a wide spreading of knowledge, but crime does not diminish, and infidelity is thriving. Romanism waxes stronger, and is again lifting up its head; once more the Pope is appealed to and accepted as the arbiter of nations. Moreover, a flood of Eastern Paganism is now adding to the confusions of Christendom, and many who have listened to the preaching of Christ are abandoning themselves to demonism, magic, and astrology. Meanwhile, the whole nation of the Jews is disturbed from the security of its dwelling among the Gentiles, and their return to Palestine has already commenced. Still more, a remarkable movement is going on among them, which may result in the formation of the goodly remnant of which the prophets speak. Can we compare these and many other things with what the Lord has revealed concerning the state of the world at his coming without a conviction that the acceptable year is fast drawing to its close? And is it not high time to press the study of the prophetic Scriptures upon all clergymen, ministers, Sunday-school teachers, and Christian workers of every kind, that the great event, which shall come as a snare "upon all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth," may not surprise those whom they may instruct, or, at least, not through any fault of the instructors?

We therefore affectionately invite you, dear friends, to a contemplation of God's own Word at this solemn crisis, and entreat you to bear our Conference on your hearts before Him, that He may make it a cause of blessing to many, and use it to prepare his people for the presence of their King. Yours in the hope of his coming—

E. W. Bullinger, D.D., vicar of St. Stephen's, Walthamstow.

A. R. Fausset, D.D., canon of York, vicar of St. Cuthbert's, Heworth, York.

C. Graham, Congregational Church, 2, Loftus-road, Shepherd's-bush.

G. H. Pember, Budleigh Salterton, Devon.

C. M. Pym, rector of Cherry Burton, Hull.

J. Gosset-Tanner, Emmanuel Church, Maida-hill.

F. Whitfield, vicar of St. Mary's, Hastings.

A YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN INSTITUTE has just been opened at Richmond, the project having already won the sympathy of Christian people in that neighbourhood. It had its origin in a Bible-class, conducted for some years by Mr. Head, who in speaking as to the purpose of the Institute, for some time felt to be a necessity, said this is to extend the kingdom of Christ in the hearts of the young men of Richmond, and to show that faith and trust in God constitute the true and manly life for a young man to lead. Thankfulness was expressed at the opening meeting that so many of the young men of Richmond are willing to engage in spiritual work, and for this fruit of the faithful labours of many years in the Bible-class already referred to. The Institute is in the Quadrant, at the corner of Duke-street, and will be known as the Shaftesbury Rooms.

ONE MORE DELUSION.

Added to the many delusions that have recently come before us, we have yet another of which to warn our readers. "Jegar-sahadutha" and "Mizpah" are the respective titles of two periodicals, reaching us from the Swedenborgian Free Circulating Library, to which we referred some weeks ago. Their editress, while not yet fully committed to so-called "New Church" teaching in its entirety, is sufficiently in accord with it to be adopted by the zealous agents of this false system as a co-worker toward the same end, viz., the turning of people away from the truth to give heed to fables.

This person seems to have had stored up for years a number of dreams, followed by certain hallucinations (which she calls "visions"), until, unable to contain them any longer, she brings them forth for the enlightenment of a benighted age. The immediate occasion of this was the reading of a book, the teaching of which, she informs us, "together with the Saviour's Sermon on the Mount, will form the golden tables of the law in the reign of righteousness about to commence!" Our credulous editress tells us of the "anxious interest" with which she read this book, but says, "willing as we were to accept it, there still appeared to us a want of substantial evidence. We longed to see this Divine person (the writer), and wondered greatly why, knowing our desire, she came not to satisfy it. Subsequently the following passage reassured us, 'Blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed.'"

And so this deluded woman takes a leap in the dark, believing—not a testimony from God, but, without a shadow of evidence, that of a Swedenborgian oracle; and she is emboldened by the narration of another's dreams to chronicle her own, to which her readers are now being treated in the little magazines named. She did not "try the spirits, whether they are of God," and the legitimate fruit of wilful ignorance and disregard of God's Word is being reaped by her and others, as victims of "strong delusion." She shows the breadth of her sympathy by giving the writer of "The Flying Roll" "a cordial grasp of the hand" (apparently ignorant of the fact that "the hand" of "Jezreel," its author, who was never going to die, has for some months been cold in death). She finds in his teaching "an idea singularly in sympathy with her own," that as the blood is removed from the body, "and the spiritual element substituted, pain and death would disappear."

Again, she says:—"The Bible is but the first edition of God's Word to men. Who dare say when or where that Word will end?" That Word ends with the Book of Revelation, in the last chapter of which the Lord Jesus testifieth: "If anyone shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book." "The faith," for which we are exhorted to "earnestly contend," is one which is complete, needing no further revelation, and is "once for all delivered unto the saints" (Jude, 3).

As for the dreams of these dreamers, they will end only when once their stock becomes exhausted, and they get cured of their dreaming. Plain and solemn is God's Word about all this: "I have heard what the prophets said, that prophesy lies in my name, saying, I have dreamed, I have dreamed. How long shall this be in the heart of the prophets that prophesy lies? yea, they are prophets of the deceit of their own heart; which think to cause my people to forget my name by their dreams which they tell every man to his neighbour. The prophet that hath a dream, let him tell a dream; and he that hath my word, let him speak my word faithfully. What is the chaff to the wheat? saith the Lord" (Jer. xxiii. 25, 28). God grant us in these last days of error to hold fast, and hold forth the word of life, while we let human dreams and "old wives' fables" go as so much chaff before the wind.

CONTINENTAL SCHOOLS.

Dear Sir,—Those who have paid any attention to mission work on the Continent cannot estimate too highly the references in your editorial letters from Rome to the value of evangelical schools. It needs but to see a live mission work to which such an adjunct is attached to be fully persuaded upon that point. Yet how difficult is it to get our Christian friends to apprehend the fact. In connection with the Breton Mission at Tremel, Côtes-du-Nord, France, there are two efficient "Bible" day schools, as we prefer to call them. There are forty boys attending each. The parents, mostly Catholics, highly value them, and dare the worst from the Curé to secure such a blessing for their children. But it is far easier to obtain help for the Mission, when we cite—as, thank God, we have been able to do—eighteen adult baptisms and even more conversions during the past year than, we can by recounting a year's steady work of loving teaching of God's Word, and, of course, the usual subjects which will satisfy the Government inspector. The State will not help because we insist that the teaching of the Bible shall enter largely into the curriculum.

We sadly want a school for girls as well; we have a female visitor who does a little house teaching, but we need a female teacher and helper. We should welcome some kind Christian lady who has means of her own, and is seeking a mission work near at home.

NOTES FROM LIBERIA.

Mrs. Amanda Smith, writing from Cape Palmas, expresses her warm thanks for the many copies of The Christian sent in answer to her request. She says:—

I do so much love to read them, and I have sent them far and near. They have been messages of life, light, and instruction in Gospel and Bible truth to many. I should be thankful for any more your readers can send.

Some months ago I went down the coast as far as Lagos. I had been labouring at Cape Palmas since February last year, and needed a change. I had but little rest; for the Lord opened a door for me there, and though I was weak in body, his promise was made good, "As thy day, so shall thy strength be."

The people of Lagos were most kind. I left several copies of The Christian to be distributed among the people, especially those containing articles on Popery, which is much on the increase there. I also spent five weeks at the American Baptist Mission House, where Rev. William David and his good wife were very cordial. At his request I conducted evangelistic services at his chapel, and also at the Wesleyan Chapel. These are the two largest in Lagos. At the schoolroom of the Church Missionary Society I also conducted a service for women, and gave several addresses to the young in the school of which Miss Harding was the lady principal. She had the spiritual interest and welfare of the dear women and girls at heart, and spared no pains to point them to the Lamb of God. I had wished her a long life in Africa, but she was taken ill with fever and was ordered to England, where she died shortly after her arrival. How my heart was smitten when I heard this! She, like so many of England's noble women and men, laid down her life for the evangelising of my people in Africa.

Since my return from Lagos, the Lord has given me a new field, a native town, about a mile away. I cross the river every Sabbath, and we have a very interesting Sabbath-school in each town, with from twenty-five to fifty little native boys and girls. It is remarkable how eager they are to learn, and how fast they get on. The women, too, are becoming interested. At first they would not come near, but now they listen and say, "We are glad you come and tell us about God." There is also a night school for native boys, which is doing well. The tracts and books I have received are doing a good work among the Liberians, which is preparing them to go forth among their brethren.

TRAINING THE BLIND.

The meeting at Grosvenor House, on Wednesday last week, at which the annual report of the Royal Normal College and Academy of Music for the Blind was read before a distinguished audience, was (says The Pall Mall Gazette) as interesting as it was unique. Proceedings were commenced by a musical performance, at which the pupils of Dr. Campbell gave the most satisfactory proofs of the fact that the blind, if thoroughly instructed, may become not only artistic performers but cultivated musicians. A special feature of the musical programme was the introduction of a highly-talented pupil of the Normal College, Mr. Hollins, whose rendering, together with MM. Joachim and Hausmann, of Beethoven's Trio was a marvellous performance. It was a strange and, notwithstanding its encouraging features, a pathetic sight to see the blind man at the piano, behind him two masters in the world of music to whose perfection he can never attain, though he be gifted with the same genius, on account of his sad infirmity. Behind them, half in the shade, silent, but all attention, sat Dr. Campbell, the blind principal of the college, who, by his own example, has proved that a blind man can be both a leader and teacher of the blind. In the room adjoining that where the meeting was held, some two score of blind children were busily engaged in what appeared to be to them very interesting, and what certainly was very pretty work. The girls were occupied with that useful educational toy known as Kindergarten work, and the boys in modelling the most charming little objects in putty.

The Duke of Westminster, the president of the college, opened the proceedings with a few remarks on the excellent work done at the college. His Grace was followed by Mr. Mundella, who, after referring to the noble example which Mr. H. Fawcett had set to the blind, pointed out that the college, which was begun with two pupils fifteen years ago, was now attended by one hundred and seventy pupils, and that one hundred of the pupils who had been trained at the college had, during the last year, earned no less than £10 000 by their own endeavours. There are 4000 blind persons in London alone, and from 40,000 to 50,000 in the United Kingdom, many of whom were as yet without any instruction at all. Germany had set the good example in educating its blind; there were parts of Germany in which no blind beggar is to be found anywhere, and as long as there is a blind beggar to be seen in our streets, our education of the blind will not be what it ought to be. Full support should therefore be given to this highest form of charity by which the blind are taught to become useful men and women. Mrs. Fawcett, in a short but excellent address, said that the duty of resignation was practised patiently by the blind, but that to the passive virtue of resignation the active virtue of courage and self-reliance ought to be added.

An address of particular interest was given by Dr. Joachim, who has shown his sympathy with Dr. Campbell in putting his splendid talent on many occasions at the service of the institution. He said that he had seldom had greater pleasure in joining a partner in music than on this occasion. His own career had been greatly influenced by the performances of a talented blind organist in Germany, who had first opened his eyes to see what music could be in a man's life. In his kind, genial way, the great violin virtuoso remarked that if he had the choice he would like nothing better than to teach the blind, "which, however, is not as easy as it is to play the fiddle." Mr. Henry Leslie heartily approved of the methods employed by Dr. Campbell, who did not believe in the word impossible. Several other gentlemen spoke cordially of the institution at Upper Norwood, which it need hardly be said might benefit a larger number of blind persons if the public would help to increase its funds.

TO THE OLD & NEW TESTAMENTS.

This Edition is COMPLETE and unabridged.

It has all the Words and References that were given in earlier and far more expensive Editions.

It contains 757 pages,

2,270 closely-printed columns, and about

250,000 references, with the Proper Names newly Translated by a competent Scholar. (This portion of the work is strictly COPYRIGHT, and can only appear in MORGAN & SCOTT'S EDITIONS.)

PORTABLE EDITION. 3/6

"'CRUDEN'S COMPLETE CONCORDANCE' in a well-bound and conveniently-sized volume issued at 3s. 6d., seems one of the marvels of modern book production. Messrs. Morgan & Scott's portable edition is of this class. There has been copious controversy on the merits and demerits of Cruden's great work; but we prefer to believe in Lowndes's opinion that 'Cruden's Concordance should be in every library.' It is uncommonly complete, the definitions of leading words remarkably accurate, and the references exceedingly correct."

Publishers' Circular, March 15, 1887.

"The best cheap edition of 'CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE' that we have seen is the one published by Morgan & Scott—a portable edition, clearly printed on good paper and well bound, unabridged, and with the proper names newly translated, all for 3s. 6d. Even the poorest Christian may now have a Concordance to help him in studying the Word of God with profit."

Christian Leader, Mar. 17, 1887.

Mr. C. H. SPURGEON writes:—"Your Concordance at 3s. 6d. must be a great boon to ministers. We could very well dispense with a Concordance to the Apocrypha. As in all other respects it is an unabridged Cruden, I am greatly rejoiced to see it produced for so small a sum. May you sell tens of thousands!"

"This edition contains 757 pages, 2,270 closely printed columns, and about 250,000 references, with the proper names newly translated by the Rev. Alfred Jones, M.A. This latter portion is strictly copyright, and can only appear in Messrs. Morgan & Scott's editions. Of Cruden's great work many preachers have expressed their very high opinion. Mr. D. L. Moody, after having recommended the purchase of a good Bible, advises one to get 'CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE,' and a Scripture text-book; and Mr. Spurgeon speaks of it as 'Cruden's priceless work' and as the best concordance. Messrs. Morgan & Scott's Portable Edition at 3s. 6d. is a boon indeed to poor students. The same firm issue a Popular Edition at 5s., a handsomely bound Presentation Edition at 7s. 6d., an Illustrated Edition, with 12 exquisite steel plates and six maps at 10s. 6d., and a Library Edition at the same price."—Nonconformist, March 17, 1887.

THE RAILWAY MISSION.

As an illustration of the grand work that is being done by the Railway Mission, I may mention an interesting fact told me at the recent Leicester Conference. One who works amongst the fallen had picked up a young girl who had recently been betrayed. Finding she was in great trouble he took her to his home. The next day, the girl having expressed a wish to be sent to her mother in South Wales, our friend took her to the station to see her off. While taking her ticket he noticed a man watching the girl; put her where he would, the stranger soon took up a fresh position, where he could see her.

While lifting up his heart to God, the train entered the station, and the next moment, the guard alighting, recognised our friend as one who had conducted a mission service the previous Sunday night at which he was present. Seeing him look so dejected, he asked him his trouble; a few words served to explain matters, when the guard at once took the poor girl under his protection, placed her in a compartment next to his brake, promising, on reaching Birmingham, to place her under the care of another guard, who he knew would see her safe to her journey's end.

Let us strive for the conversion of these railway men, as each one brought to Christ becomes at once the protector of the many young and friendless girls who are constantly travelling by rail.

EVANGELISATION IN SCOTLAND.

The report of the Scottish Evangelistic Association states with satisfaction that its efforts have been crowned with success. Special reference is made to the missions in Edinburgh, Dalkeith, Galashiels, Linlithgow, and Kinghorn conducted by Messrs. W. R. Lane, and Charles Inglis, and Rev. Hugh Price Hughes. Mr. Lane's work in Edinburgh in the early part of October covered the entire ground, the meetings being so arranged that each church, except one, enjoyed the privilege of five Bible lectures in the afternoons of the first week, and six evangelistic addresses on the evenings of the second. The results were highly gratifying, about one hundred anxious souls having been personally dealt with, while there were many testimonies of genuine conversion to God. The subsequent mission in Dalkeith, Linlithgow, and Kinghorn was also very greatly blessed, as was that of Mr. Charles Inglis in Galashiels, where there was a series of union meetings in connection with the Free and United Presbyterian denominations.

Mr. Hughes's mission in Edinburgh marked an epoch in the year's life of the city. During the twelve days he delivered thirty-four addresses, by which he embraced every class of the community. A large number of thanksgivings were proof that these had been fruitful in blessings for eternity.

Tent work was carried on by an arrangement with the Committee of the Border Counties' Tent Society, and the value of this form of evangelistic effort was again abundantly shown.

A most important decision is stated at the close of the report—viz., that it is intended during the ensuing summer and autumn to select from the theological halls of the University, New College, and United Presbyterian College those who have already proved themselves acceptable preachers of the Gospel, and to send them forth into the country "two and two." Great things are expected from this new departure. These messengers will doubtless receive a warm welcome from ministers and church members, a ready hearing from young men, and a far-reaching blessing to themselves and their future ministry. These students' missions will commence about the middle of May. The office of the Association is at 5, St. Andrew-square, Edinburgh. The superintendent is Dr. Moxey.

HOW A CHILD OBTAINED IT.

Mary Jones, of Ty'nyddol, was born in 1784. Her father was a poor weaver, and she herself plied the same trade all her life. Her parents were members of a small Methodist Church, set up in the neighbourhood about that time. In those days children were not allowed to come to church meetings. But Mary's mother used to take her with her when eight years old to carry the lantern before her when she went to meetings in the evening. In virtue of the service this child rendered her mother she was allowed to be an exception from other children, and was thus privileged to enter the "Society" with her mother; and not one day did she discontinue to belong to this Church militant until she was called up to the triumphant Church above seventy-four years later.

Mary was about ten years old when Rev. Thos. Charles set up one of his circulating schools at Abergynolwyn in that district, under the care of John Ellis, who also set up there a Sunday-school in connection with the day school; and, although Mary had some two miles of a stony mountain track to walk on her way thither from her home at Llanfihangel, yet was she, the inquiring girl of Ty'nyddol, one of the first and most regular scholars at both schools, as far as the poverty of her parents allowed it. She made proof in both of them that her Creator had blessed her with a mind more able than that of the generality of children of her own age in that part of the country. She distinguished herself, especially in the Sunday-school, by treasuring up in her memory, and repeating aloud, whole chapters of the Word of God, and by showing how well she understood it.

As it happened in thousands of poor homesteads in Wales in those days, when there was no Bible Society, there was no Bible at Ty'nyddol. The Bible nearest at hand that Mary could be allowed to use was in a farmhouse about two miles from her home. The kind owners of that Bible allowed her to come whenever she was minded so to do, and read it there. And she, poor little girl, walked thither every week—like a hart to the water-brooks—to read and to search it, and to learn whole chapters of it by heart for the Sunday school at Abergynolwyn. She was thus, the whole first six years of her religious course, without a Bible of her own; yet so strong was the love this poor young girl had for the Divine Book, that she continued the whole of those six years to walk to that farmhouse, in order to read this Bible thus kindly lent her. The one thing her heart longed for during those years, was to possess one whole Bible of her own. Every halfpenny and every penny she received from the neighbours for some trifling service was carefully cast into her small consecrated treasury, hoping that some happy day she might see a whole sum sufficient to enable her to buy "a Pearl of great price," which it was her one only thought to possess.

After six years of bee-like diligence in gathering together her pennies and halfpennies in her small treasury, the whole amount reached the sum which she heard was the price of the last edition of the Welsh Bible published the year before. She went to Llechwedd, to William Hugh, a preacher and an oracle in small matters in that neighbourhood, to ask him where she might buy a Bible. His answer was, that there was not a Bible for sale anywhere nearer than Bala, at Mr. Charles's; but he feared lest all the Bibles Mr. Charles had received from London had been sold months before.

Would not such an answer as this—to one who had to walk some twenty-five or thirty miles to fetch a Bible, and the uncertainty whether, after all, there would then be a Bible to be got—would not such an answer as that have been a death-blow to the zeal of an ordinary poor young girl? But the poor young girl of Ty'nyddol was not an ordinary one. Young as she was in years, poor as were her station and dress, untried and far as the way was, and strange also as the gentleman was of whom she expected so great a favour, and withal, uncertain as she was whether he would have a Bible to sell when she got there—yet so urgent, so overpowering, was Mary's desire to possess a Bible, that she resolved to risk the journey and to face all those obstacles for the sake of the Book.

One summer-like morning in the spring of the year 1800 we might have seen our brave young girl of Ty'nyddol get up at early dawn and start on her distant journey towards Bala. She had borrowed a wallet in order to bring her treasure home safe and sound, if heaven and Mr. Charles granted her desire. She had shoes to put on her feet when she reached the town of Bala; but she carried them in her wallet on her back, and walked barefooted all the way thither.

The morning was remarkably fine. A soft breeze sped her onwards with "the heartiest tenderness"—the smooth expanse of blue firmament overhead, without a cloud to wrinkle it, like the one large eye of heaven, looked down steadfastly upon her with the warmest affection. In one word, all objects and voices in creation, above her head and around her, said, as it were, with one accord, "Go forward with a good heart, thou Welsh maid! Our great Creator, who is thine also, has commanded us to use every means in our power to encourage thee on thy journey, and to assure thee that He Himself feels the deepest sympathy with the object of thy walk this day, to inquire about his Word. We have also reason to believe that in his secret designs He purposes some great event in the world, that is to follow thy journey of to-day. Go boldly forward, brave girl! with the God of the Bible, and with our eyes and our smiles on thee."

Mary arrived at Bala late in the day—too late to have an interview with Mr. Charles that night; it being one of the rules of his home-life, on account of his feeble health—"to go to bed early, and early to rise." So, in accordance with Mr. W. Hugh's direction, ere she left Ty'nyddol, she inquired for the house of David Edwards, an old and respected preacher in Bala. After he had asked and understood the object of her coming, and had heard the whole of her simple and touching story, the warm heart of the old patriarch came to feel the deepest interest in her. "Well, my good girl, it is too late for us to see Mr. Charles to-night; he is in the habit of going to bed early, but he will get up at daybreak to-morrow. Thou shalt sleep here to-night, and we shall go to him as soon as he is up in the morning, to enable thee to reach thy home to-morrow night."

SEDGLEY MISSION.

The motto of this Mission, "Jesus Only," is well exemplified in the spirit pervading its twenty-seventh report. Earnestly do the workers labour to get the people in, and with no little success, as the attendance of 60,000 persons in the course of the year at the various indoor meetings well attests Band of Hope meetings, together with various agencies for adults, are all made use of to teach the grandly simple lessons conveyed in the "Old, old story of Jesus and his love," that is full of life-giving power for old as well as young. But the necessity for the individual personal dealing of the soul with its Saviour is wisely insisted on, and the danger of dependence either on feeling or forms. Thus it is upon a sure foundation that the work proceeds, and the workers have many proofs of the presence of God in their midst, convicting and converting by his Holy Spirit.

The Sunday morning prayer-meeting and the after services are well attended. Besides these, open-air services are frequently held, with an aggregate attendance during the year of about 10,000 persons. Much-needed relief to poor families is given from time to time, and tract distribution has been continuous. For such true-hearted work we are at all times deeply thankful. The Mission is conducted by Mr. F. A. Homer, J.P., Sedgley, Dudley.

Notes and Comments.

OWING to the Easter Holidays, and the consequent necessity of going to press some days earlier than usual, all communications received after Thursday last will be acknowledged in our next issue.

Next week we purpose giving portrait and sketch of Rev. Dr. Culross, Principal of the Baptist College, Bristol.

The usefulness of Boys' Homes, and their value in social economics, have been grandly illustrated in the person of the lad whom the police found sleeping night after night on the stairs of London Bridge, and whom the Lord Mayor sent to the Gordon Boys' Home at Fort Wallington. The Secretary of that Institution reports that he has turned out a hard-working, willing, and well-behaved boy, making good progress in schooling, and in the band as a flute player. Thus at the cost of £22 a year for a few years a valuable life is reclaimed, and the State is saved from that most expensive of all its burdens—a criminal life.

Sir Charles Warren is at present spending a portion of his leisure in an extremely useful and instructive manner. No longer able to explore the secrets of Palestine, by the aid of photographs and a magic lantern he is greatly increasing public interest in them in England. He places on the screen faithful pictures of Mount Sinai, of Jerusalem, and Mount Moriah, and creates fresh interest in them by the information he imparts regarding them, which he obtained by his personal efforts.

An extraordinary incident has happened at Frankfort-on-Main. Messrs. Baron and Barnett, of the Mildmay Jewish Mission, were there taken before the magistrate to declare the character of the Hebrew literature they were distributing. They submitted that the contents of the books set forth that the true Messiah had come, and was the Saviour of both Jew and Gentile. Not being able to read Hebrew, the magistrate required some confirmation. He therefore sent for the Chief Rabbi, and imposed upon him the duty of examining the New Testament to see whether these things were so. The result was that the Rabbi confirmed the statement, only adding that he considered the arguments employed were old, and so the missionaries were set at liberty, and went on their way rejoicing.

The cause of poor children was greatly helped by the able speech made by Mr. S. Smith in the House of Commons regarding the resources of Canada for the absorption of our young paupers into an industrial and agricultural population. Between the Poor Law Guardians and the Industrial School authorities there are no fewer than 80,000 children in keeping in England at present, the larger proportion of whom, tainted from birth, are likely to be paupers or worse. We hope Mr. Smith's proposals will receive the deep attention they deserve from all classes of the community.

We are glad to know that the decision of the Bombay Law Court regarding the native marriage laws is not to be accepted as final. There are many in the Presidency who deeply sympathise with Rukmibhai, and are raising a fund to carry the matter further. A Hindoo authority, lecturing in Bombay, has pronounced that infant marriage is not authorised by their scriptures, and that the marriage of widows is perfectly valid. It is said that the Government will be asked to appoint a Commission to inquire into the whole question. We sincerely hope that the request may be granted.

An important paper was read at the Victoria Institute on the evening of the 4th inst. by Mr. S. R. Pattison, F.G.S. This distinguished geologist has devoted many years to the study of the coral reefs of England. His conclusions in relation to the pedigree of these corals are adverse to the Evolution theory. There is no evidence of gradual development from a lower to a higher type. The old corals of ancient reefs were as highly organised as the modern. There is no appearance of change of species. Coral life burst upon the stage all at once. Science can give no account of its introduction without parentage.

It is satisfactory to find that the scare of some timid Christians about Evolution was founded very much on dogmatism and assumption, and not on universal facts. In the matter of causation, science is confessedly dumb. The old faith of the creation of organic life is returning where it was shaken. Where science is helpless, affirms Mr. Pattison, the Christian may still say, "O Lord, how manifold are thy works, in wisdom hast Thou made them all; the earth is full of thy riches."

Our contemporary, The Christian Irishman, states that the editor of The Independent wrote to Cardinal Gibbons, of Baltimore, with reference to "the movement now going on in the Anglican Church having for its object the re-union of Christendom," and that the Cardinal replied to the effect that he considered union most desirable, but that its conditions are practically these: Absolute submission to the Pope, the renunciation of the Bible, the surrender of conscience and private judgment, and, lastly, the whole teaching of the Church (of Rome) to be believed under peril of anathema. There is, of course, nothing new in this statement of Romish terms, and there was no necessity to go so far as Baltimore for it; but the circulation of it throughout America will be useful.

Rev. Dr. Jessop's account of the condition of the labourers in Norfolk and Suffolk, given in his volume, "Arcady," is in many respects distressing, though they are making remarkable progress. Sobriety and chastity do not in many districts seem to be held in much regard, and the moral tone is singularly low. As is the case in our large towns, doubtless the wretched housing is responsible for so deplorable a state of things. It is pleasant to meet with the ploughman or the ditcher in sentimental verse, but to visit him in the midst of the wretched surroundings of his home, soon disabuses the reader of his illusion. Things are very different now from what they were when Dr. Fraser, the late Bishop of Manchester, acted as Assistant Commissioner of the Agricultural Commission, and conducted an examination in East Anglia, but even now, in thousands of instances, his terrible words would apply:—

> The majority of the cottages that exist in rural parishes are deficient in almost every requisite that should constitute a home for a Christian family in a civilised community....Modesty must be an unknown virtue, decency an unimaginable thing, where, in one small chamber, with the beds lying as thickly as they can be packed, father, mother, young men, lads, grown-up and growing girls—two and sometimes three generations—are herded promiscuously together.

As Dr. Fraser said, "It is a hideous picture, and the picture is drawn from life." And it is not very creditable to our Christianity that so horrible a condition of things should still be possible in England. Perhaps in dealing with the social evil it would be better if we began at the beginning, and endeavoured to stop the supplies by cutting off the feeders, such as this village "one room" factor must necessarily prove to be.

It is stated that the Gospel according to St. Mark has just been printed in raised Chinese characters, for the use of the blind in China. Already, portions of God's Word have been printed in Moon's characters in no fewer than two hundred and forty nine languages. "Send forth thy light and thy truth."

An interesting return with regard to the British Army, recently published, shows that out of 192,929 men there are 39,560 Romanists—a number, doubtless, very largely contributed to by 31,577 Irish who serve. It is noteworthy that the percentage of Romanists has decreased from 28·7 to 20·9 since 1868.

The drink bill for the past year has been cut down to the extent of £363,621, but the expenditure still amounts to the enormous sum of £122,905,785. This sum gives an average of £3 7s. 8d. per head of the population, which shows a considerable falling off since 1870, in which year the average reached its maximum. Rev. Dawson Burns estimates that if the consumption had gone on increasing in proportion to the increase in the population, the bill this year would be £38,718,215 more than it is; therefore we may set down that sum as the net gain through the work of the temperance agencies. What a terrible increase of crime, vice, and poverty would have resulted from the expenditure upon drink of that huge amount? Yet doubtless we shall have to listen to the usual lamentations over the decrease in the revenue, for it seems to be impossible to get statesmen and politicians to recognise the fact that if the drink bill goes up, the national bills for the outlay upon police and poverty go up proportionately, and that a falling off in the excise returns is invariably accompanied by an increase in the revenue from articles the consumption of which injures no one.

A DAY OF PRAYER.

Wednesday was an important day at Exeter Hall, not because there were any large gatherings, but because a few men and women who are working for God met to spend the day in conference with Him. The morning was devoted more especially to personal confession, and seeking richer and fuller revelations of Divine grace, to qualify for larger and better work; and the afternoon and evening were spent in laying before God the varied forms of Christian activity in which those present, and others not present, were engaged. The children of God never come thus together to the throne of grace without results following, and the expectation of coming blessing was frequently expressed during these hours of prayer and counsel with one another. The needs of the world and the lack of energy to go up and possess the land were stated, on the one hand, and on the other God was praised for the rich fruitage given wherever the seed had been faithfully sown.

Mr. Kennedy, the secretary of the Y.M.C.A. at Exeter Hall, asked prayer for fifty out-and-out, intelligent, capable, and Christian young men for open-air work. There are multitudes who will not go into any chapel or even mission-room, but will stand for an hour or two out of doors. Mr. W. Forbes also gave his experience as to this. Mr. H. L. Hastings, of Boston, U.S.A. (whose lectures on the Bible and against infidelity, both spoken and printed, have had and are still having a most beneficial influence) spoke of his imprisonment for preaching on Boston Common, resulting in open-air preaching being much more general throughout the United States. He also gave some terrible facts as to the zealous spread of infidel and obscene publications, not only in England but in India, by a vicious propaganda, and urged to prayer and effort for its counteraction.

Earnest mention was made of Israel by Mr. Colin Young and others; on the one hand the little concern felt by Christians generally on their behalf, and on the other the great encouragement wherever the peace of Jerusalem is sought.

Lord Radstock compared the Christian unity to-day with thirty years ago, when some foremost Christians deprecated the idea of the proposed Barnet Conference, fearing that Churchmen and Dissenters could not meet on such a platform. He urged also to thanksgiving and praise for doors marvellously opened and entered in Russia, and other European as well as foreign nations.

Rev. J. Wilkinson said it had of late years been his habit to ask God to lay upon his heart subjects for prayer, and then having prayed to look out for answers. One recent instance was his prayer for £5000 to distribute 100,000 Hebrew Testaments among the Jews. He had no idea how it would come; and he was subsequently taken so ill that he and others thought he would die. But a cheque for £3000 arrived, and he said, "I shall not die, but live; God is answering my prayer." It was reading the New Testament that converted Rabinowitz, and now another Rabbi has been brought to believe in Jesus, and is preaching Him in the synagogue at Buda Pesth.

Mr. C. Russell Hurditch, who had been guiding the meeting throughout the day, said there were three brethren, Mr. Fawkner, Mr. Baker, and Mr. J. R. Hall, who had come up specially from Newport, Mon., and at his request Mr. Fawkner spoke of the work in that town. On March 25, they had had just such a gathering as the present, on the anniversary of a prayer-meeting sixteen years ago, which had been followed by a revival, in which thousands of souls had been converted, and he believed, as others had said before, that we are on the eve of a great blessing from God.

We cannot do better than close by commending to our readers the two verses which Mr. Wilkinson gave us at the conclusion of this hallowed day: Mal. iii. 10—"Bring ye all the tithes into the store house, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove Me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it." And Luke vi. 38—"Give, and it shall be given unto you; good measure, pressed down, and shaken together, and running over, shall men give into your bosom. For with the same measure that ye mete withal it shall be measured to you again."

EVANGELISTIC WORK IN ITALY.

A correspondent of The Record, writing under date March 29, concerning Count Campello's mission in Umbria, says:—

The Count writes that in spite of many difficulties and opposition he is steadily making way amongst the people, who still flock to the Conferences he holds twice a week at Terni, Arrone, and Ferentillo, and that even when the weather is bad there is a good attendance. Count Campello has fitted up a large room on the ground floor of his own house as a chapel, where on Sunday mornings he reads prayers and administers the Holy Communion to all those who, having regularly attended the Conferences and Bible meetings, show that their hearts are touched by the love of Jesus, and express a wish to communicate. He has been asked to baptize two children, one an infant, the other a girl of thirteen, whose parents had hitherto refused to have the child baptized out of hatred to the priests.

Requiem masses are being celebrated all over Italy for the repose of the souls of the Italian soldiers who fell at Saati, in Africa. Count Campello, therefore, as well as other Evangelical churches, held a commemorative service. The chapel, crowded to excess, contained nearly three hundred people; about two hundred more were obliged to remain on the ground outside. Count Campello writes touchingly of this service, and the hearty co-operation of all his friends at Arrone, in spite of anathemas and excommunication. The presence of the authorities, and the carabiniers being permitted to mount guard, are noticeable facts, as they show the influence Count Campello is gaining over all classes of men in the neighbourhood in which he is working.

The Redemption Army, which is being raised on the principle of the Church Army in England, is very popular, and likely to do good, especially in Terni. The young men who have already joined marched with their banner in the procession at Arrone to the commemorative service I have mentioned above.

From a recent report of Rev. James Wall, as to the progress of the work of the Baptist Missionary Society in Central Italy, we are glad to extract some interesting particulars. There are five important districts under his superintendence—Florence, Leghorn, Civita Vecchia, Tivoli, and Rome, and from the statements made concerning each, it is easy to see how important is this field, with its millions of inhabitants, multitudes of them "hating their priests, hating their Church, practically pagan, and fast becoming a prey to communistic, revolutionary, and atheistic principles."

As to Florence, he says that circumstances have been such as to cause all the evangelical churches in that city to unite. The meetings for preaching have sometimes been well attended, but have not gone on to revival. Though the time is not most prosperous for the work, it is hoped that the darkness is but that which precedes the dawn.

At Leghorn, besides the regular services, Sunday and night school have been well attended, and visits to surrounding places are frequently paid by Signor Baretti, the evangelist. In several of these places there are friends of the truth, who are very desirous for something more than an occasional visit.

The work at Civita Vecchia and the neighbouring district has been more than usually encouraging. The preaching services are much better attended than for some time previously, and upwards of thirty young men attend the night school held every evening. A growing work is also carried on amongst the sailors of the port, by which those of our own country benefit not a little. At Orbetello, also, there is another night school, one of the best in Italy, with an attendance sometimes of over fifty. Other places receive occasional visits from the evangelist. Massa Maritima is on the verge of a vast district, from any point of which, striking off at right angles into the interior, one might proceed without finding a single messenger of salvation. Here the evangelist is the only evangelical minister, but it is gratifying to know that gradually the influence of the Gospel is being brought to bear upon the people, and we may hope that this district, instead of helping the forces of anarchy which threaten Europe, will by and by send its missionaries to the islands opposite or to the near shores of Africa.

In Tivoli and the surrounding neighbourhood the Gospel news is spread in various ways. In Tivoli itself a service is conducted every Sunday, the room in which it is held being sometimes crowded by persons who have come from the towns around. Two of the brethren visit also the surrounding district, selling Testaments, hymn-books, tracts, and books, preaching also, where this is possible. In the course of one such visitation nearly three hundred persons declared themselves willing to receive and read a monthly tract, if such were sent them.

That part of the work which has its centre in Rome is, perhaps, the most interesting and important of all, as exercising a more far-reaching influence. The central point of the operations in Rome is at the Piazza in Lucina. Of this Mr. Wall writes:—"We feel there is great cause for thankfulness in being permitted from year to year to hold forth the one catholic, holy light of God's truth. In the flux and reflux of this rapidly increasing population, under the myriad glance of this many-sided public, the testimony is given, and sometimes penetrates where it might be least expected to." Great opposition is encountered from the Vatican, which sends spies to all the meetings. Yet the Sunday services have been well attended, and here many important branches of work are conducted. Altogether in Rome alone there are six stations where earnest evangelistic effort is continually carried on, and perhaps a better idea of the character and extent of this work will be gained from the following statement, showing the attendances at the various meetings and schools, than in any other way:—

Lucina.—Sunday-school, 2903; mothers' meeting, 982; preaching, 9198; prayer-meeting, 2213; Sunday morning service, 3301.

Trastevere.—Sunday-school, 2518; mothers' meeting, 977; preaching, 7539; Medical Mission, 3267; poor meeting, 6184.

Consolazioni.—Sunday-school, 2605; Medical Mission, 3122; preaching, 10,034.

Serpenti.—Sunday-school, 520; preaching, 5918.

Pratt di Castello.—Preaching, 4377.

Piazza Vittorio Emanuele.—Preaching, 1485.

The two last stations have only been opened a few months; but, with those at Tivoli, show a total attendance, during 1886, of 71,462.

The publication and distribution work represents an aggregate number of nearly 20,000 Bibles, Testaments, and Gospels circulated, besides about 100,000 other books.

The statistics of the Church show 173 members on the books, and 24 baptized during the year.

PECKHAM.—A few believers having three years ago banded themselves together for Christian work, in the thickly populated and poor neighbourhood between Peckham-road and Southampton-street, have now taken the premises at the corner of Edmund-street and New Church-road. Need for such aggressive work is great, for within a radius of about 300 yards there are six public-houses, and sin and misery abound on every hand. The Mission has already been much blessed. The new premises, which are well adapted for the work, were recently opened. The new hall will hold about 300 persons, and a fact worth mentioning is that nearly the whole of the work has been done by the brethren and their friends, after their ordinary day's labour. Revs. Frank M. Smith and Hugh McIntosh, and Mr. John Creer, commended the work. The treasurer is Mr. G. H. Cracknell, 20, Elmington-road, Camberwell.

LONDON METHODIST MISSION.

MEETING AT EXETER HALL.

The Wesleyan Methodist Convention in Exeter Hall last week was in many respects a remarkable gathering. Notwithstanding Rev. Hugh Price Hughes's assertion that he is already turning his eyes to the twentieth century, and thinking of that rather than of the nineteenth, many of those present will certainly have felt that as well in the religious as in the political world we are on the eve of great events. Few thinking men but are deeply impressed with the tremendous forces of evil which, at home as abroad, are at the same time sapping the foundations of society, and threatening the very bulwarks of Christianity. From speakers like Rev. Peter Thompson, Rev. Edward Smith, and Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, we got at this meeting a further revelation of the depths of iniquity in this city alone, that would have been perfectly appalling but that we saw clearly too how the forces of the King of kings are being marshalled for the impending conflict, and that "where Satan has his seat," in the West as well as in the East, there presently the battle will be joined all along the line—there the servants of the great King will go forth, confident in his strength, to pull down the strongholds of sin. Happy will those be who are privileged to take part on the side of truth and right in this great conflict, and to see the victory which must crown a fight undertaken in the spirit of dependence upon God which it is evident this will be.

Mr. John Beauchamp, who presided at the evening meeting, cleared the ground by saying that wherever Methodism is feeble, the people are deprived of one great means of spiritual growth and life. In London, unfortunately, Methodism has no influence amongst the upper classes, and to a great extent has lost its hold of the poor. This position must be regained if the two objects of Methodism—the honour of God, and the showing forth of pity for mankind—are to be attained.

In a characteristic address Rev. Thomas Champness, the great pioneer in the work of evangelisation now going on in our villages, urged the claims of the thousands of servant girls at the West-end to sympathy and help, and clinched a telling illustration of his argument by saying, "My feeling is that Methodism must care for the girl that cleans the steps."

Rev. J. E. Clapham (Secretary of the London Mission) then made an important statement with reference to decisions just arrived at in regard to this aggressive movement. Towards the required sum of £50,000, nearly £18,000 has been promised, £10,000 of this being the product of the series of magnificent meetings held recently at Newcastle-on-Tyne, Birmingham, Manchester, Nottingham, and other places. Then the London Mission has determined to proceed on social and philanthropic as well as religious lines. Night after night, by means of various agencies, the true welfare of the people will be sought. Moreover, an effort will be made, by the education of the Christian conscience of the country, and by putting before Christian people the awful condition of the masses, to bring about a better condition of things. It is not right that thousands of little children should be starving, or that women should be ground down to starvation wages by the sweating system. Not the least important part of this statement was that which announced that St. James's Hall has been secured as the headquarters of the Mission in the West-end.

Rev. Peter Thompson, in most pathetic language, revealing at times the depth of emotion caused by the heartrending misery with which he has become so painfully familiar, next gave an account of what the previous speaker called "The most magnificent slum mission in London." Before he commenced this work, he knew comparatively nothing of what hunger, or destitution, or utter misery meant. But painful as this experience is, the joy of being as Christ to these poor people is still greater. The work of blessing began with the children—not those who attend the Sunday-school, but the children from the back and side streets, from the one-room tenements, whose mothers make sacks and finish trousers, and who by the hardest work of from twelve to fourteen hours a day cannot earn more than five shillings or six shillings a week—the children who, alas! in many cases are not wanted at home—the children whom as yet the School Board has not been able to reach. Of these children some five hundred to eight hundred are gathered together on four nights a week, and perfectly wonderful has been the change already wrought in them. One hundred and twenty have been drafted into the Sunday-school, and are enjoying the elevating power of companionship with children who have been cared for. Some of the mothers after a time came to see what it was made their children like so much to come to this school, and now there are three mothers' classes in full working, one with over 200 names on the books, and a fourth will be formed as soon as another lady can be found to take it, but of the mothers' meeting a Bible and Society class has been formed, which now numbers fifty-three members, and grand class-meetings they have. The women have an experience, and it does them good to tell it. In addition there is a sewing-class for senior girls, of whom about seventy attend regularly, and in this way provision is made for them so as to keep them from the public-house. Drink he described as an ever-present foe, involving these poor girls in awful snares before their eyes were open, or they knew how to protect themselves. Then there is the work carried on in the girls' parlour at "Paddy's Goose," and Mr. Thompson told some stories of the grief and terror expressed by some of these girls on reviewing their lives in their true light. One or two remarkable cases of conversion are, it is hoped, the beginning of a change in which the converting power of God will be seen amongst about forty girls attending every night in the "parlour."

Rev. Edward Smith also described a work at Clerkenwell which has gained considerable repute. In six months there has been an increase of from 135 to 270 good, solid members. The Band of Hope has an attendance of 200 children, whilst a Gospel service on Thursday evenings is attended by from 300 to 400 persons, and a men's Bible-class musters over forty.

Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, in the closing address, reviewed the history of the London Mission from its origination at Oxford as a response to the "Bitter Cry of London." The West-end, with its 400,000 rich persons untouched by Methodism, with a poor population as degraded as any at the East-end, with its political refugees from all parts of the world, and more fallen women than in any other part of the world—the West-end, which is the Vanity Fair of the world, and which is competing with Paris as the centre of corruption and vice, he described as the Malakoff of sin, against which from St. James's Hall the London Mission will direct its attacks. Remarking that, though the Mission will be conducted on Methodist lines, it will be carried on in an unsectarian and truly catholic spirit, and that letters from various parts of the world are being continually received expressing sympathy with its objects, he concluded by saying, glancing forward to the requirements of the next few years, that they must be prepared to undertake enterprises on a colossal scale, they must ask and expect great things from God.

ITALIAN REFORMED CHURCH.—Count Campello has been offered a building site for a church and requisite materials. The cost of building will be £200. This is the first church he has had any prospect of building. He says:—"It has been a golden dream. Now soon I hope it will be a reality." The work in Umbria is most hopeful. The people flock to the evangelistic halls in large numbers. Bible-classes are formed, and soon a night-school and class for artisans will be started.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, APRIL 17.—PSALM LXXI.

"WE have here the prayer of the aged believer, who in holy confidence of faith, strengthened by a long and remarkable experience, pleads against his enemies, and asks further blessings for himself."—C. H. Spurgeon. "Some of the fathers interpret the Psalm mystically of the Church in her old age, and her trials at the end of the world."—Plain Commentary. Some regard the Psalm as applicable to Christ personally, on the ground that ver. 18 may be more correctly rendered, and that his life on earth, short as it was, was prematurely aged through sorrow (John viii. 57): "A view that conveys precious consolation to aged ones, who might be ready to say that Christ could not altogether enter into their feelings, having never experienced the failing weakness of age."—A. A. Bonar.

3.—Be Thou my strong habitation.—Literally, "Become to me a rock of habitation," a place inaccessible to my enemies, and lifting me up into a sure resting-place, and one of nearness to Thee.

18.—Now also when I am old and grey-headed.—"The words signify, 'Forsake me not from this time onward, even were I to live to grey hairs.' Margins of A.V. and R.V. confirm this."

20.—Thou, which hast showed me.—The Hebrew reads "us" in the text, and "me" in the margin. In such cases the text is always to be preferred, if sense can be made of it, as it represents the original reading. Here, regarding the Psalm as the language of Christ mystical, the plural is most appropriate, as pointing to what the Head has already passed through, but the members have still before them, viz., resurrection. Read R.V., "Thou which hast showed us...shalt quicken us again, and shalt bring us up again from the depths of the earth."

MONDAY, APRIL 18.—PSALM LXXII.

This, the closing Psalm of the second book, appropriately reveals the coming kingdom upon earth of the Lord Jesus: in other words, the millennial reign of righteousness and peace (Rev. xx. 1—6). It seems like an answer to the prayer in the last Psalm, "Forsake me not; until I have shewed thy strength unto this generation, and thy power to every one that is to come." It was there intimated (ver. 20) that the prayer would be granted to the Church in resurrection, and so we know from Rev. xx. it will be. There will be an earthly people to be reigned over, but Christ's saints are to "live (i.e., in resurrection) and reign with Him a thousand years." Of Christ so reigning Solomon was a striking type. Solomon seems to have been both the author ("a Psalm of Solomon," R.V.), and to a certain extent, as a typical king, the subject of the Psalm; but the Jewish Targum rightly interprets it of King Messiah. The divisions are well pointed out in these words: "A glowing description of the reign of Messiah as righteous (1—7); universal (8—11); beneficent (12—14); and perpetual (15—17); to which are added a doxology (18, 19), and a postscript (20)."—Alexander.

1.—Give the king thy judgments, O God, and thy righteousness unto the king's son.—"Solomon was both king and king's son; so also is our Lord. He has power and authority in Himself, and also royal dignity given Him of his Father. We are waiting till He shall be manifested among men as the ever righteous Judge."

12.—He shall deliver the needy when he crieth.—Oppression will exist on earth during the Millennium; but there will be deliverance from it. The governed are far from perfect; it is the government which is perfection.

16.—There shall be a handful of corn, &c.—Better in R.V., "There shall be abundance of corn." Describes the plenty which shall then be.

TUESDAY, APRIL 19.—PSALM LXXIII.

The second book opens with eleven Psalms by Asaph (1 Chron. xvi. 5), all Elohimic (i.e., containing the name of God rather than Jehovah).

"Curiously enough, this 73rd Psalm corresponds in subject with the 37th. It will help the memory of the young to notice the reversed figures. The theme of this is that ancient stumbling block of good men, which Job's friends could not get over—viz., the present prosperity of wicked men, and the sorrow of the godly.

1.—Such as are of a clean heart.—Compare Matt. v. 8; and as to the mode by which the heart is cleansed, Acts xv. 9; which is better rendered by R.V., "cleansing their hearts by faith." These cleansed ones constitute the true "Israel of God," for "they are not all Israel which are of Israel" (Rom. ix. 6).

3.—I was envious at the foolish.—The word for foolish in Hebrew expresses the noisy bravado of the men of the world in the enjoyment of what they consider their own. R.V., "arrogant."

4.—There are no bands in their death.—Better as in margin, R.V.: "There are no pangs in their death," i.e., no pangs of conscience. They die as they have lived, apathetic as to the concerns of the soul. Contrast with this the state of those who were "through fear of death all their lifetime subject to bondage" (Heb. ii. 15). Old Testament saints; alive as to the concerns of eternity, but not yet seeing their full deliverance.

10.—Therefore his people return hither: and waters of a full cup are wrung out to them.—"It is to 'the wicked' that 'his' refers. God had not been spoken of. The wicked prevails upon others to leave the right path and to adopt his sentiments. The prosperity these apostates enjoy, appears under the figure of a full draught presented to the thirsty."—Hengstenberg.

22.—I was as a beast before thee.—"The original hath in it no word of comparison; it ought to be rather translated, 'I was a very beast before Thee.' This is a description of human nature, and of the old man in the renewed saint, not to be excelled."—C. H. S.

28.—It is good for me to draw near to God.—The Hebrew is literally, "But as for me, nearness to God is my happiness."

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 20.—PSALM LXXIV.

The appropriateness of this Psalm to later times, such as the Assyrian or Babylonish invasions, or even to the times of the Maccabees, has led some to regard it as having been then written; but it is best (as C. H. S. suggests) to regard it as "a prophetic Psalm intended for use in troubles foreseen."

4.—Thine enemies roar in the midst of thy congregations.—"The enemies without do us small damage, but those within the Church do her serious harm. As a Jew felt a holy horror when he saw an idolatrous emblem set up in the holy place, even so do we when in a Protestant church we see the fooleries of Rome; and when from pulpits once occupied by men of God, we hear philosophy and vain deceit."—C. H. S.

5.—A man was famous according as he had lifted up his axes upon the thick trees.—"In the olden times our sires dealt sturdy blows against the forests of error, and laboured hard to lay the axe at the root of the trees; but alas! their sons appear to be quite as diligent to destroy the truth, and overthrow all their fathers built up."

9.—There is no more any prophet.—This, along with the reference to "synagogues" in verse 8, both point strongly to the Maccabæan age, but the Spirit of God, through Asaph, could thus foretell and so prepare Israel for approaching trial, and at the same time furnish the Church of Christ with a psalm suited to her long and weary times of trial under Antichrist.

20.—Have respect unto the covenant.—"Here is the master-key, heaven's gate must open to this. We may also plead the covenant made with the Lord Jesus for all believers."—C. H. S.

THURSDAY, APRIL 21.—PSALM LXXV.

3.—I bear up the pillars of it.—Christ is the speaker here, as in the last verse. "I know of none who could have ever said this but Him who said, 'All power is given unto Me in heaven and earth,' and who, as He said these words, ascended up into heaven to exercise that sovereignty, and repair that mighty ruin which had been wrought upon earth when Satan triumphed in Paradise."—B. Bouchier.

6.—For promotion cometh, &c.—Promotion is literally (as in R.V.) "lifting up." The word occurs as a verb (ver. 7), "lifteth up" another. It is the action of Him who as Judge justifies the righteous (ver. 10), seeing that He had before justified them, though ungodly, by counting their faith for righteousness (Rom. iv. 5).

8.—In the hand of the Lord there is a cup.—This is the cup of God's wrath against sin, which the Lord Jesus in Gethsemane prayed might pass from Him, if it were possible. But though possible for Him personally, for God was "able to save Him from death," it was not possible for Him mystically, as the Head, the Husband of his Church. Therefore He acquiesced in God's will. "Not My will but Thine be done." "The cup which my Father hath given Me, shall I not drink it?" But those who reject Christ have yet to drink this cup, yea, "the dregs thereof," as they reject the proffered substitution of his drinking it in their stead.

FRIDAY, APRIL 22.—PSALM LXXVI.

The spirit of this Psalm is Millennial, and points on to a time when the first verse shall be literally fulfilled, and that after the defeat of his enemies alluded to in the following verses. "No Psalm has a greater right to follow Psalm lxxxv. than this. That prepares the way for the Divine judgment as imminent which this celebrates as having taken place."—Delitzsch.

4.—Than the mountains of prey.—"An emblematical appellation for the haughty possessors of power, who also plunder everyone that comes near them, the proud and despoiling powers of the world."—Ibid. The words "more than" in Hebrew are represented by a preposition sometimes used for comparison, but also meaning "from," and it is perhaps better to take it so (with Canon Cook): "Thou art glorious, majestic from the mountains of prey," i.e., returning in triumph from his conquest over the powers denoted by this expression.

9.—When God arose to judgment, to save, &c.—This might be better rendered, "When God rises to judgment (it is) to save all the meek of the earth." Compare Ps. xcii. 7 for a similar construction, where our translation rightly inserts "it is." The verse thus contains the cheering prospect that the time of God's rising up to judgment is also the time of the salvation of "the meek of the earth." Well may "Selah" call for a pause to meditate on all that is involved in this great truth.

10.—The wrath of man shall praise Thee; the remainder of wrath shalt Thou restrain.—Or, rather, "shalt Thou gird Thyself with." So almost all critics, as the verb is frequently used of girding oneself with a sword. "God girds Himself with the remainder of the wrath directed against Him. That is, the wrath of the enemies must even to its last remnant serve Him as a weapon by which to accomplish their destruction."—Hengstenberg.

SATURDAY, APRIL 16.—PSALM LXXVII.

"This hymn now before us is for experienced saints only, but to them it will be of rare value as a transcript of their own inner conflicts."

2.—My sore ran in the night and ceased not.—A most unfortunate rendering, now happily abandoned. It should be, "My hand is stretched out in the night without ceasing" (so Delitzsch and R.V.). The outstretched hand refers to the Jewish attitude of prayer (Ps. lxxxviii. 9).

7.—Will the Lord cast off for ever?—This and the next two verses convey the lament arising from the Psalmist's sadness of spirit, the depth of which finds its deepest expression in "I remembered God and was troubled," of ver. 3. A sense of desertion leads him to ask, is this to last for ever?

10.—And I said, This is my infirmity.—Or "sickness"—"disease." He now gets relief by turning away from sin-sick self to the "years of the right hand of the Most High." The words, "I will remember," though not in the original, convey the sense, and are preserved by R.V. It is an Old Testament edition of Rom. vii. 24, "Oh wretched man that I am...I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord."

20.—Thou leddest Thy people like a flock, &c.—This abrupt close of the Psalm is a puzzle to critics who cannot understand its meaning. Moses and Aaron suggest the great Prophet and Priest of whom they were types (Heb. iii.—vii.). This glorious Person is an answer to all the Psalmist's grief. "The Spirit of God knows when to cease speaking, which is more than those do who, for the sake of making a methodical conclusion, prolong their words even to weariness."—C. H. S.

MEDICAL MISSION, TRAVANCORE.

From the annual report of this Mission, as well as from private letters to hand, we get much valuable information concerning a most interesting work. Dr. E. Sargood Fry, in his report, after mentioning some of the features of the medical work in the Central Hospital at Neyoor, where there is accommodation for about twenty-four patients, speaks of one case in which, having been called in to attend a native lady, her husband showed his gratitude for the service thus rendered by allowing him on the following Sunday to hold a religious service in his house, at which upwards of twenty of his friends and relations were gathered. Amongst the in-patients a Flower Mission is carried on, the beautiful nosegays, with little Tamil texts affixed, being highly appreciated.

A wide-spreading work is being done by means of native Bible-women, their field of labour being practically limitless. On the occasion of the opening of the Kottarakara Church, one of these Bible-women was the only native woman in the room who was dressed, and the contrast between her and the pinched, starved faces of all around was very striking. She has an evening class at her house, to which some go after their day's work in the fields and learn to read. The two sons of this woman are engaged in mission work, one of them, a catechist and schoolmaster, being a very promising young man. In another case the Bible-woman is allowed to teach even Brahmin children in their own homes. At Trevandrum meetings for educated Hindus and Mahommedans are constantly held at the Free Reading-room, and there are many evidences that the truths of the Scriptures are effectively working in the minds of the people. The Brahmins are beginning to read the Bible.

It is hoped that soon it may be possible to take more girls into the boarding-school, and these will in most cases remain until they are fifteen years of age, whereas, previously, ignorant parents have frequently taken the children away when uite young.

Any communications in reference to the work may be addressed to Mrs. Porter, Moffat-villa, Alumhurst-road, Westbourne, Bournemouth.

COW CROSS MISSION.

When a mission comes of age, though it cannot be deemed venerable, yet it is no longer a child. This honour has been reached by the Cow Cross Mission, the twenty-first report of which is before us. What varied experiences our brother William Catlin has passed through in that time! The old district has been largely swept away for warehouses and other improvements, and so some of he worst plague-spots in Clerkenwell have disappeared. But as predicted by our Lord, "the poor ye have always with you;" so there is still poverty enough in the locality to call forth all the resources both of the churches, and of these evangelistic missions.

The report of this Mission shows steady work. The indoor meetings are not so numerously attended, but those in the open air are very encouraging. 9000 Testaments have been sold, and 36,000 tracts and books distributed. Whatever success has attended the Mission is of a permanent character, as the converts stand, the aim being to build them up in the Word of God. The band of hope, mothers' meeting, Sunday-school, children's dinners, &c., have been continued; but the new feature is a Home of Rest at Ventnor, where the weary workers may gain strength for fresh labour. Copies of this report may be had of Mr. William Catlin, 17, Claremont-square, Pentonville, N.

SCANDINAVIAN MISSIONARIES.—Nine young Norwegian missionaries will shortly leave Stavanger in Norway for Africa and Madagascar. They have for about six years been studying at the mission school there, where they have also had some training in ambulance and medicine.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICES.

Earnest Christian labourers are frequently heard saying, "Our hope for the future is in the children." Bands of Hope and other agencies are endeavouring to influence them for good, and especially to teach them to steer clear of the rock—strong drink. The Children's Special Service Mission, embracing them with loving arms, seeks at once to enlist the little ones under the banner of the Saviour. It gently leads them to a knowledge and love of those Scriptural truths which are able to make them wise unto salvation, and to an early acquaintance with Jesus Himself, who is able to keep them safe amidst the temptations of life.

Mr. Bishop, the secretary, showed how the influence of this Scripture Union is spreading in many lands. In Japan there are 4000 members in 200 different places, some of these being adults who have thus learnt to prize the Word of God. In a seminary at Travancore, where two years ago a branch was formed, there are now 970 members, and at Ceylon there are 1500. Letters were read from many other places, all telling of progress and of blessing to the little ones thus banded together. In Great Britain there are 2900 branches, and altogether there are about 300,000 members, all united by this common bond of union, reading the Scriptures every day, in twenty-eight different languages. The wish expressed by one of the speakers, that as a little child he had formed the habit of daily reading the Bible, and that thus its precious lessons had become the sooner impressed upon him, would, we doubt not, find an echo in the hearts of many as they listened to the interesting account of the work of this Mission.

The story was continued by Mr. J. A. King, who spoke of different phases of the work in the public school. Many testimonies of appreciation of its value have been received from parents, from boys themselves, from old boys who have left school, and from teachers and others, who have said that boys who are members of this Union are amongst the best boys in the school.

Mr. Trickett, from his former experience as secretary, spoke of the practical side of the work. The children are being brought to Christ by this instrumentality—they are taking the Word of God, and feeding upon it day by day. Sometimes it was said that this was a Union for well-to-do children, but he had seen a great deal of the work done in Manchester, Liverpool, Birmingham, and other large places, and one of the very best branches of the Union was at Birmingham, amongst the very poorest children, many of them without shoes and hats. It was very interesting to know of the variety of work done, and this was full of encouragement also, for it showed how easy it is to set the little ones definitely to work for the Master. He urged secretaries and others, who may have opportunity to gather a few children together, to take up the matter in a spirit of prayer, and then they will soon find how delighted the children will be to be doing something. Let the children of the rich be led to work for the poor, their sympathies being enlisted by reading to them of some such institution as Dr. Barnardo's.

Mr. C. H. Nash told how, in a few days, he got one hundred boys in a public school to form a branch; and was followed by Mr. George Banaster, of the mission yacht Kingfisher, from whose graphic pen many a delightful story has appeared in the pages of Our Own Magazine. Rev. A. J. Shepherd also added a few closing words.

We have no space to do more than notice the admirable address given by Rev. F. B. Meyer, of Leicester, who presided. In it he referred to the influence of the sainted William Pennefather, as seen in the work of this Mission, which is growing broader and deeper day by day. He urged all, by the study of God's Word, to be, as Kepler said he was when making his discoveries in astronomy, "thinking over again the thoughts of God."

A TIME-HONOURED SCHOOL.

For three-quarters of a century the "Old Castle" Ragged-school, situated in Castle-yard, Holland-street, Southwark, has been famous for its annual gathering of former scholars and teachers, as on these occasions it is usual for friends to be present who were connected with the school at its commencement, now over eighty years ago.

At the seventy-sixth of these anniversaries, special interest was excited by the presence of a well-known author of Sunday-school literature, Rev. Robert Tuck, a former teacher at Castle-yard. He gave some interesting reminiscences of Castle-yard as he knew it many years ago when, as a lad of eighteen, he undertook a class in the Sabbath-school. He then followed with earnest exhortations to the parents and teachers on their responsibilities and duties to the children.

On the 28th ult. the annual distribution of prizes took place at Castle-yard, when over seventy books were presented to successful scholars for diligence in Bible study, &c. The meeting was conducted by Mr. Harry Ebdon, the hon. sec., who gave a suitable address.

The committee of the Ragged School Union have contributed £100 towards the re-building of this venerable school, where for eighty-five years a devoted Christian work has been carried on among the poorest children of Southwark. Previous to voting the grant the school was visited by a deputation from the Union. Great interest was taken in the inspection of the building, as it is one of the very first Sabbath-schools established in London, and the reputed birthplace of the great Ragged-school movement. Mr. Ebdon's address is 44, Richmond-terrace, Clapham-road, S.W.

OBITUARY.

MISS EDITH STREET.

The many friends of this young sister in the Lord will regret to hear of her death at Oldham, on March 23. She was the daughter of John and Susannah Street, and, though only twenty-three years of age, had given many tokens of a truly devoted and consecrated spirit.

TWO NATIVE PASTORS.

On January 1, Rev. Daniel Jayasinha, Singhalese pastor at Cotta, Ceylon, who was ordained in 1868. A C.M.S. missionary says of him:—"He was a true pastor and shepherd, and loved the flock. He leaves us all a bright example of faith and patience, and of unwearied labour among his people." The China Mission of the Protestant Episcopal Church of America has lost its oldest native clergyman by the death of Rev. Kong Choi Wong, who had been a Christian teacher of his countrymen for forty years. He was the first convert at Shanghai, and was ordained in 1851.

MR. ROBERT SIMPSON.

We regret to record the death of Mr. Robert Simpson, of Glasgow, who died on Sunday evening, April 3. For many years he was pastor of the Govan congregation, and was widely known throughout Scotland as a successful evangelist and prominent temperance reformer. He took a great interest in the Mizpah Band, which was formed during Mr. D. L. Moody's last visit to Scotland. He was in his eightieth year, and had just returned from an evangelistic tour in the North, where in six weeks he had addressed sixty meetings. He spoke at a meeting at Renfrew on Friday, and attended the Mizpah Band on Saturday, being only seized with his fatal illness on Sabbath morning.—Christian Leader.

HENRY FOQUETT.

"A good and holy man has passed away from us, and it is a pity that we have so few left of the same type." So wrote one of the Christian merchant princes of London last week of his venerable friend, Colonel Foquett, who fell asleep in Jesus on March 20, in his eighty-third year, at Reading. To many of our readers he was known as associated with Christian work at home and abroad. He was the founder, when a military officer in Assam, more than forty years ago, of the Assam and Cachar Mission. Some years ago, when his Association was merged in the Anglo-Indian Evangelisation Society, he became one of its honorary treasurers. Up to January last he continued, though for years an invalid, to keep up correspondence with the friends of his Assam Mission, and to collect funds for it.

JEWS IN CALCUTTA.

A lady engaged in mission work in Calcutta says in a recent letter to Rev. W. G. Brockway, of the London Missionary Society, Bhowanipore:—

There are a great many Jews in Calcutta. With the respectable part of them I rarely come in contact. But I frequently meet that part of the Jewish community which is not respectable. These Jewish, or "Hebrew," women, as they prefer calling themselves, come from various Continental countries:—Germany, Austria, Russia, Hungary, Italy, and Spain. Most of them can read in Hebrew, though they cannot often read the language of the country of their birth. They have Hebrew books. I had some Hebrew tracts given to me, and it was wonderful to see how eagerly these poor women took them and began reading them aloud in the street. But, alas! they were soon read through, and I had nothing fresh to give.

There are a number of Hebrew men living in the same locality. They are worse than the women. The poor women are the victims, the men are the traders in the bodies and souls of the women. They bring them here by false pretences and keep them in bondage. I often feel heart-broken thinking about these people, "of whom as concerning the flesh Christ came." How degraded they have become. The poor Hebrew women seem to feel no shame. In this they afford a marked contrast to the few (so-called) Christian women from the Continent; the latter do feel shame, and often speak very sadly of their lives.

In addition to the Continental or Western Jews, we have in Calcutta many Eastern Jews, from Arabia, Persia, and even Palestine. They all understand the Hebrew language. I wish we could have some pretty Hebrew cards, like Mrs. Grimké's to distribute. Passages taken from the Old Testament Scriptures about the Messiah might be greatly blessed.

SERMON LANE MISSION.

The annual meeting of this long-tried institution was held on Tuesday, last week, at Myddelton Hall, Islington, Mr. C. J. Malcolm in the chair, supported by various ministers and laymen.

The report, read by Mr. Cooksey, the secretary, narrated an amount of work done by the Mission of the most diversified character, ministering to almost every want of the poor, from the cradle to the grave. It is difficult to infuse an element of novelty into details which have been for so many years the subject of reports. Suffice it to say, that the Gospel has been preached on Sundays to audiences that have taxed the dimensions of the Mission Hall; that a week-night service has been largely attended, tract distribution carried on, and the sick visited. The Maternal Society, the sewing-class, the mothers' meeting, the Gospel Total Abstinence Society, the Band of Hope, the penny bank, the coal club, the soup kitchen, and the Christmas dinner fund, have each done their work of kindness. Invalids have been sent to the seaside, and the summer excursion has gladdened eyes—wont to rest chiefly on gloomy streets—with a vision of God's works in the country.

The Sunday-school now numbers the attendance of 400 children. An institute for young women and another for youths has been opened. The latter has been attended with the most gratifying results, no less than six hundred members having joined it. Elder Sunday-school boys are thus kept within a healthy Christian influence.

The health of Mr. Fuller, the superintendent, which had been seriously impared by his breathing the unhealthy atmosphere of so many sick rooms, has considerably improved; and he has been able from his sick couch to direct, with good effect, the plans of his zealous fellow-labourers.

Much enthusiasm for the work of the Mission was expressed by the various speakers, and it is obvious that such an institution must cut up by the roots any socialistic movements that might otherwise leaven the masses in the neighbourhood of Sermon-lane.

WITNESSING IN SOUTH GERMANY.

The following experiences of Pastor Christien Dieterle in South Germany will be read with interest. There appears to be more freedom in the present day for the spread of Gospel truth:—

From 1864-66 he was stationed at Hall. It was his second appointment, and he had no helper. Near by was Beldersroth, a village of, perhaps, 300 inhabitants, where a congregation had been gathered, in a private house, of five or six praying souls. Here an interest began soon to be awakened, the congregation increasing, and many being converted. People came in from other villages. The custom had become prevalent there for the young people to go around the streets singing secular songs. Of this fondness for music he took advantage, taught the young people to sing well in four parts, and soon, with the songs of salvation, displaced those of ribaldry and uncleanness.

This soon awakened the powers of evil. The work was denounced in the pulpit, and warnings uttered against false prophets, and wolves in sheep's clothing; and so dangerous did it become to go late at night from the meetings to the railway station that the people detailed squads of attendants to protect him.

One Candlemas Day, the Pastor called at the house of a widow with several sons, one converted, one intensely hostile, and the rest indifferent. The servant, an earnest friend of the work, warned him not to enter. "John," said she, "is watching for you with a gun at the head of the stairs, and I have been watching for you too from the kitchen window."

He turned away, and went to the meeting. The mother and the friendly son, Henry, desired him to return with them, saying that John was now ashamed of his conduct. He complied, but had not been long in conversation when the mother suddenly sprang up, and he saw the muzzle of a gun thrust through the door. Henry seized the weapon, dragged John into the room, and, after a fierce struggle, gained possession of the gun, and John could vent his spite only in threats and curses. "John," said the minister, "if you had shot me you would have done me no real harm, for I should have now been in heaven, but you would have been a wretched murderer, and would have had no more peace. Thank God, then, that you failed. Were complaint made against you, you would go to prison, but I shall only pray for you." Said he, "I need none of your prayers." "But you cannot help my praying for you, and when you want to be a new man come to me for advice and I will pray with you; I shall look for you every day."

Three weeks after, he came weeping, determined to give himself up to Christ. He is now a faithful local preacher, and his brother Henry is also upon the circuit.

In 1876, Pastor Dieterle went to Bachnuug, and, with two helpers, took charge of forty-four preaching places. The need of revival was great; the congregation was small, and there was no spiritual life. But a preparatory work was indispensable. He told the people, "If you really want a revival, every man will have something to do and to suffer to bring it about; and when it comes, when the careless people around you see you all awake to eternal things, and sinners broken-hearted, crying for mercy, and finding it, too, and going about with songs of deliverance, there will be quite another state of things."

He called together about thirty of his members, and from ten o'clock at night till morning read to them out of the Bible what God engaged to do for his people, and what He required of them, following it with prayer. He then pledged them to wait at the throne of grace whenever he preached.

Soon a sister went into one of the village taverns and said, "Landlord, I am going to take you to a meeting." He and all his guests laughed, but in a few minutes the lights were put out, and all followed her lead. The next night the other tavern surrendered as unconditionally. So the work went on through the week, followed by like results in other villages.

As the work grew, the people provided him with a horse to save both time and strength. Astonishment and rage seized the unbelievers. The storm broke forth anew. In pulpit and drinking resort he furnished the text for many a warm discourse. The tavern-keepers missed the best of their old customers. On three occasions he suffered violence at the hands of enemies while on horseback, one of which resulted in a three weeks' illness from blows on the head.

At this time he saw the necessity of Bible study, and for three years laid university studies aside. During the last of these he never preached without conversions. Pastor Dieterle has the last few years been located at Cannstatt, Würtemburg, where the Lord continues to bless his labours.

NEW GUINEA.

Rev. J. Grierson Scott recently paid a visit to New Guinea, and gives a very gratifying account of the work of Rev. W. G. Lawes and his wife, who have laboured for many years at Port Moresby. Writing of his coasting voyage, Mr. Scott says:—Very varied were our experiences during that time. We were often alone in the midst of excited crowds—eager to watch the doings of the "men of peace," as the missionaries are called—but not the slightest rudeness was shown; nothing but good humour prevailed. One fact speaks volumes: we landed at a spot where, four years ago, several teachers with their wives had been killed and eaten. Others, however, had taken their places. The natives crowded about us, and filled to overflowing the church where service was held, showing the utmost attention; following us to the boat, and promptly helping to get it through the surf.

A few days after our visit, the captain of a gun-boat and the doctor landed at the same place, but were almost immediately attacked; the captain was severely wounded, and both made a narrow escape with their lives. Where is the difference of treatment? We belonged to Misi Lawes, and his name is known everywhere as the symbol of peace and kindness. You may go anywhere with that, and feel perfectly safe. But the gun-boat represented to these savages cruelty and outrage, and so, without distinguishing things that differ, they wreaked their vengeance for past wrongs on the first comers, innocent though they were. These rude tribes understand right well the comparative value of love and force.

New Guinea is a noble country. It has mountains that almost rival the Alps, and waterfalls that can compete with Niagara;...its vegetation has all the richness and variety of the tropics, and its people, though fierce and treacherous, are strong and quick-witted.

Great Britain has assumed the protectorate of the southern part. Will the usual result follow, that the white invader will exterminate the natives—that the gun and the bottle will undo what the Bible and the missionary have done? Let us hope that New Guinea may form an exception to the general rule, and that British rule will be the harbinger of better and brighter days for the Papuans. So long as the vast regions of Northern Queensland remain uncolonised, one does not see why any rush should be made upon a country rich indeed in resources, but with a climate most deadly to Europeans, and with half a million of inhabitants, many of them cannibal, and all of them savage. New Guinea will never be the home of the white man; it may be, as it has been, his grave. Still, let discoveries be pursued; let trade be opened up; let the condition and habits of the people be improved; above all, let every facility be given for the proclamation of the Gospel, and a new chapter in colonial history will be written—the conflict between civilisation and barbarism will have a peaceful settlement, and New Guinea, "stretching out her hands to God," will rise up and call us blessed.

At the beginning of February Mr. Eich, of the Rhenish Missionary Society, was to go to New Guinea, where he will probably be joined by Mr. Thomas, who has hitherto laboured in the Island of Nias. Mr. Eich was for a long time in Damaraland.

THE EVANGELISTIC MISSION.

We invite our friends to join in praise for many tokens of blessing during the past winter months in connection with this Mission. Hundreds of thousands have been gathered under the preaching of the Gospel; many of the halls, especially the larger ones, have frequently been filled to the doors, and, a goodly number of precious souls have professed to pass from death unto life, many of these evidencing the reality of the work in their souls by godliness of walk, and devotion for the welfare of others. But we must wait to know the full extent of the blessing given with all the seed sown in many parts of this country, and some parts abroad, where the brethren have been permitted to preach and scatter the Word of Life.

The relief work, too, amongst the unemployed and suffering, has been more vigorously prosecuted than in any previous year, and has proved the greatest possible blessing to those whose poverty, through no cause of their own, has been relieved in food, fuel, and clothing, by the visitors who exercised the greatest care in investigating each case.

We hope shortly to send to all contributors a detailed report of the work. Our hearts are full of praise to the Lord, and we trustfully count on his faithful love to make our wants his car while we seek to make his service our delight in prospect of the coming of his beloved Son.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sunday, April 17, Psalm cxxxvi. 1—12; Monday, April 18, Psalm cxxxvi. 13—26; Tuesday, April 19, Rom. i. 1—15; Wednesday, April 20, Rom. i. 16—25; Thursday, April 21, Rom. ii. 1—16; Friday, April 22, Rom. ii. 17—29; Saturday, April 23, Rom. iii. 1—18.

MR. F. MONK, of the Evangelisation Society, London, has just concluded a successful three weeks' mission in connection with the Congregational Chapel, Wymondham, Norfolk. The services were all well attended, especially on Sundays, when the chapel was filled. Good results have already been seen. Some have been led to decision for Christ, and many more have been awakened under Mr. Monk's powerful and heart-searching addresses. Believers also have been quickened to renewed consecration of life, and the "faithful few" have been strengthened and encouraged in their endeavours to "help the Lord against the mighty."

REDRUTH TOWN MISSION.—The twenty-fifth report just issued by Mr. Wilson, the town missionary, records many interesting cases of conversion resulting from his own and his wife's labours in the Union and hospital, and in house-to-house visitation. Months and years of patient sowing have thus been at length rewarded by fruit, seen sometimes on the dying bed, and also by a gracious awakening amongst those who had long been hearing the Word. The open-air and mission services, mothers' meeting, and Sunday-school also give encouraging evidence of real heart work. During the twenty years the school has been open, hundreds have passed through it to various parts of the world, and from not a few of these letters have been received telling of salvation found through lessons learnt long ago.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—Prayer for blessing on the following special missions:—Mr. Henry Thorne, at Margate, April 16 to 26; Mr. James B. Wookey, at Bignold Hall, Forest Gate, E., during April, Sunday and Wednesday evenings.—Church Parochial Mission: Rev. W. Haslam, Congleton, to April 19; Rev. C. I. Atherton, Bolton, April 19 to 25; Rev. F. W. Dodd, Baddesley and Kingswood, Warwick, April 17 to 28; Rev. J. H. Haslam, Strood, on April 17; Chatham, 18 and 19, and Richmond, April 22; Rev. W. Hayton, at Ystradyfodwg, Pentre, Pontypridd, April 16 to 25; Rev. Dr. Morris, Ashbourne, April 16 to May 2; Revs. J. R. Willacy and G. N. Elliott, West Wickham, Beckenham, April 16 to 26; Mr. Swann Hurrell, Pendeen, Cornwall, April 16 to 26.——Special services for children, by Mr. Arrowsmith, at Christ Church, Liverpool, to April 19, and at the Mission-room, St. John's Church, Kensal-green, to April 15, by Mr. Huckett.

Among the Churches.

 We shall be happy to receive from our readers brief items of news for this page, respecting Christian work carried on, or progress achieved, in connection with any evangelical church at home or abroad.

METHODIST.

Mr. Nairn is holding a series of special evangelistic meetings at Blackhill.

Mr. J. Sampson (Cornish evangelist) has been conducting special mission services in Birmingham.

An eight days' mission was recently held at Farringdon, Alton, by Mr. H. Mould, resulting in the conversion of many souls. Many have testified to blessing received.

The Foreign Missionary Committee of the United Methodist Free Churches has decided to send a missionary, schoolmaster, and printer to the East African Mission.

As an illustration of the progress made by Methodism, Sir G. H. Chubb recently pointed out that whereas fifty years ago there were only eight London circuits, now there are forty-three.

The sixty-seventh report of the Halifax Sunday-school Union shows that in the ninety-two schools in affiliation, there are 3501 teachers and 29,994 scholars. Of these latter, 315 joined the churches during the year.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

The Friends of Bristol are actively at work. At their invitation lately a large company of Sabbath-school teachers of all denominations, and other Christian workers, met at the Meeting House, and heard a powerful lecture by William Jones, the secretary of the Peace Society.

In Jamaica, small-pox, which the natives call "God's sickness," has broken out. The school carried on by Friends has in consequence been closed, and it is expected the officers of the law will close the Meeting House for the present. American Friends are doing a noble work in the island.

At a recent meeting of the "Ilfracombe Liberal Association" Captain Bile read a paper on the "Society of Friends, commonly called Quakers," to a large audience. It is hoped that the way may be open ere long for the establishment of a meeting in the beautiful and popular North Devon watering-place.

More recently still, Ellen Clayton, Superintendent of the Hospital of Brumana, Mount Lebanon, interested a large meeting on the subject of the Friends' Mission there. A larger Meeting House is in course of erection, to meet the needs of the growing congregation on "the goodly mountain." Notwithstanding all opposition, the work grows.

Owing to the fierce opposition of the bigoted people of Santa Barbara, Mexico, stimulated by their bishop, the Friends' Mission-rooms have been burned down. No "Catholic" was permitted to harbour the missionaries, or at least allow them meeting-rooms; so a place was purchased, and while Luciano Mascorro was absent, incendiaries set the premises on fire. "Meetings are kept up inside the blackened walls."

Henry Stanley Newman and wife are now in Palestine. His letters from Rome, the Pyramids, Jerusalem, the Dead Sea, and the Holy Land are deeply instructive, as they give the impressions of an experienced traveller, on themes that are of never failing interest. He gives a vivid description of "Mission work among the Copts" of the Nile Valley, whose number is about 400,000. These descendants of the very early Christians reverence the Scriptures, but their priesthood is depraved, and their morals are low. Through the influence of Miss Whateley's Mission, however, and many other Missions, "fresh light is dawning on the great Coptic community."

PRESBYTERIAN.

The English Synod commences its sittings in Grosvenor-square Church, Manchester, on the 25th inst.

Of the one thousand members of Cowcaddens Church, Glasgow (Rev. W. Ross, pastor), an increase of over 270 in the year, 400 are engaged in organised Christian work.

Rev. Armstrong Black, of Palmerston-place, U.P. Church, Edinburgh, is giving Sunday morning Lectures on "The Life of David," which are very popular, and draw large audiences.

Well Park Church, Glasgow (Mr. Mair, pastor), has added 166 to the membership during the past year. Nearly 300 attend the minister's Bible-class, and there are 700 Sunday scholars.

Rev. Dr. Andrew Thomson, of Edinburgh, recently celebrated his ministerial jubilee, when he was presented by his congregation with a silver salver and a purse containing nine hundred sovereigns.

The membership of Kinning-park Church, Glasgow (Rev. Arch. Russell, pastor), which now numbers 774, has, with that of many others of the Free Churches, been increasing during the last five years at the rate of 30 per cent.

The White Memorial Church, Glasgow (Rev. Alex. Andrew, pastor), which began in November, 1884, with no organised membership, and no staff of office-bearers, has now 495 in full communion, and thirty-one elders and deacons.

SALVATION ARMY.

Five hundred homes were visited the first week the Leicester Depôt was established.

Between thirty and forty fishing boats, hailing from Lowestoft, fly the Salvation colours.

At Sheffield, at the close of a holiness meeting, thirty persons came out to the penitent form.

CONGREGATIONAL.

At Ilkley, special Sunday evening services for the people are held with most encouraging success.

At the Grove Church, Stratford (Rev. J. Knaggs, pastor), eighty-six new members were added last year.

At the close of a series of special services, conducted at Wanstead, and which awakened considerable interest, Rev. G. F. Cullen preached on "the City of God."

One hundred and fifty blind people, with their guides, were present at the annual treat given by the friends connected with Victoria Park Tabernacle (Rev. Geo. Snashall, pastor).

"FALLEN ON SLEEP."

Rev. S. Bradshaw, of Bantry, diocese of Armagh, a clergyman of the Irish Church.—Rev. Chas. Hendrie, of Sanday, Orkney, a Presbyterian minister.—Rev. Edward Smith, of Carriden, Scotland, a Presbyterian minister.—Rev. Wm. Graham, of Newhaven, an ardent supporter of the reconstruction of the Scottish Presbyterian Church.—Rev. David Berry, late minister at Graham-street, Airdrie.—Rev. David Waters, of Burghead, the oldest minister of the Presbyterian Church.—Mr. James S. Ness, for some time co-pastor with Dr. Hamilton, of Regent-square church.—Rev. Andrew Cruickshank, private chaplain to the Marquis of Breadalbane.—Rev. John Whitby, of Colchester, an honoured minister of the Congregational body.

HOME.

The National Drink Bill for 1886 was a third of a million lower than in 1885, the chief decrease being in wine.

Alderman Norton, Poole, of temperance fame, is about to erect a free library in that town, at a cost of £2500, in celebration of the Queen's Jubilee.

The Northern Daily Telegraph states, on reliable authority, that "country public-house keeping is an occupation that can now rarely be followed with profit."

At a recent public meeting, Mr. McLagan, M.P., said, twenty years ago, when he first entered the House of Commons, the drinking-bars would be crowded, and the tea-room almost empty. Now it is the reverse.

In Good Words Mr. John Burns states, for the voyage out and home, a Cunard steamer takes 1100 bottles of champagne, 850 of claret, 6000 of ale, 2500 of porter, 4500 of mineral waters, and 650 of various spirits!

In connection with the Reading branch of the B.W.T.A., Dr. Kate Mitchell has recently given a series of lectures on "The Physiological Aspect of Temperance," which have been very interesting and instructive, and illustrated with diagrams. The lectures have been well attended by an appreciative audience.

FOREIGN.

The Danish temperance movement has now an army of 35,000 total abstainers.

Mrs. Willard writes hopefully of temperance prospects in Berlin. She hopes, ere long, there will be a German W.C.T.U.

A new town in Texas has been named in honour of Miss Frances E. Willard, greatly to the delight of the white ribboners of the Lone Star State.

The Presbyterian Church of New Zealand has resolved to offer prizes for the best essay on "The Drinking Usages of Society, and how to remedy them."

Dr. Foster, Portland (Maine) County Prison, recently informed Neal Dow they used to have twenty delirium tremens prisoners for every one now under Prohibition.

Miss Willard's book, "Woman and Temperance,' is being translated into Japanese by Sho Nemoto, a brilliant young Japanese, and a student at Vermont College.

The twenty-fifth anniversary of the Temperance Home Mission work at the "King William House," Amsterdam, was celebrated, recently, with great enthusiasm.

A Bill has passed both Houses of the Pennsylvania Legislature to "prohibit the manufacture, sale, or keeping for sale, of intoxicating liquors to be used as beverages."

The Chief Justice of Georgia State Supreme Court has decided that brewers and liquor-dealers generally are not entitled to compensation for loss of trade, &c., through Prohibition.

OLD POSTAGE-STAMPS.—A correspondent is anxious that the many boys and girls who are fond of collecting old postage-stamps should know that in Bordeaux there is a missionary association for the help of the Home for Escaped Slaves, at St. Louis, Senegal, Africa. One way in which funds are obtained for carrying on this work of freeing and educating poor slave children, who are in a most terrible condition, is by the sale of old stamps, for which a good price is given. Any kind of stamps are welcomed; but they should be assorted, and tied in packets of 100 each, care being taken that only perfect ones are sent. Parcels should have the name and address of the sender inside, and may be sent either to Mr. J. H. Escaude, 5, Rue Gaudet, Bordeaux; or to Mr. W. Soltau (care of Mr. R. H. Hill), Durrant, Sevenoaks, Kent.

EMIGRATION FOR WOMEN.

Dear Sir,—I hope all who are wishing to join our protected parties this spring will write to me at once, so that we may know how large a compartment we ought to ask for in the Parisian, sailing on April 28, for Canada, or in the vessel on June 23. We can this season offer an additional advantage to our young friends. A house called "The Emigrants' Rest" has been given us rent free, by some friends who are connected with the Young Women's Christian Association in Liverpool. At 27, Colquett-street, very comfortable board and lodging can be secured at a moderate charge, with all the advantages of only women and girls being admitted to the Home.

Faithfully yours, Adelaide Ross.
Snelston Rectory, Ashbourne, Derbyshire.

A THEOLOGICAL HALL FOR INDIA.

Dear Sir,—The missionaries in China, I believe, act wisely in training natives of the country to teach and preach Christ. And now the Americans are teaching British missionaries what plan they should adopt. Rev. J. Ewing has asked me to elicit help in this country for a proposed Theological Hall at Scharumpur, India, N.W.P. He writes, concerning the present school:—

"This session we have thirty-four students as against twenty-nine last year. Our need of a building is very great, we are at present holding our classes and lectures in rented rooms, which are very small and in the hot season the atmosphere is almost unbearable. Besides this, there is the possibility of our being obliged to give up the house at any whim of the Mohammedan proprietor. We regard this work as of no secondary importance, believing that it will help to fix the character of the future native Church. Our school is, beyond doubt, a permanent institution."

If the teeming multitudes of Hindoostan are to be won for Christ it must be done by natives of the East, and I rejoice to see our American brethren making this movement.

I shall be happy to communicate with any who will interest themselves in this project.

Yours very truly, Geo. G. Anderson,
2, Eliot-hill, Blackheath, S.E. Lieut.-General.

FRUIT IN DUE SEASON.

Dear Sir,—In your last week's issue, you gave an account of fruit from rescue work, and add, "we should be glad to record similar instances." Last week I had a very striking one. A gentleman staying at a London hotel wrote me, asking if I remembered visiting, some five years since, a miserable abode in Blue Anchor Alley, Ratcliff (the whole place has since been condemned and pulled down). He reminded me of the fact that there was a family of seven living in one room, that the only piece of furniture was a box on which I sat and that all the glass was out of the windows. He writes, "You spoke to us of the Saviour, and helped me on my feet." He has since resided abroad and is now on a short visit to England. He encloses a gift for the mission work and adds,

"I often think of that awful den that you and your missionary visited; the words you spoke still ring in my ears. You may have forgotten them, but I well remember them; they were, 'He is able.' The Lord has raised us up, I praise his name. May He do so for many more. All the family are now on the Lord's side. I trust I am not the only one who has 'returned to give thanks.'—Yours, once on the brink of ruin, but now happy in Jesus, T. H—"

This letter has filled me with joy. It shows what fruit may spring from a word long since forgotten, and spoken in a filthy slum.

Yours faithfully, Archibald G. Brown.

HAVENS OF REFUGE.—Such are the Homes belonging to the Society for the Rescue of Young Women and Children well and touchingly described in a little booklet, by "Pearl Fisher." In these Homes, seven in number (four preventive and three rescue), one hundred and twenty fresh cases have been received since the beginning of the present year, and of these many sadly painful stories are told, sufficient to awaken sympathy and tender compassion with those so grievously wronged. A cottage home for those about to become mothers is one of the much-felt wants of the Society, which, however, is always in need both of prayerful and pecuniary support. Mr. C. Stuart Thorpe (79, Finsbury-pavement) is the secretary.

Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen.—M.A. S. £5.

PARIS.—The Religious Tract Society has engaged an agent to visit the houses of those who distribute tracts, in order to renew their supply, and to bring to their notice new publications.—Winter being the season for lectures, several pastors have been treating such subjects as—"The Christian idea of God," "The Creation according to the Bible," "Providence." M. Bessier, whose subject was "A Century of Persecution," cited a long list of "Desert" preachers, and, after describing their zeal and activity, the audience was much impressed by each name being followed by the single word—"Hanged."

CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY.

RESCUE ALL-NIGHT WORK.

This is the third year that we have opened for a Night Shelter our Mission Hall, Thrawl-street, Spitalfields, for destitute and homeless men; with an average picked up from the streets of from 100 to 150 each night, when open. Work has been secured for some, and a great deal of other help given in deserving cases.

ZENANA BIBLE AND MEDICAL MISSION

(INDIAN FEMALE NORMAL SCHOOL AND INSTRUCTION SOCIETY),

In co-operation with the Church Missionary and other Protestant Missionary Societies in India. Established 1852.

JUBILEE FUND FOR CHRISTIAN MEDICAL WORK AMONG THE WOMEN OF INDIA.

The Queen's Testimony.

Her Majesty said to one of our medical lady missionaries, who had the honour of an interview in 1881, "We should wish it generally known that we sympathize with every effort made to relieve the suffering state of the women of India."

In addition to its Evangelistic and Educational work, the Society has a Hospital and Dispensary for Women at Lucknow, where their Medical Missionary, Dr. Alice Marston, is at work.

In 1886, she reports:—

2,943 new cases.
100 patients in the Hospital.
131 patients treated in their own houses.
6,920 total attendances at Hospital and Dispensary.

The Committee desire to commemorate the Queen's Jubilee by inaugurating a Jubilee Fund for extending their medical missionary work. They have now three thoroughly qualified medical ladies, two already in India and one on the point of proceeding there. They have three other ladies, students at the London School of Medicine for Women, who will soon have completed their four years' course and be ready to proceed to India.

The Committee APPEAL for FUNDS to enable them to extend their work, and establish Hospitals for Women at Benares, Jeypore, Patna, and Fyzabad.

REV. JAMES CULROSS, D.D.

A STRIKING fact in regard to Perthshire, the central county in Scotland, and, perhaps, the richest in beauty and variety of scenery, is the large number of young men it gives to the learned professions. If you go among the small farmers there you will find that almost every family has a son who is a minister, a doctor, or a lawyer. The ambition of a pious peasant is to dedicate his promising boy to the pulpit. This has found expression in the common saying that a mother, if asked what she intends to do with her child, replies, "If he gets grace, we'll mak' a minister o' him, and if he doesna, we'll mak' a dominie (a teacher) o' him."

It was in this nursery of professional men that JAMES CULROSS saw the light of day. He was born in the parish of Bendochy, Strathmore, on November 18, 1824. He began his education in the district school, developed it in Blairgowrie, and then went to the ancient University of St. Andrews. The training he received there was thorough. As the classes were small, the Professors were able to devote more time and attention to the individual requirements of their students than is usually the case. This was an advantage, and young Culross made the most of it. With unflagging persistency he applied himself to his work, and succeeded in amassing a considerable store of knowledge, and in preparing his mind to grapple with more difficult problems than those to be faced in college class-rooms.

He had early decided to give himself to the ministry of the Gospel, but he was not sure in what regiment of Christ's army he should serve. Born and bred a Presbyterian, he was led to change his views about infant baptism. Change of views meant change of denomination. In 1847 he joined the Baptists, and finished his theological curriculum in connection with that body.

After receiving license to preach, he laboured for a year in Rothesay. In 1851 he became pastor of the Baptist Church at Stirling, where he remained nearly twenty years. That church was weak in numbers and influence when he went to it. Its place of worship was the upper part of a house in a narrow street on the slope of the hill leading to the venerable church of Greyfriars, and not far from the site of the first Secession Church in Scotland, which is and always will be associated with the name of Ebenezer Erskine. Some time after Mr. Culross's induction an opportunity for acquiring a suitable chapel arose. A new Free Church was about to be opened in the town, and the old building was for sale. It was bought by the Baptists at a moderate cost, and for sixteen years it was the scene of Mr. Culross's inspiring ministry. At the outset he had undertaken to do evangelistic work in the neighbourhood in connection with the Baptist Home Mission, but he soon withdrew, and concentrated his strength on his own church. The wisdom of this step was vindicated by the numerical increase, and, what was better, the deepening spirituality of his congregation. He was a pastor as well as a preacher. He entered the homes of his people, won their confidence, and came to know how they lived. His sympathetic nature led him to rejoice with those who rejoiced, and weep with those who wept. Children were always fond of him, and he of them. The magnetic quality which drew young hearts to him fitted him to wield a greater power at the fireside; while the knowledge gained in pastoral visits lent force and point to his pulpit utterances. In his sermons he did not talk vaguely about the sins, sorrows, and temptations of humanity; he knew the particular trials of those who listened to him, and addressed himself to them. He was both practical and spiritual. His words carried strength to men and women weary in the trivial round and daily tasks of life, and they also opened up the mysteries and sweetness of the inner life, in which God is all, and the world is nothing. This combination was very helpful; it braced for duties to be done, and met the aspirations of souls hungering after goodness and holiness.

It is hard for most busy ministers to give due recognition to the claims of study, the pulpit, and pastoral visitation. One of the three is often sacrificed to the other two. Mr. Culross was wise enough and laborious enough to map out his time so as to make provision for the three. He loved books, and knew the secret of extracting what was valuable in them. His acquaint ance with classical authors was kept up and widened in spare hours. The Hebrew Bible was diligently studied, and every aid to its interpretation was pressed into service. The various branches of theology were investigated, not to furnish weapons for polemical discussions, or ideas for a sermon, but for the sake of truth. He thought as well as read, and he thought for the joy of thinking.

The labours of the study bore fruit in the work of the pulpit. Most preachers are but echoes; James Culross was a voice, strong, clear, and distinct. He was not original, in the sense that all he said was absolutely new, but he was original in that his words bore the stamp of an individual thinker and a pronounced personality. His sermons were fresh as the dew that falls in the morning, and beautiful as the flowers that come in May. They did not sacrifice usefulness to beauty. Their aim was not so much to captivate the fancy or minister to the intellect—though they did both—as to touch the conscience, and so awaken men to the privileges of a new personal life. Each hearer felt himself alone before God, and in the light of that presence realised the golden opportunities and far-reaching responsibilities which were his. In form every sermon was a graceful whole, symmetrical in all its parts. It grew out of a text, as a plant grows out of a seed; first the blade, then the ear, and then the full corn in the ear. In matter it was strictly evangelical. The great facts of Christianity—the Incarnation, in which God became man; the Life of obedience lived; the Death of satisfaction died; the Resurrection of power, and the ever-living Intercessor—were fully and lovingly dwelt upon. The sympathetic nature of the preacher qualified him to be an ambassador of love. For him Christ was the central figure in the universe, and the Cross, with its message of reconciliation, the central fact. Holding definite conceptions of truth, he preached after no ambiguous fashion. He set up a mark Sabbath by Sabbath, and strove hard to hit it. Archbishop Whately once sarcastically said, "In many a sermon the preacher aims at nothing, and hits it." Mr. Culross belonged to a different and better order of divines. His earnest endeavour was to lead sinners to the feet of the Saviour, and to produce in Christians characters which would recall something of the mind that was in Jesus Christ.

We cannot wonder that such a ministry was highly appreciated by those who came under its influence. The pity was that more did not come within its scope. Mr. Culross was modest to a fault. That and the fact of his connection with a denomination by no means strong north of the Border kept Scotland ignorant of his existence. But some thoughtful and devout men discovered him. They listened to him with admiration and profit, and came back as often as they could. Distinguished strangers occasionally found their way to the little chapel. Thomas Cooper, well known as the author of several excellent books, and as a remarkably able defender of the faith he once assailed, visited it one Sabbath morning. Mr. Culross saw him, and urged him to preach, as he himself was badly prepared. "But," said Mr. Cooper to the friend who told us the incident, "I knew better; I had come to enjoy a spiritual feast, and was not disappointed."

The years of the Stirling pastorate into truth for the minister, and increased spiritual prosperity for the congregation. Sabbath evening lectures on Gospel themes were a special feature in the work of the later years. Out of them have come several of Mr. Culross's books. "Lazarus Revived," "The Father revealed in the Son," and "Jesus showing Mercy" had their origin in this way. They were so suggestive in matter, original in statement, and beautiful in literary finish that the Alma Mater of the author thought it right to honour him with the degree of Doctor of Divinity. It so happened that the intimation of the honour reached Mr. Culross on St. Valentine's Day. The day and his modesty led him to regard the document with suspicion. He laid it aside, and said nothing about it, till a paragraph in the public prints convinced him that he had not been hoaxed.

In 1870 Dr. Culross received and accepted a call from a newly formed congregation at Highbury, in the North of London. He laboured there for nearly seven years, at the end of which he returned to Scotland to take charge of Adelaide-place Church, Glasgow. But England wanted him back again. The important office of President of the Baptist College, Bristol, became vacant, and he was asked to fill it. He closed with the invitation, and entered on the duties he now discharges to the heartfelt delight and satisfaction of his students. He is admirably qualified to teach those who in their turn are to be teachers of men. The old passion for preaching burns bright on the altar of his heart; scarcely a Sabbath passes in which he does not occupy some pulpit. Thus, in teaching and preaching, he lives laborious days, seeking to serve God and his generation as best he can.

Dr. Culross is President of the Baptist Union for the current year, and, in that capacity, will deliver his Inaugural Address at Bloomsbury Chapel, W.C., on Monday next at noon.

Dr. Culross is an honoured and beloved teacher to many who never heard his voice or looked on his face. His books have enlightened the minds and blessed the souls of thousands. They are worth their weight in gold. That we do not exaggerate their value may be seen in the fact that they are highly praised by critics not given to writing panegyrics. Mr. Spurgeon, for example, says, "Above all living teachers we prefer Dr. Culross," and again, "One of the excellences of Dr. Culross is the freshness of his thought," and yet again, "Half-a dozen readings will only make it (‘John, to those who meditate upon what they read."

It is a keenly appreciative study of the life and work of the beloved Apostle. It draws a vivid portrait of the man, tells the story of his activity, and lingers lovingly on the spiritual qualities which made up his character. Thoughtful, fresh, and tender, this monograph is a genuine contribution to Johannine literature, and is radiant with heavenly meaning to the eye that can see and the heart that can receive the deep things of God. "Thy First Love" is an exposition of the Letter to Ephesus. It abounds in practical touches, pathetic appeals, and heart-subduing revelations of Divine tenderness and forbearance. "Behold, I stand at the door and knock" is a study of Christ's message to Laodicea, in which the yearning love of the Saviour is set forth with a ripeness of thought, a beauty of expression, and a power of going right to the conscience peculiar to itself.*

The man who by voice and pen has done so much for the Church of Christ deserves well of his brethren. He did not seek earthly honours, but they have come to him. He has been lifted out of the obscurity of a humble pastorate to a place of influence and trust. Yet he is as simple in mind and lowly in demeanour as he was in earlier days. Popularity and power have not dazzled his vision or turned his head. What was said of another may be said of him, "He keeps his upper windows open to the holy winds and pure lights of heaven." So earth's baubles do not lure him aside from meekness of spirit and lowliness of service. Those who are personally acquainted with Dr. Culross tell us that the man is greater than the writer or the preacher. One who knows him well writes of him: "As a pastor, teacher, counsellor, and friend, I have never seen his equal. As a pastor he fed us with heaven's finest provision. I might forget his words, but the savour of the truth taught left its influence on me throughout the week." This is the language of friendship. Yet it does not exaggerate the personal power James Culross exercises, though it places him in the band of those choice spirits regarding whom the poet sings:—

> There are in this loud stunning tide
>   Of human care and crime,
> With whom the melodies abide
>   Of the everlasting chime,
> Who carry music in their heart
> Through dusty lane and wrangling mart.

BIBLE CHARACTERS A LITERARY MARVEL.—In Good Words for April there is the first of a series of papers on "Bible Characters," from the pen of the late Charles Reade, the novelist:—"The characters in Scripture are a literary marvel. About seventeen writers, all Israelites, some of them with what would now-a-days be called a little learning, some without, some writing in Hebrew, some in Greek, all achieved one wonder. They sat down to record great deeds done, and great words spoken, in Egypt, Syria, Mesopotamia, and Palestine, which districts united are but a slice of the East, and they told them wondrous briefly, yet so that immortal and world-wide characters rise like exhalations from the record. Written in the East, these characters live for ever in the West; written in one province, they pervade the world; penned in rude times, they are prized more and more as civilisation advances; product of antiquity, they come home to the business and bosoms of men, women, and children in modern days. Then is it any exaggeration to say that the ‘characters of Scripture are a MISSIONARY METHODS.

By Rev. J. HUDSON TAYLOR.

I have read with deep interest, since coming to Scotland, the letter of Mr. Reginald Radcliffe and Mr. J. E. Mathieson on "Unpaid Native Agency in Heathen Lands," in your issue of March 24, with the very important quotation of the words used by Rev. Donald MacIver, at the Mildmay Missionary Conference, of 1886. The letter of Mr. Railton on the same subject in the following number has also greatly interested me, as I doubt not it did many of your readers. It is scarcely possible to exaggerate the importance of the considerations brought forward in these letters. I fully sympathise with Mr. Railton (and I am sure Mr. Radcliffe and Mr. Mathieson do so too), in his feeling that we Christians at home should be not less self-denying than those who are labouring abroad; and that the work of those of us who are missionaries will be a failure if we expect more self-denial from our native converts and native helpers than we manifest ourselves. The stream never rises higher than its source; and though Christ Himself is the true source, yet the missionary is to many as a tank or a reservoir from which the supplies are distributed.

Does this fact, however, necessitate our overlooking the important distinction that exists between the circumstances of the native Christian and the foreign missionary, who is a stranger to the country in which he labours, and who will die, and not live, if he neglect measures necessary for the maintenance of his own physical life—measures which are not only not required by the natives among whom he lives, but would be injurious to them. It is not a question of distinction of colour, or of superiority of race; it is simply a recognition of the fact that the English missionary is not acclamatised, and in some places needs to have a residence and diet that are unsuited to the acclimatised native. On the other hand, so that the body is taken care of for the Lord, and health not needlessly thrown away, I have always maintained that the more inexpensively we could live, and the nearer we could approach to the natives in residence, dress, diet, manner, and customs, the better; and this is largely carried out by the missionaries of the China Inland Mission.

Again, the resources of Christ's kingdom ought certainly to be more than equal to the support of multitudes of native agents; but would those resources be best expended in that way? Thirty years ago, when I commenced my work in China, my thought was very much like that which Mr. Railton commends in his letter—viz., that resources should be found for the maintenance, without any secular labour, of large numbers of native agents, besides utilising the labours of a host of unpaid converts working in their leisure time, under each of these paid superintendents. In brief, my experience has been this: Chinese Christian men in their leisure time did a useful work as evangelists which God blessed. Then, funds were supplied for their maintenance, in the hope that by giving the whole of their lives to evangelistic work they would be much more used of God. The amount supplied to the native helpers was, in most cases, less than that which they had procured by their own exertions, and not more. But although many of them were not personally injured in spirit by being supported, yet their influence was so diminished that the fruit of their labour was less after their whole time was devoted to it than it had been before, when they were working for their own maintenance; and this because of the prejudice created against them, by the fact that they were supported by foreign funds; and were considered by the natives around them, though most unjustly, as rice Christians. In our own work, while we have still such supported agents, we are discouraging this kind of thing, and, as much as possible, substituting unpaid voluntary as we are able to dispense with the latter, we find the blessing is greater and not less; while the cost of the work is, of course, diminished.

I have above instanced the case of the best native agents. But there is the other aspect of such work—viz., that the mere paying such agents is found to be a strong inducement to some men to begin hypocritically to labour, professedly from love, while really from the hope of getting into positions which they have long coveted. So that, besides the better class of native helpers, a very inferior class has sprung up, in spite of all the caution and oversight that could be brought to bear on their case. Now, if the best men can usually do better work unpaid, and the inferior men will not seek positions for which they are unqualified, apart from the pay, is it not the wise course, as far as practicable, to discourage paid native agency? This also is the conclusion of Rev. J. L. Nevius, D.D., and of others who have been in China much longer than Dr. Nevius or myself.

Another point, referred to by Messrs. Radcliffe and Mathieson, is of great importance: The Apostle Paul committed the flock at Ephesus to the care of a body of unpaid native overseers. Is it necessary for the missionary to depart from this precedent, by continuing in pastoral charge of his converts, or should this course be exceptional? And if he do not remain himself, is it an essential condition ere he move forward that a paid native pastor be left in charge?

I think most of your readers will feel the importance of taking God's Word as our guide, and rather seeking to rise up to it than to improve upon it. As Dr. Nevius in his important papers has shown, many of us might have avoided much of the disappointment of thirty years' labour had we commenced on these Apostolic lines, instead of having to be driven to them by our failures. The whole world is still very much in the position in which Europe and Western Asia were when St. Paul commenced his labours. We find the Apostle gathering a little company of Christians, and for fear he should stay too long, in many cases God permitted him to be sent away by persecution; yet the churches progressed. Again he revisits them, and ordains elders among the little gatherings of believers, and leaves the churches under their care, and they continue to be blessed. In the case of the Ephesian overseers referred to, they were to work with their own hands, and to support the weak disciples, and not to be supported by the church. Thus Paul and his companions were free to proceed and found churches elsewhere.

We have not, it is true, in heathen lands a colony of instructed Jews, knowing the local language and acquainted with the Scriptures, who, when converted, are immediately qualified to teach. But it has surprised most of us to see how wonderfully the Holy Spirit teaches some among each little company of converted heathen, and qualifies them to be teachers. Dr. Nevius has found it possible to collect from a wide area a number of such teachers, and to give them from time to time a month's Scriptural instruction and training, sending them back again to work on their farms or at their trades, and to communicate that which they have learned to their little flocks around them. Dr. Nevius's work is extensive. I believe he has sixty or seventy little churches or gatherings of Christians, and he and only two paid native helpers superintend the whole work. Might not this line of things be greatly extended, at a moderate cost, and with immense blessing?

PERHAPS TO-DAY.

"This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all accept tion, that Christ Jesus came into the world to sav sinners."—1 Tim. i. 15.

"Yet a little while, and He that shall come will come, and will not tarry."—Heb. x. 37.

It is whispered in the morning,
  When the sunlight gilds the east,
And the earth outblooms in brightness,
  From the shades of night released;
'Tis the hymn of waking woodlands,
  In their mingled chirp and hum:
"Perhaps to-day in glory
  The Lord of Life will come;
For night must soon be over,
  Where our pilgrim lamp is dim,
And we watch, in hope and patience,
  For the glorious sight of Him
Whose appearing shall be dawnlight
  Of a cloudless, endless day,
To the hearts that, in the shadows,
  For his coming watch and pray."

It is whispered in the noontide
  Of the city's dust and strife,
'Mid the market's whirl and flurry,
  And the surge and roar of life;
When the kingly sun makes progress
  Through the city's smoke and mist,
And the spires blush gold and crimson
  Which his regal lips have kissed:
For the world is faint and jaded
  By the rivalry and rush
Of its commerce and competing,
  By the jostle and the crush;
And, surely, God is weary
  Of its waywardness and sin;
Yes, methinks, through mist and tumult,
  Soon the Christ will enter in.

It is whispered in the evening,
  By the couch of pain and ease,
When the heart at heaven's gateway
  Prays and sings on bended knees;
And the stars shine out above it,
  Like a myriad angel-eyes
That rain their light upon us
  From their home in Paradise:
For, when sultry day is over,
  And there comes the long, deep hush
That succeeds the noontide's hurry,
  And the sunset's tiréd flush,
The heart may hear a footstep
  Sounding down the golden way,
And know that He is coming
  Soon, to close life's fevered day.

In the morning, in the noontide,
  And at evening, may I hear,
Blessed Lord, thy precious promise,
  And believe that Thou art near.
"I come quickly"—Thou hast said it,
  "In a moment" it shall be;
"In the twinkling of an eye," Lord,
  We shall thy fair presence see.
"Even so"—teach me to say it,
  Yea, to live it, day by day;
May I walk with heart expectant
  Thus to meet Thee on the way;
Looking for Thee, may I travel
  To the brightness of thy light;
Looking to Thee, may that brightness
  Guide and cheer me through the night!

BRISTOL.—With the object of influencing men in the upper classes of society, a promising effort has for some time been made in this city by an association formed for this purpose. Too often, it has been felt, it is taken for granted that this class of persons are not in need of special evangelistic effort; but the aim of this association is to point out that education, refinement, and their attendant advantages are not religion, and to promote the quiet study of God's Word. Sunday afternoon Bible-classes are held at the residences of some friends, and at the house of another a prayer-meeting is held on Saturday evenings. Already there are upwards of one hundred members and associates, and marked blessing has resulted from the movement. Mr. R. Blackmore, the hon.

THE WITNESSING CHURCH.—4.

A MISSIONARY SERMON

BY THE LATE REV. JOHN HARRIS, D.D.

"Ye are my witnesses, saith the Lord, that I am God."—ISA. xliii. 12.

If the Church was designed to be aggressive, as its history has proved that is was, let us, thirdly, attempt to enforce that design; and we shall find that the motives of the Christian Church, and its responsibility as a witness for God, are greater now than at any preceding period. Not only do all the original motives to this duty exist, they exist in aggravated force, and others in addition have come to reinforce them.

(1) For instance, the first witnesses for Christ required no higher motive to duty than the Divine command of their risen Lord. They no sooner saw that He designed his Church to bear his testimony to the world, than they hastened to obey. That design is not merely essentially the same—it is now more apparent than ever. Could those first witnesses return to the Church on earth again, they would find that the history of every church, since the time of Christ, had unceasingly illustrated and enforced that design, without a moment's intermission. "He that hath ears to hear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches." And this is the language of the Spirit as He conducts us over the ruins of once flourishing churches —"Exist aggressively, or not at all. Behold in the state of every existing Christian Church an illustration of the principle, that to act the evangelical missionary Church is to prosper; to neglect it is to languish and perish."

(2) "But is there the same necessity for a witnessing Church now as at first?" The wants of the world are more urgent than ever; or, what amounts to the same thing in the matter of our responsibility, we are better acquainted with them, and our facilities for meeting them, as far as Christian instrumentality can meet them, are greater than ever. The map of the world, in the days of the Apostles, was only the map of a province, compared with that which lies open before us. Every geographical discovery since, has only served to enlarge our ideas of the great Satanic empire. Oh, in what a small minority does the Christian stand! What a fearful expanse of darkness around him!—and that darkness how dense!—and what hideous enormities does it conceal! There, Cruelty has its chosen habitation, and feasts perpetually on human groans. There, Superstition has its temples, and its sacrifices of human suffering, and its music of lamentation and mourning and woe. There, Sin has its priesthood — its ceremonial of murder, and its ritual of lust!

By a very slight effort of the imagination, we can cause the hosts of evil to pass before us; and what a spectacle to behold! First, come the Jews out of all nations under heaven, each with a veil over his heart, and stained with the blood of the Just One. Next, nominal Christians, by myriads, and from all parts of Europe, headed by one who drags a Bible in triumph, as a dangerous book, and embraces an image, or an amulet, instead. Then comes the crescent of imposture, followed by Turkey and Persia, by large tracts of India, the islands of the Eastern sea, Egypt and northern Africa, the inhabitants of the largest and the fairest portions of the globe. After these, the swarthy tribes of Africa, central, western, and southern, with their descendants of the Western Indies, laden with the charms of their Fetish worship. Now come the aborigines of the two Americas, and the islanders of the great Pacific—fresh from the scalp-dance, the cannibal feast, or the worship of the snake-god. Next, the selfish Chinese, one-third of the species—in appearance all idolaters—in reality all atheists—a world of atheists, to whom all truth is a fable, and all virtue a mystery. Last comes India—the nations of southern Asia, and the many islands of the Eastern sea, a thousand tribes, including infanticides, cannibals, and the offerers of human blood, dragging their idols-gods, an endless train, with Juggernaut at their head, worn with the toil of their penances, and marked with the scars of self-torture. And who are these that close the train? The Thugs of India, just discovered—a vast fraternity of secret murderers—the votaries of Kalee, who has given one-half of the human race to be slaughtered for her honour. O God! and is this thy world? Are these thy creatures? Where is thy Church? O righteous Father, the world hath not known Thee, and thy Church, appointed to declare Thee, hath neglected to fulfil her trust! Christians, did you count their numbers as they passed? Six hundred millions at least. Did you ask yourselves, as they passed, whither they were going? Follow them and see. Can you do so, even in imagination, without feeling an impulse to rush and erect the Cross between them and ruin? That is your office; that is the great practical design for which the Church exists, to go and testify this faithful saying, that Christ has come to save them all. "Ye are my witnesses, saith the Lord."

(3) This reminds us of another inducement—the testimony of the Gospel is divinely adapted to them. It is not the fearful burden of Isaiah, threatening judicial blindness and hardness of heart, or we might hesitate to go. It is Gospel. It is a message from Pity to misery, an invitation from Mercy to guilt. It is a gift from the fulness of God to the emptiness of man. The witness for Christ takes with him a treasure more precious than the ancient Jew, could he have taken the ark of the Temple. Christian missionaries, you take with you tears, the tears of incarnate compassion; blood, the expiatory blood of the Son of God. "Before your eyes," said the Apostle to the Galatians, "Jesus Christ hath been evidently set forth, crucified among you." Brethren, you go to India with the Cross, to repeat the scenes of Calvary, to let the Hindoo see Christ crucified before his eyes. Do you feel sufficiently the grandeur of your message? You go to Africa with the identical Gospel that Paul took to Rome. You go to China with the identical blessing that Christ brought from heaven. Oh, it was the consideration of their subject—its necessity, its adaptation, its infinite grace and glory, which fired the Apostles —which made them think little of life itself when this was at stake—which made them wonder that any should suppose that persecution could affright them from their office; which gave them the air of ambassadors, the port of kings; which would have led them, if necessary, to contend for precedence with an angel. You go to address a nature which, however depraved, was originally pre-configured to the truth, and the message you bear is divinely adapted to the moral state which that depravity has created—and the Spirit goes with you to give it effect. You go to tell the victims of imposture of essential truth; to point corpse of her husband to Him who is the resurrection and the life; to tell the infanticide mother that she may save her offspring, and may press them to her heart; to tell the followers of Boodha of a true incarnation; and the parched pilgrim of the desert of a well of water that springeth up to everlasting life; and the devotee of the Ganges, of the washing of regeneration and the renewing of the Holy Ghost; and the self-torturing votary of cruelty, that the name of God is love; and the self-immolating worshipper of Juggernaut, of the sacrifice offered once for all, and of the blood which cleanseth from all sin. Oh, find out the nation where guilt has been hourly accumulating ever since the time of the deluge! and the command of Christ is, "Go to it." And, having gone, challenge them to produce the one guiltiest man of their nation; and the command of Christ is, "Offer him redemption through the blood of the cross." Have they, as many of the nations have, a fabulous tradition that such or such a cavern is the mouth of hell? Ask them to lead you to it; for even there, could the dreadful spot be found, your commission would extend—to the very brink; for He whom you preach is able to save even to that uttermost.

In testifying to the necessity and divinity of the Gospel, you occupy higher ground than did even the Apostles. Since their day nearly eighteen hundred years have added their testimony to the fact that man by searching cannot find out God—that spiritual deliverance, to be effectual, must come direct from heaven; and nearly eighteen hundred years have only served to demonstrate the sufficiency of the Gospel remedy. Guilt which might destroy a world has been cancelled by it; iron chains of sin have been burst asunder; hearts filled with pollution made habitations of God; where Satan's seat was, happy communities have been formed; earth has been blessed by it, and heaven has been hourly growing louder in its praise. In affirming its necessity, then, all history is speaking in your voice; the nations that have perished—all the lost—rise up and confirm your testimony, and urge you to repeat it with a deeper, and yet deeper, emphasis. And in proclaiming its efficacy, the thousands who in every age have been saved by it, urge you to speak louder in its praise—the chorus of heaven comes to your aid, ascribing "salvation to the Lamb that was slain."

(4) Again, think of the certainty that the testimony of the Gospel shall ultimately and universally prevail. We do not undertake to say that the present kind of Christian instrumentality alone will cause it to prevail—that no new machinery, no miraculous agency, will come to its aid. But, whatever the means employed, the end will be gained — and gained as the result of all that had in any way been Scripturally done to obtain it—the Gospel, in the most enlarged sense, shall be preached as a witness to all nations.

Where now is Diana of the Ephesians? Where now are Jupiter and the gods of Greece?—and where the whole Pantheon of Rome? The first Christians testified against them, and they vanished. Witnesses for Christ came to Britain—and where now are Woden, and all the Saxon gods, Hessus, and all the more ancient and sanguinary rites of the Druids? The idols we assail have long since been routed; and the sword we wield routed them. The gods of India are the same, under different names, which Italy and Greece adored; the sword of the shall it do less now in the East? Many of them are already fallen. "Bel boweth down, and Nebo stoopeth." And the Christian missionary, approaching and standing before the most crowded temple and the firmest throne that idolatry boasts, is divinely warranted in taking up a burden against it, and saying, "Thy days are numbered, and thine end draweth near." Yes, if there be stability in a Divine decree—merit in the mediation of Christ,—if any truth in the doctrine of his reign—any power in the agency of his Spirit, the prediction shall be fulfilled. Prior to the ultimate triumph of the Gospel, indeed, unnumbered events may transpire which have not yet been conceived. It is possible, even, that the affairs of the kingdom of Christ may at times assume a doubtful aspect, and his people may begin to wonder how He can retrieve them. But He sees no difficulty—He feels no perplexity. At any moment, He can touch some secret spring which shall, silently and imperceptibly, but most effectually, change the whole aspect of his affairs. Looking on the end, He sees nothing desirable which He has not provided for,—nothing adverse which He has not provided against. The history of the world, to the latest period of time, is written already in his mind. Every province of idolatry and error has its limit and its date appointed there. The angel is already selected who shall eventually shout, "Babylon is fallen." The chorus is appointed whose voices are to resound: "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ; and He shall reign for ever and ever." "And I heard as it were the voice of a great multitude, and as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thunderings, saying, Halleluia, for the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth." If we listen, we can hear that voice too; for even now are they rehearsing for that glorious day—and every hour increases the chorus, and every echo that reaches us rebukes our indolence as witnesses for God, and proclaims the dignity of our office, and the certainty of our success.

(5) And, then, think what the consequences of that success would be. Civilisation? The missionary of the Cross, indeed, is the missionary of civilisation. This the Gospel taught first at imperial Rome — cleansing her amphitheatre of human blood; and evincing that her boasted civilisation had been only a splendid barbarism. Morality? The missionary of the Cross is the missionary of morality. The Gospel produced charity even in Judea, humility at Athens, chastity at Corinth, humanity at Rome. And wherever it has gone, in our own day, liberty, morality, education, the arts of civilisation, and the blessings of commerce, have followed in its train. It has extinguished the fires of the suttee, called away the cannibal from his unholy feast, and broken slave-chains of a million men. It elevates the barbarian into a man, and raises the man into a useful member of society. It turns the wandering horde of the wilderness into a civilised community, and calls it to take rank among the nations. There is but one art which the Gospel does not promote; as the peacemaker of the world, it steps between the ranks of war, and, taking the weapons of death away, it declares that men shall learn war no more; and, joining their hands in amity, it says to them, "Love as brethren." Oh! could mere human civilisation effect results such as these, how soon would her image be set and worship! But these are triumphs for the Gospel alone, and triumphs which it achieves incidentally, by aiming at greater things than these.

The Gospel is the power of God unto salvation. It raises the savage into the man by making him a new creature in Christ Jesus; it prepares him for civil society by making him a member of a Christian church. In the zeal of its new-found existence, the Church becomes a witness for Christ to others; the Word of God sounds forth into all the regions round about; and similiar triumphs result, only to be followed by similar labours and triumphs again. Thus every step of present success is a new facility for a further advance, and an additional pledge of universal triumph.

There is a day—call it the Millennium, or by any other name—there is a period yet destined to bless the earth, when it shall no more be necessary to witness for God, for all shall know Him; the knowledge of his glory shall fill the earth as the waters cover the sea. Happy state of Christian triumph!—a day without a cloud—the reproach of indolence wiped away from the Church, and of ignorance from the world. Truth shall have completed the conquest of error—Christ shall have given law to the world—and, impressing his image on every heart, shall receive the homage of a renovated race. These are visions; but they are the visions of God, and let nothing rob us of the inspiration to be derived from gazing at them. They are visions; but visions painted by the hand of God, dear in every age to the Church of God, gazed on in death by the Son of God. Yes, then they were brought and set before Him, and such was the joy with which they filled Him, that He endured the cross, despising the shame. Then, on the lofty moral elevation of the cross, all the ages of time, and all the triumphs of his Church, passed in review before Him. He saw our missionaries go forth in his name to distant climes—again He looked, and saw them surrounded by ten thousand converts to his grace. He saw the veil fall from the hearts of the Jews; and heard their bitter mourning as they stood looking at Him whom they had pierced. He saw Ethiopia stretching out her hands unto God; and heard her, as the slave-chains fell from her loins, exulting in a double liberty. He heard his name shouted from land to land as the watchword of salvation, and marked how its very echo shook and brought down the pillars of the empire of sin. He saw the race of Ishmael that now traverses the desert tracts of Arabia—the castes of India with their number infinite—the rational Chinese—the Tartar hordes—the unknown and snow-concealed inhabitants of the north—the tribes of Europe—and all the islands of the sea; He saw them flocking into his kingdom—his grace the theme of every tongue—his glory the object of every eye. He saw of the travail of his soul, and was satisfied; his soul was satisfied! Glorious intimation! Even in the hour of its travail, it was satisfied. What an unlimited vision of human happiness must it have been! Happiness not bounded by time, but filling the expanse of eternity! His prophetic eye caught even then a view of the infinite result in heaven! His ear caught the far, far-distant shout of his redeemed and glorified Church, singing, "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain!" If we would do justice to our office as witnesses for God—if we would catch the true often cross, as He did, the threshold of eternity—transport ourselves ten thousand ages hence into the blessedness of heaven, and behold the fruits of our instrumentality there, still adding new joy to angels, new crowns to Jesus, new tides of glory around the throne of God. Realising that scene, we should gird up our loins afresh, as if a new commandment had come down from heaven, calling us by name to be witnesses for God.

GOSPEL WORK IN SYDNEY.

I should like to record a few incidents that have recently come under my observation during a visit to Sydney. Arriving in town one Thursday evening, and finding no advertisement of any special meeting for the evening, I sallied out in quest of anything to interest me. I had not far to go. The sound of a drum advertised something was going on near the base of the beautiful Town Hall, and in close juxtaposition to the central police station. I could see the four bright lights, and a standard held aloft, which emblems indicated the presence of the Salvation Army. Presently they marched off to the Goulburn-street barracks, followed by a large and orderly crowd. The meeting here was well sustained and good work for the Master was accomplished.

Saturday and Sunday evenings I spent at the Y.M.C.A., where Mr. Arundel, from London, spoke on each occasion. On Sunday night there was a large muster of young men, and a number remained to the after-meeting, and were directed to Christ by the workers in the hall. Part of Sunday afternoon and evening I spent at the Protestant Hall with the Wesleyan Evangelistic Band, who are doing a grand work.

I met Mr. Gilbert, whose work amongst the sailors reminded me of Mr. Reginald Radcliffe and Ratcliff-highway. He is an enthusiast in the Lord's work, and seems the right man in the right place. Many letters from converted seamen testifying to the power of God—the Gospel of Christ.

On Sunday forenoon I had a lift by the way, listening to a discourse on prayer, by Rev. Dr. Jefferis, who always deals with his subjects in a masterly manner, and who reads the Bible so as to bring out the sense. Next evening I found myself in a tent, pitched in a rather dingy part of the slums, where services are being held, either under the auspices of the City Mission, or of the Congregational body, I did not ascertain which. However, I found Dr. Jefferis presiding, and surrounded by a large choir. A number of addresses were given, in fact, too many, and the congregation was slipping away before the net was drawn in. Some remained to be spoken to, and some to sign the pledge.

At that consecrated spot, near the town hall, held at times by the Salvation Army, and again by the Wesleyans, as the clock struck ten I came upon a crowd, and, seeing a swinging light, I thought the Salvationists were out again. But, no, another agency was here at work, for Mr. G. E. Ardell and a few helpers were finishing their Blue Ribbon Gospel service by tacking blue ribbons on the bystanders. I gave him the hand of fellowship, and returned to my hotel to record what I had seen.

PITCHERS AND LAMPS.

By KATE W. HAMILTON.

This particular pitcher was old-fashioned, awkward, and ugly enough to gratify any æsthetic taste. If it held a lamp, Mrs. Lander did not know it. She was enraptured when she discovered it in a down-town crockery store, and having "purchased it at a bargain" by paying three times what it was worth, carried it home to decorate it and make it more æsthetic and ugly still; for Mrs. Lander was not yet a proficient in ceramic art. But she intended to be, and she had decided that as soon as the pitcher should be completed she would purchase other pieces sufficiently unlike it to make a set.

She was absorbed in her occupation when the door-bell rang, and Bridget's head inserted itself at the partly open door.

"A lady to see you, ma'am."

"Book agent, I suppose," sighed Mrs. Lander, laying down her brush reluctantly.

But instead of one of that much-abused class, the caller proved to be a bright-eyed, earnest-faced lady, with a request that Mrs. Lander would entertain one or more delegates to the Women's Missionary Convention.

"Perhaps we may have already secured places enough, but it is sure to be a large and enthusiastic meeting, you know."

Mrs. Lander did not know anything about it. She had heard something, to be sure, but it was forgotten as soon as heard. Mrs. Lander never attended missionary meetings. Years before, when she was a young girl, she had gone regularly to the monthly concert in the old church at home, for the very good reason that her parents believed in it and never inquired whether she did or not. If those monthly concerts had been expressly designed to awaken in the ordinary mind a desire not to know anything about missions, they could scarcely have been more successful. They were always held in the afternoon, when the old church looked greyer and grimmer than ever. Most of the people stayed away, and the few who came scattered themselves so widely through the church as to add to its deserted and forlorn appearance. There was no sermon—"a little talk would do well enough for monthly concerts." They always sang "From Greenland's Icy Mountains," which was the only cheerful feature of the occasion. The "heathen" were not individualised, but served and swallowed in one indigestible mass. Then some good brother prayed that the "watchmen on Zion's walls might see eye to eye"—what that might mean Mrs. Lander had not the faintest idea—and that "the islands of the sea might be speedily converted," with no definite conception in his own mind, or that of anyone else, what those islands were, or where they were located. And then everybody went home, thankful that the dull duty was over for one month more.

In view of these early experiences, a missionary meeting was not an enticing prospect to Mrs. Lander. She did not positively determine that she would never go to them—it is not always comfortable to be too honest, even with one's self – she had only told herself that she was too busy. Fortunately, however, people did not all think alike, and there were ladies of more than ordinary intelligence and of high social rank who seemed really interested in such matters. She had noticed that fact with secret wonder, and there was something of the same wonder in her eyes as she surveyed her bright-faced caller. It would be pleasant to oblige these ladies, and, moreover—human motives being usually somewhat mixed—she reflected that her front chamber was lovely in its new furniture of crimson and grey, and it was a pity not to have someone see it! So she graciously consented to receive a delegate, and went back to her pottery with a complacent feeling of having fulfilled her missionary duty at last.

On the bright morning following there were three people, at three different points of the an old woman with a rusty satchel, a boy with a stone, and a lady with a sick headache. The old woman with the satchel thought she knew her errand perfectly. She had planned, all the time she was knitting stockings and selling eggs to earn the money, for this great event of her life—going up to the women's missionary convention in the city. Her daughter-in-law thought it "all nonsense for mother to go off alone so among strangers." But the old grey head shook a decided negative. She wanted to hear from those fresh from the field how the King's armies were advancing, and where the royal banner was planted.

"I want the refreshin' to my own soul," she said. "And if David could go up to hear, and to carry a little parched corn, in his day, I guess I can go with my little offering now."

The boy with the stone had no idea of a mission. He had picked up the stone and put it in his pocket, to consort with a broken knife, some rusty nails, three marbles, a bit of chewing gum, a leathern sling, and an old padlock. That stone might prove a convenient article if he should come across a dog, a window, or something else that did not need to be hit; and, meanwhile, it was just as valuable as the other treasures he had accumulated.

The lady with the headache was in dire dismay, because she thought her mission ended when the headache began. She was one of the prime movers and directors of the Convention. Head and hands had been busy with it for weeks. And now, on this important day, when she particularly desired to be at her post to assign strangers who came unannounced to the places held in reserve, this distracting pain kept her a prisoner at home. It must get better! She could not be sick, she declared. But it was one of those persevering, unreasonable, not-to-be-argued-out-of-the-matter headaches that all nervous women know, and of course it was victorious. The hot head sank helplessly on its pillow at last, and with an odd little compromise between a groan and a laugh, the lady gave up the contest.

"It is of no use. The world did exist after a fashion before I came into it, so I suppose it may be possible for it to move on for one day longer even if I am kept out of it. I must accept your offer, Bob. Go and do your best."

Bob was a young gentleman with the kindest heart, the best intentions, and the least tact imaginable. He was home on a college vacation, and had offered to take his mother's place for the day, and fulfil its duties to the best of his ability. Very fine ability, too, Mr. Bob privately considered it, though he did not discover much room for its exercise in a position like this. In his secret heart he wondered why his mother and the other ladies should make so much fuss over so very simple a matter.

"Easiest thing in the world," said Mr. Bob, looking at a new arrival and then at his list; "here's a delegate that wants a place, and here's a place that will take a delegate. Put them together, and it's a fit." And he fitted them without once perceiving, in his masculine obtuseness, that the place was gilt-edged and the delegate was not.

That was the way in which it happened that the old woman with the antiquated bonnet, the coarse shawl, and the rusty satchel suddenly appeared at Mrs. Lander's. To say that that lady was surprised at the apparition would but very feebly express her sentiments. Her opinion of things that fitted differed materially from Mr. Bob's; and when she had ushered that bonnet, shawl, and black alpaca dress, into her grey and crimson guest-chamber, she closed the door upon the contrast, and said, "Well!!!" in a tone that suggested three exclamation points at the east.

As for the old lady, she was innocently and heartily delighted. She laid aside her wraps, brushed the dust from her despised bonnet, carefully folded the much criticised shawl, and then looked about her with a contented smile on her wrinkled, kindly face.

"I do b'lieve this Convention is going to be a little bit of a heaven to me clear through," she

Whatever were Mrs. Lander's views of missionary meetings, decorative art, or the wisdom of entertaining committees, she was a lady, and having received her guest, she accorded her due courtesy. So, when dinner was announced, the well-preserved alpaca, brightened by a fresh collar, was not made to seem out of place at the elegant table, and the old lady ate and chatted in happy unconsciousness of self and enjoyment of her surroundings.

"Yes, I think it does us good to get away from home once in a while, out of our own little corner, and see what the rest of the Father's children are doing, don't you? I'd like to have been here in time for the morning meeting, but I started long before five o'clock as 'twas. They had a real good one, didn't they?"

"I did not go," answered Mrs. Lander, and then, as the eyes fastened upon her looked such unfeigned surprise that anyone already in the city should miss such an opportunity, she hastened to add the statement she always made to herself, "I had not time."

The kindly eyes wandered around the pleasant room in quick appreciation of its many demands.

"I s'pose it does keep you pretty busy," she assented, with a faint undertone of regret in her voice.

But who with a soul for art likes to be considered merely a housekeeper? Mrs. Lander did not, and as soon as they were in the cosy back-parlour, she pointed out the pitcher, on its little stand by the window, waiting a few finishing touches.

"That is my work," she said.

Then, indeed, the old eyes brightened into gladness, for their owner thought she understood it all. Was she not in a Christian home, where all gifts were consecrated? Were not the hearts around her in full sympathy with the great cause of missions? Why else would she be here? That bit of work touched a quickly responsive chord, and her tongue was loosened at once.

"And that's what you do? Ain't it pretty? I expect now you can make a great deal that way, and ain't it a blessed thing to do? Of course you could give a good deal without doing any such work, but it makes all the more. It's good to think how many's a working—one in one way, and another in another—all for the same thing. When I get back home again, and am drying apples and sewing carpet-rags, and counting how many shillings it'll bring, I'll be glad to think about your pretty work that'll earn dollars, and how the dollars and shillings 'll all go to build up the same kingdom. I'd like to tell you how it come to me."

"Yes," answered Mrs. Lander uncertainly, and she could say nothing more. There was a queer feeling at her heart as if a searching eye had been suddenly turned upon it, and an authoritative voice demanding, "How much owest thou unto thy Lord?" had found her bankrupt.

"There was no one left but my husband and Billy and me," said the old woman. "All the children married and gone, you see. Billy was my grandson, and we did set a store by him, me and his grandpa both. We lived in the country, a little place on the edge of the prairie, and we thought we had hard times—we thought we had. We got to thinking too much about our own wants, and what we couldn't have, and working just for ourselves, you see. We wanted to do for Billy and give him good schoolin'. He was as chirk and bright a little fellow as ever was, and good too. But coats and shoes and books do cost a great deal, even if you don't get 'em extry fine, and so Billy says to me one vacation: 'Grandma, I've found something I can do up at the station, and they'll pay for it, too. That'll help.' 'Twas the railroad station he meant, right at the edge of the village near us. He started off the next morning, brave as you please, with his little dinner-basket in his hand. I can see him yet! But it was only three days before he was brought home all white and crushed—one leg cut off by the cars.

"That was trouble! but Billy bore it like a hero. He'd say, 'Cheer up, grandma; there's lots of things a boy with only one leg can do.'

have got along if it hadn't been for the reading. There was the Bible and a pile of papers that had been sent us—"Missionary Heralds" and such. That was how it begun, for the more we read in the Bible the more we see how precious it was, and the more we read in the papers the more we see how hard it was for them that didn't have it. That was the first time the heathen ever seemed like folks to me, and the missionaries like our next-door neighbours. Well, we grew interested, we did, and one day Billy says to me, 'Anyhow, one boot can go to the other boys now.' I didn't know what he meant, but he said he couldn't wear but one boot at a time any more, and the price of the other could go to help some of the poor folks in Indy or China, or out west.

"That was how we begun to lay up a little to send away, and the more we worked and saved, the more we cared. It's surprisin' how much you get to think of anyone when once you begin to do for 'em. Sometimes I most think the Lord Jesus couldn't love us so if He hadn't done so much for us. Well, Billy got up again, and went round on crutches, but someway he never seemed to get strong. He couldn't do the things he planned, and by and by the fever took him. His life just burned away then. He'd laid still a good while one day—it was one winter afternoon, with the sun shining bright into the room —and we thought he didn't know us and wouldn't ever speak again. But all at once his eyes opened wide and bright, and says he, 'Grandma, the other boy can have both boots now.' And he never said any more, but I knew what he meant.

"So husband and me, we agreed that what we'd have done and spent for Billy, we'd give to the 'other boys,' as he called 'em, and it sort of comforted us; we called it sending the money to Billy. When there'd come a call from Indy, I'd say: 'Can we spare the boy a coat?' and when we heard of hard times on the frontier, David would say: 'I reckon we must manage a pair of boots for the boy.' 'Twas our way of puttin' it, you see.

"But after three or four years David went, too. When I see that was a coming I thought I'd nothing to live for, and I said there'd be nobody left. 'Yes there will,' says David, 'there'll be everybody—all the brothers and sisters we've been working for so long. Do all you can for them, wife, and never you fear but I'll know you helped 'em when I see 'em coming home one by one. I think I must know that even in heaven,' says he. So I've done what I could, and its kept me up many a time. Brothers and sisters, and the Lord's brothers and sisters, too—every one that learns to 'do the will of the Father'—he says so. I couldn't do nice things like you, but I've raised chickens and braided mats and sewed carpet-rags. Coming up to this meeting seems most like a little bit of heaven to me. I do hope David and Billy know."

The rough brown hands dropped idly on the old alpaca dress, but they did not look coarse and ugly to Mrs. Lander. A moment's silence fell over the room; and then up the street came that appointed boy with his predestined stone, aimed it at the Maltese cat sitting comfortably in the open window, and, missing her, smashed that precious pitcher to atoms. The boy ran, and there was a startled cry from the two ladies, but the tears in Mrs. Lander's eyes, as she gathered up the fragments, were not altogether due to the accident.

"Never mind, dear. The Lord can bring good out of it someway," said the old voice, soothingly, and Mrs. Lander answered softly:

"I think He will. I am going to the meeting with you this afternoon."

It is needless to state that the meeting that afternoon was not like the old monthly concerts. There were eager young hearts, on the eve of departure for foreign fields, who said, "Call it no sacrifice. We go joyfully." There were grey-haired veterans, home on furlough, who told of battles past. And as she listened to it all, catching from this height a glimpse of the grand army of workers marshalling from every village, town, and hamlet, and reaching from was a missionary meeting, and that she didn't like missionary meetings, and that she didn't believe in women speaking in public, but, finding herself on her feet, told the story of her pitcher, and pledged herself to the cause.

"Now, if that ain't just like Gideon's army!" exclaimed the old woman from her corner. "She had a lamp all the time, but it couldn't shine till it was out of the pitcher."

"Even so," answered the clear voice of the leader. "All over this fair land of ours, hidden in pitchers of selfishness, of indolence, of fashion, and of pleasure, are the lights that should be shining brightly for the Master, and carrying good cheer to the ends of the earth. Oh, sisters of mine, let us pray for the breaking of the pitchers!"

Dr. PARKER on JOSHUA & JUDGES.*

Dr. Parker's work on Joshua and Judges is an able continuation of the People's Bible. The title "People's Bible" is in our judgment peculiarly à propos. No one can peruse this work without being struck by the admirable blending in it of the popular and the thoughtful. The thought is largely analytic, and withal the abstract in expression is far remote. Considering the quality of the matter we are the more amazed at the concreteness and vividness of the style. Popularity of treatment does not mean in Dr. Parker's case superficiality of touch. Nor does it mean even the pith and point so largely characteristic of minds that are cast in the popular mould. Here is a sea to swim in. Many of the chapters of this work are instinct with genius. Dr. Parker writes for artisans and tradesmen, but quite as truly for scholars and metaphysicians. A people's man, he is peculiarly fitted to make of his running commentary a people's book. There is not in this work the multiplication of authorities or the refinements of lingual exegesis, but there is in it soul, fire—thoughts that soar and words that burn.

Altogether we feel about Dr. Parker's book that it occupies a niche by itself. There is not a page—we question if there is a line—in this work that could be called dry, and yet it abounds in deep disquisition, and almost metaphysical reflection. The chapter, e.g., on "The Great Questions of the Pentateuch," is a rare theological gem. How subtle and analytic is the thought, and at the same time how clearly evolved and brilliantly stereotyped in speech! We hope to read that chapter again and again, and there are many like it. Dr. Parker writes for the people. We infer that they will gladly read what he has written. But let not the student think that his case or need is not so fully consulted by the author. The book teems with subtle and profound thinking, and throbs with vitality.

Where, if anywhere, we feel the book to lack is in its evangelical perception. Dr. Parker is a kind of Heraclitus in theology. What impresses him in respect of theologies is their everlasting flux. From time to time he is led to unburden his soul in this matter. Nor does it seem to pain him that in this region "change and decay in all around" he sees. He is gloriously optimistic in the midst of dying creeds and faiths effete. The old order perishes, but the new order that is born of it is, he assumes, the survival of the fittest and the best. We cannot see it; we do not believe it. We are of opinion that, in common with all who hold with him in these matters, Dr. Parker speaks as he does on this subject because his eye is not sufficiently enkindled with Gospel light. Did he see further into the marrow of the Gospel, what would strike him most forcibly would not be theological flux but theological fixity. Thus the doctrine of acceptance with God has not changed since Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain. Yet this is a lesson which in his summary of the Pentateuch Dr. Parker does not even touch. Besides, it would be as easy for the throne of God to totter as for the doctrine of justification by faith to change with changing time. No doubt the spirit of change is rife throughout the so-called religious world, but this spirit of change does not infect the remnant that are able to take an incisive view into the Gospel of Divine grace. So far as we can find, the determination among them to stand fast in the old paths is as pronounced to-day as in days of yore. We do not admit that all theology is indeterminate, and old creeds old clothes, because the theories of the modern Christian world are "such stuff as dreams are made of."

But animadversion aside, we cannot speak too highly of Dr. Parker's work as one full of suggestiveness. The times of old are so discussed as to live in the immediate present. Analogies in the life and experience of to-day spring up on every side. Thus, treating of Joshua v. 1, the Doctor says, "The heathen kings did not disbelieve in miracles." This leads him to enlarge on the loss which is incident to our civilisation—"the loss of faith." Then follows an apt quotation from Lord Lytton, to the effect that "the man who has no faith in religion is often the man who has faith in a nightmare." But further it is observed that "the heathen kings drew inferences. They said:—If the river has been crossed, the city is gone. They were not unreasoning or infantile minds. They saw somewhat of the logical issue of things." A circumstance this which draws forth the following censure, "The power of following the seed to its fructification is what we have lost. Otherwise we should all be prophets: we should know that as certainly as a man has told a lie he has dug a hell." After enlarging on this, the question is asked, "Who then can be saved? None by himself. No man has the power to rub out a lie. You cannot expunge a falsehood; once done it is done for ever, so far as the doer is concerned...the lie means hell." In this vivid, soul-searching way are the infinite consequences of evil bound up in any one sin set forth. The space at our command will not allow us to pursue the subject further. The People's Bible is, certainly, a great gift to the age.

HOLIDAYS FOR WORKING GIRLS.

Our sincere thanks are due to many readers of The Christian whose kind contributions last year to our Y.W.C.A Holiday Fund enabled us to send 360 poor girls suffering in health from long hours of drudgery in close work-rooms for several weeks' change during the summer months. Eighty of these had joined the Holiday Club, and saved what they could towards their own expenses. There are in London alone over 200,000 working girls, the majority of whom only earn from 5s. to 8s. per week. Hence more than an occasional day in the country, however essential, is, as a rule, an impossibility without the help which reaches them through this department of the Y.W.C.A., or other channels.

A considerable increase compared with last year in both the number of holiday applicants, who can pay nothing towards a change, and of others who are saving up towards it by paying into our holiday club, constrains us again to remind our friends of the now exhausted holiday fund, and to suggest another way in which they can render practical assistance ere the hot season comes round. A room in a country cottage kept by a Christian widow was offered to us last year from April till October for the benefit of these poor London girls requiring change of air. The lady who chose this cottage for us kindly paid all expenses for board and lodging, and in many cases the fares also. Twenty weary workers by this means obtained several weeks each of quiet rest in fresh country air. We could fill any number of such openings all through the summer with most needy and thankful occupants.

ROUSING THE SCOTTISH CHURCHES.

PERTH.

The arrangements here were made for one day only. The "fair city" contributed a very good gathering in the afternoon in Free St. Leonard's Church. Rev. Dr. Bannerman, the pastor, opened the meeting with earnest prayer, and then gave place to Mr. G. Clarke, who spoke on various passages referring to the opened windows of heaven. In Malachi we read of them being opened for the descent of blessing on the Church; Peter saw them open that he might learn the lesson of the unity of the race, in the mind of God; Stephen saw them opened revealing Christ as the all-powerful Advocate sitting on the throne of God; John saw them opened, and beheld the countless throng of the redeemed. The points of application were, that it is only as we observe the conditions, paying the tithes into God's storehouse, that we can see, in our own experience, the results of an opened heaven; and that it is the privilege of every redeemed soul so to live that others may join the multitude of the redeemed seen by the Apostle in Patmos. Mr. Clarke dwelt at some length on the abounding riches of God's grace and strength, on which the believer may draw large cheques, suited to every need of life, testimony, and service.

WEIGHTY WORDS ON CONSECRATION

were uttered by Mr. Hudson Taylor. In speaking of the close connection between home life and the progress of Christ's kingdom, he referred to the relations between master or mistress and servant. Do we regard those in our employ simply as persons out of whom we want to get as much as we can, or as those, in the providence of God, brought near to us that they may share in the blessing given to us by God? Those who have been in heathen lands understand the injunction of the Apostle to the converts, "Let him that stole steal no more." But there is such a thing as robbing God, which is surely as serious a crime as stealing from man. Are we defrauding God of his rights? Christ said of Himself, "Therefore doth my Father love Me because I lay down my life." He laid down that life in a way peculiar to Himself, where we cannot follow; but the essence of it was that He put Himself into God's hands entirely, and God spoke and acted through Him. Is there not some such relationship between God and the believer? Christ said, "I am the Vine." He did not say, "I am the root," or "I am the stem," but "I am the Vine;" so it is his life that circulates in all the branches, and each branch shares in the full fatness of the whole vine. This is the secret of entire consecration—having everything in our blessed Lord, and nothing outside of Him. "Christ, who is our Life." People say, "If I could but get power." We do not want to get power, or anything else; we want to enjoy and use the power and the all things that are in Him: so to recognise our blessed union with Him that we shall be able to live accordingly. If we take up an independent position, we are placing ourselves outside of Christ, and therefore outside of safety. It is the failure to realise that we ourselves, and all we have, are the Lord's, that is the cause of our weakness and our failure.

Mr. Taylor reverted to the great supreme command of the Master—"Go ye," and forcibly urged that the Church should pay tithes of her membership as well as of her substance. If a church of a hundred would send ten to the home or foreign field, supporting all who could not provide for themselves, there would be such an access of blessing to those that remain, that they would soon want to double the tithe. Even supply all their wants. Speaking from his own experience of many years' sole dependence on God, he could say truly He had never disappointed him. The world is getting very sceptical, not of the truth of the Bible, but as to whether Christians themselves believe the Bible, since their life so poorly corresponds to its teaching. If the Church were in real earnest, we should soon see such a revival in England, Scotland and Ireland, as all the past revivals put together could not compare with.

In the evening there was a goodly audience in the City Hall, composed mostly of young people. Solemn and stirring words were spoken by all three evangelists, pressing home the claims and the spiritual needs of the heathen. A few stood up at the close on a call for consecration. After the general meeting dispersed, a little band of young men and women lingered for conversation. An adjournment was made to an upper room, where Mr. Taylor briefly exhorted to obedience and waiting on God for guidance. Then followed a Pentecostal season, that will be memorable with all who were present. One after another, of both sexes, pleaded with God for light upon their path, and declared their readiness to go wherever He might send. This visit to Perth was an addition to the original plan. The result proves that it was of God. One friend remarked that many in the neighbourhood had been longing for such a visit, and the evangelists had literally been prayed into the place. Surely the "fair city" will send some of the flower of its youth to earth's needy places.

GREENOCK.

Among the things gratefully noted in this tour were the frequent traces found of the Gospel labours of Mr. George Clarke. This was specially marked, perhaps, at the populous and busy port of Greenock, on the Clyde. Not a few were met with, of good social position, who acknowledged that it was through the earnest appeals of the young evangelist they had been led out of a selfish, worldly life into one of service for God and their fellows. The part of the programme in this campaign specially allotted to Mr. Clarke was the claims of the home field; but in his addresses he did not strictly adhere to this. Listening as he had to do day after day to Mr. Taylor's overwhelming statements about the condition and doom of the unsaved heathen, the thing, he said, had been burned into his soul, and his talk was as often about the foreign as about the home field. In view of the close connection between the two, it will be matter for thankfulness if this period of close association with such tried and veteran workers as Mr. Taylor and Mr. Radcliffe should not only give a needed mellowness of speech, but a greater breadth of view to Mr. Clarke, in his future Gospel labours, so that the young converts may have pressed upon them the all-embracing command to God's servants, "Go ye into all the world."

A MINISTERIAL CONFERENCE.

The peculiar feature of the Greenock meetings was an hour's conference between Mr. Hudson Taylor and a dozen or so of the earnest-minded pastors of the town. The time was chiefly taken up by Mr. Taylor's statement as to the special needs of China and the methods adopted by the Inland Mission. The great point on which he insisted (and one which he emphasised over and over again in other places) was the need of different kinds of workers. It is a great mistake, he said, to suppose that in heathen lands the work of evangelisation should be done exclusively, or even mainly, by "skilled labourers;" that is, those who have gone through a lengthy curriculum of training and study. Far from diminishing the number of such workers, he would increase them as much as possible; but they ought to be strengthened and supported by a tenfold greater number of these who have not received, and do not actually require such elaborate preparation. The great mass of the people in China and other countries without the Gospel, are quite illiterate, and almost similar in attainments to the children in our Sunday schools at home. Anyone, therefore, tian, and can present the Gospel in its simplest form, is perfectly able to do the elementary mission work which is so largely needed in these distant lands. Indeed, it is a waste of power to set men of high attainments and advanced culture to do such work. Mr. Taylor compared it to confining the erection of a cathedral to architects. Of course, architects are required for planning and overseeing, but the work in its details is carried out by the rank and file of artisans, of varying degrees of ability, but none of them requiring to have the highest skill. The essential thing for foreign missionary workers, next to spirituality and devotedness, is the capacity for development. All the China Inland Mission workers go out as probationers for a time, and it is only after they have proved their fitness for the work in its first stages, that they are placed on the permanent staff and entrusted with responsibility. The acquisition of the language, said Mr. Taylor, is no insuperable obstacle; among the many who have gone out to China, he had never known one, male or female, who had absolutely failed in mastering it, while most of them had gained a practical acquaintance with it in a comparatively short time. The system of study has now been improved so as to enable the students to make as much progress in nine months as they formerly did in fifteen. This will be a great saving of time and energy in the future work of the Mission.

The ministers present evidently listened to Mr. Taylor's address with the profoundest interest, which was certainly not diminished when he described, in answer to a question, how the Mission in its finance department had been conceived and carried on on the principle of simple faith in God's promise, without any machinery for soliciting funds; and how God had abundantly honoured that trust by supplying its needs as they arose. Mr. Taylor endeavoured to show that, if the work is really God's, and care is taken, under his guidance, in selecting the right workers, no doubt should be entertained but He will provide all that is necessary for the support of the work and the workers. In the name of the ministers present, one of the most venerable of them expressed hearty thanks to Mr. Taylor for the information he had imparted. I could not but feel that such informal conferences with those who occupy positions of great influence among Scottish Christians are perhaps the most likely way to create and perpetuate a strong missionary spirit through the land. I wish such a conference could be held in every town and village in the United Kingdom. It appears to me that the approaching General Assemblies of the Presbyterian Churches of Scotland will miss a great opportunity if they do not make arrangements for Mr. Hudson Taylor to address their respective gatherings, on this subject, so supremely important, and one on which he is so well fitted to speak.

The meetings at Greenock, both afternoon and evening, were large. At the latter the venerated Dr. J. J. Bonar presided, and gave a warm welcome to the visitors. The appeals and exhortations of all three evangelists were well received. Mr. Taylor, as an encouragement to liberality in giving, related a little incident in his own early experiences as a Christian worker. When visiting a starving household he was constrained to give them his last half-crown. Next day he received, from an entirely unexpected source, a remittance of 10s., so that God gave him four hundred per cent. for his outlay. He said some strong words here, as elsewhere, about the giving of "unconsecrated money" to the Lord's work. He dreaded nothing so much, and knew of nothing that was a greater hindrance to the prosperity of the Christian at home and abroad. This remark, I understand, had its due weight in some cases at any rate, for several friends, in handing to Mr. Taylor gifts for the mission work with which he is associated, observed that he need have no fear of its being "unconsecrated."

SHINING, WEEPING, WAITING, FOR JESUS.

Mr. Taylor's addresses are studded with telling incidents from his large store of experience.

telling about one of those who lately joined the Inland Mission, and who was well known in that district before his departure. He carries with him in all his work such a shining countenance and happy demeanour that the Chinese have dubbed him "Mr. Glory Face." Another instance was that of a Scotch young lady who was deeply concerned about the conversion of an old Chinese woman, a servant. Not having then acquired the language she could not talk freely to her aged sister; but, tears in her eyes, with a quivering lip, and a warm pressure of the hand, she managed to say "I do wish you were a Christian." This so affected the aged servant that conviction of sin followed, and through the help of another sister, more skilled in the language, she was led to trust in Jesus Christ for salvation. Yet another case, related by Mr. Taylor, was that of a Christian sister who resolved, at the age of twenty, to dedicate her life to foreign missions. God did not, however, open the way till thirty years had elapsed. At the age of fifty, she still volunteered to go to China, at her own charge, and she has been doing useful work there for the past ten years.

DUNDEE.

A point continually insisted on in these meetings, as the attentive reader may have observed, was the close connection between consecration of heart and life, and fruitfulness in service either at home or abroad. This was once more emphasised by Mr. Hudson Taylor at the afternoon meeting in the Y.M.C.A. hall, Dundee, when a not very numerous company of Christians came together. He is evidently impressed with the need, in these days, of dwelling much on foundation truths, as he recurred to them again and again. Expounding to the Dundee friends the words of Christ, the Bridegroom, to the Church, his bride, in the Canticles, he showed how heart backsliding, the incursion of worldliness, or disobedience to his command, causes the Master to withdraw Himself, and the believer lacks that strength that can only come from constant and intimate communion with Him. In Solomon's song, He says, "Come with Me," but in this there is nothing contrary to the word in Matthew, "Go ye." There can be no real hindrances to the soul that goes forward in communion with Jesus. The reason that we do not enjoy more of the wonderful society of our Lord is because we refuse to go with Him. "Go ye……Lo, I am with you"—this was the resounding refrain that ran through all the speeches. To show that the Lord's command is not, in these days at any rate, an impossible or even difficult one, Mr. Taylor referred to the wonderful advance in facilities of transport. When he first went to China in 1853 the voyage extended over five and a half months. He left Shanghai on January 11 last, and February 9 found him comfortably seated in the hotel at Marseilles. The inland journies are longer, as the methods of travel are slow, but it is not at all lost time; every day of the journey the missionary can circulate Christian literature and converse with the people, thus helping to obey the command to preach the Gospel to every creature. Some encouraging words were also spoken as to the ease with which the Chinese language can be acquired. A child, he said, can learn to speak English in two years; surely a grown person of average intelligence can learn a new language as easily. Chinese is more easily learned than English. His children born in China could learn the former in half the time it took to learn the latter. If we would but consent to be babes in God's school, we would soon learn all that is needed for his service. Then he pressed home on the Dundee friends what reply they were going to give to God's command. If they did not "go," the results would be serious, not only to the heathen, but to themselves; they would lose the blessing that follows obedience.

A STARTLING PROPOSITION.

It was a novel and startling idea that Mr. Radcliffe threw out as he began his afternoon out many of their number, both men and women, to take the Gospel to the heathen. If that resolution were put aside as not being God's mind and not one to be carried into effect, then another resolution should be proposed in lieu of it: "Resolved that the Gospel should be driven out of Dundee; and it is not a right and proper thing that we should harbour it in this country any longer." The Apostle Peter was utterly opposed to the Gospel being sent to Dundee; he thought it should be confined to the Jews, and if he had had his way, we Gentiles of South and North Britain would have been excluded from its blessed influence. But it has been brought here in spite of the Apostle, and the Scotch people do value and cling to the Gospel. The only fault with us is that we cling to it too closely; or, rather, we keep it too much to ourselves. He would say, very lovingly and tenderly, but very respectfully and boldly, of the whole of his countrymen in Britain, that, with some few exceptions, we are living in disobedience of one of the plainest commands our Lord has given. And as God's promise of power is in connection with marching, not with sticking still, may we not justly attribute the withdrawal of power from our churches to our refusal to go?

The Bell-street U.P. Church was crowded for the evening meeting, an unusually large proportion of the audience being young men and women. For some weeks Mr. Richard Hill had been conducting evangelistic services in the town, and this evening was the last of the mission. Though not of the usual kind in closing a Gospel campaign, it was a very fitting finish, and there could be no better outcome of the special effort than that some of the converts, at the very outset of the Christian life, should devote themselves to the foreign field. This is a point at which we trust all our God-blessed evangelists will aim with increasing fervour and purpose. All the three visitors spoke earnestly to the great congregation, the varied aspects of the subject being taken up as at the other places. Though the proceedings were prolonged to a comparatively late hour, a goodly residue, both of young and of older Christians, stayed for a second meeting, to hear some of Mr. Taylor's valued and invaluable counsel. There is reason to hope that Dundee will not be unrepresented among those who, in this year of the nation's jubilee, will go forth to tell of a greater jubilee to the peoples that now sit in nature's darkness and bondage.

In order to make room for several important communications in connection with missions, we defer for a week our correspondent's final notes of the Scottish campaign, embracing the meetings at Inverness and Aberdeen. We may say, however, now that the series is over, that it has been of a very encouraging kind throughout. It only remains for the churches to sustain and deepen the interest created by the visit of the three servants of God. These brethren desire the fellowship of our readers in thanking God for the favouring circumstances under which the meetings were held, and for the preservation of physical strength during a fortnight of somewhat arduous work. Mr. George Clarke, returning from Aberdeen, has commenced a two weeks' Gospel mission in Inverness, and for this prayer is asked.

A MEDICAL CHRISTIAN UNION has been founded in Paris as a branch of the Medical Prayer Union in London. The secretary is Dr. Renaud Suzor, 13 bis, Rue Berthollet, and the corresponding secretary, Dr. D. Elie Anderson, 8, Avenue de la Grande Armée.

COALVILLE BAND OF LOVE.—There was a large gathering of the friends of the Band of Love assembled at the Cabin, Crick, on Easter Monday, to whom Mr. George Smith, of Coalville, spoke words of cheer. He referred to a most kind letter he had received from the Bishop of Peterborough, expressing much sympathy with his long, hard work for bettering the condition of the canal, gipsy, and van children. Mr. Smith has received from the Committee of the British and Foreign

Letters to the Editor.

SIGNOR CAPELLINI.

Dear Sir,—May I request you kindly to correct an error in the account of myself and my work reported in your columns last week from The British Weekly. I do not provide for myself from my own patrimony; but my personal stipend is, and has been for years past, paid by the Wesleyan Methodist Missionary Society, to which also I am indebted for the free use of our preaching hall, and with which, though my work is in the interest of all denominations, I am myself ecclesiastically connected.—I am, yours affectionately in Christ Jesus, Cav. Luigi Capellini.

INFANT MARRIAGE.

Sir,—In reference to some remarks made in The Christian (March 24) about an Indian lady, Rukmabhai, I, as an Indian, very much desire that her pitiful story should awaken a great interest and public sympathy on behalf of the suffering women of India. She only represents hundreds of those who would if they could free themselves from the cruel bondage of infant betrothal and infant marriage. Christians in England should know:—

(1) That the women of India, in an age of ignorance and superstition, have hitherto borne their lot unconsciously and bravely. But now they are being educated, the age of enlightenment has come, the light of education more keenly reveals to them the bondage, and makes it all the more unbearable.

(2) That they have hitherto borne their lot patiently, believing that their gods have sanctioned their cruel lot in sacred Vedas. But now Professor Max Muller has clearly shown that "infant marriage has no sanction whatever from either Sruti or Smriti"—so clearly, that no pundit in India now ventures to gainsay that.

(3) That the existing law, formed in a barbarous age, enforces the infant marriage, and is hard on a woman who cannot conscientiously marry a man betrothed to her in her infancy. This state of things will continue as long as the law stands in its present form. If we would do away with infant marriage and all the sad consequences invariable to it, the law must be altered; and the proposal to alter the law must come from the people of India themselves. All this the friends of India, like Prof. Max Muller, recognise, and have not a word to say against the enforcement of the existing law. But what he says (and we agree with him) is, "Government does not deserve the name of Government if it declares itself unable to protect each individual subject against personal torts, whether sanctioned by custom or not. Now infant betrothal is a tort—it is a contract made without the consent of one of the parties. If, therefore, that party suffers, and wishes to be released from an unjust contract, the Government ought so far to protect him or her. The custom of infant betrothal is unjust, the custom of infant marriage is criminal. In the former case Government should give relief to the injured party, in the latter should punish the criminal."

(4) No doubt the righteous indignation of Englishmen would rise when they know that the Government of India, after reading all the miserable accounts of infant brides and infant widows published by Mr. Malabari, had in reply to him declared itself unable to protect those who suffer from the infant marriage, had declared its impotence to protect a person who loathes to marry one betrothed to him or her in their infancy. We think that a mere humane Government would not stand by, but come forward to help a woman who pleads to be released from a marriage contracted without her consent: how much more willingly should a Christian Government do so? Ladies in England do not know one tenth of what their sisters in India suffer. India looks with pleading eyes to see if her cause could be taken up by the Englishmen, and release her from a bondage that so cruelly binds her down, and thus help to remove one of the ugly blots that stain the escutcheon of England! For the Young.

(Concluded.)

On the morrow, David Edwards called up Mary at break of day, and they both went towards Mr. Charles's house. Look! there is light in the study window—Mr. Charles was up, and Mary's anxious hour was now come. David Edwards knocks at the door—and lo! Mr. Charles himself opens it. After expressing his astonishment at such an early visit from his old friend, he invites them up into his study. The venerable advocate explains to him the errand of his strange young friend, and why he and she are obliged to trouble him thus early. Mr. Charles then questions Mary about her personal history, and her knowledge of Scripture, and asks how she had succeeded in attaining such wide knowledge of the Bible—she too, without a Bible of her own. Her answer revealed the secret—she told him of her continual walk of some two miles from her home to the farmhouse, week after week, during the past six years, to read and to treasure up in her memory whole chapters of the Bible that was lent her; and of the careful storing up of her pence and halfpence during all those years, to make up the sum she had with her in her pocket, to buy a Bible of him, for her own self. This remarkable statement made a profound impression on Mr. Charles:—

"It gives me very great pain," said he, "to see this young girl, who has come hither all the way from Llanfihangel to fetch a Bible, and I have not one I can let her have. All the Bibles I received from London have come to an end months ago; only a few copies are left for friends for whom I have promised to keep them. What shall I yet do for Welsh Bibles? I know not!"

Mr. Charles spoke these words with the deepest sympathy; but they pierced the ears and the heart of his young visitor like so many sharp arrows. They shattered all the doors of her heart; and she broke out in lamentations heard through the whole house. What! years of the most longing desire to possess a whole Bible of her very own—years of labour and anxiety in putting by her mites into her small treasury, to buy it—all, all—like this—to have been in vain—altogether in vain? Oh! what a disappointment!

Nay, stay!—The heart of the greatest Welsh patriot, of the common father of our Sunday-schools, was not of flint towards his thousands of children. True, he was bound to stand bravely to his intentions in favour of other friends, in the face of all the entreaties of his old friend David Edwards in behalf of the girl. But now, the streams of fresh tears, and the darts of heart-breaking lamentations of this disappointed girl, took him by storm—and lo! his intentions in favour of previous appeals to him, are all shattered in pieces!

"Well, my dear girl," said Mr. Charles, "I see thou must have a Bible, however difficult it be for me to give thee one without disappointing some other friend: but it is impossible for me to deny it thee."

If our brave girl had before wept from sorrow of heart, she now wept more, if possible, from fulness of heart, after gaining so clear a victory over Mr. Charles. So full of thankfulness was her heart towards her considerate benefactor, that her tongue would have failed altogether to express it had she tried to do so. But her eyes made up for the failing of her tongue. Bright tears of gratitude to him dropped on her cheeks as she placed her longed-for treasure in her wallet to take it home. The tears of our young Mary of Llanfihangel, like those of Mary of Bethany, were catching. Mr. Charles wept, and David Edwards wept at the sight of them.

"If thou art glad, my good girl, to get a Bible," said Mr. Charles to her, "I, for my part, am very glad to give it thee. Read much of it, and learn much of it by heart, and be a good girl. David Edwards," added Mr. Charles, in tears, "is not such a sight as this enough to break the hardest heart—to see a girl, young, poor, and intelligent, obliged to walk like this the whole way hither from Llanfihangel—some fifty miles hither and back, and barefoot, too, say ye—to fetch a Bible? The Christian Knowledge Society that used to print Welsh Bibles and Testaments towards the end of last century has absolutely refused to print one more Bible or Testament for the schools of Wales. But this intelligent young girl has made so deep an impression on me, that I shall not be able to rest until I have found some other way to meet the great want of our country for the Word of God."

Mr. Charles took leave of his interesting young visitor, with the most earnest wish that the full blessing of the God of the Bible might rest on her, and follow her to the grave. We must leave our readers to picture, every one to himself, the kind of feelings that must have filled the bosom of our brave girl of Llanfihangel when returning home that morning—barefoot, it is true, yet triumphant—and with "the Pearl of great price," for which her heart had yearned so long, at last in her possession, safe in her wallet on her back.

Mary Jones, when an old woman on the border of the grave, sixty-six years after this, wept while telling of the touching, heavenly spirit of Mr. Charles, and of his gracious words while speaking to her on that ever-memorable morning—to her, a young girl, and a stranger, and poor, who had disturbed him at such an unseasonable hour.

To very, very little keys;
And don't forget that they are these:
"I thank you, sir," and "If you please."

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sunday, April 24, Rom. iii. 19—31; Monday, April 25, Rom. iv. 1—12; Tuesday, April 26, Rom. iv. 13—25; Wednesday, April 27, Rom. v. 1—11; Thursday, April 28, Rom. v. 12—21; Friday, April 29, Rom. vi. 1—11; Saturday, April 30, Rom. vi. 12—23.

SAILORS' REST, BRIDGWATER.—A Home for Sailors, to be worked on similar lines to that at Ratcliff-highway, was opened last week in this Somersetshire town. The premises, situated on the West Quay, have been fitted up in a very pleasant and cheerful manner. Besides refreshment bar, there is a room for the use of captains, and the ordinary meeting-room will hold about sixty persons. Rev. C. H. M. Day, to whose efforts the establishment of the "Rest" is mainly due, in an interesting statement, said that, having been associated with the well-known Home in Ratcliff Highway, on going to Bridgwater a few months' since, he was very much struck with the need for a similar work amongst sailors there. Special services were first held, and these attracted large numbers of the men, and were greatly blessed. A considerable amount of interest was then taken in the work.

STUDY AND CURE FOR INEBRIETY.

Dalrymple House figures largely in this important sphere of labour, evolved from the larger field of temperance work that happily has been so broadening out in the last few years. At the annual meeting of the Society that devotes its attention to this work, Dr. Norman Kerr gave some encouraging statistics of the operations here carried on. Of the 103 admissions during the year (35 of whom entered for the full term of twelve months) 65 had been discharged, and 36 of these are doing well, showing more than fifty per cent. of cures. Dr. Kerr, in his address on the subject, pointed out that inebriety is more than a moral evil—in many cases it is a disease quite as much as is rheumatism or any other, and requires distinct and definite treatment. Inebriety may be compared with insanity, and, as those suffering from the latter disease are now the objects of the utmost care and commiseration, so should those be who might be classed as involuntary drinkers. Dr. Kerr then described the various stages and effects of alcohol on the local powers of the human body. It weakens the power of control, it injures the brain, and is therefore hurtful to the intellect, the thought, and the moral sense. Alcohol poisons every organ of the body, affects the body physically. He concluded by remarking that when once the full knowledge of the antecedents and conditions of the inebriate was attained, then they could grapple with the cause, and adopt the means of cure with more success.

In a paper on "The Cause and Cure of Inebriety," by Dr. T. D. Crothers, of Hartford, Conn., U.S., it was stated that out of 100 inebriates, sixty would be found to owe their inebriety to diseased brain, thirty would have had moderate and excessive drinking parents, and ten consumptive or otherwise diseased parents. The inebriate who is diseased, should be quarantined. The disease should be checked at the beginning, and hospitals should be established for the reception and treatment of inebriates, where manual employment, physical exercise, and amusements were provided.

A BOLD REQUEST.

A remarkable address has been sent to brewers, distillers, rectifiers, wholesale dealers, and saloon keepers, by the officers of the American National W.C.T.U. It is most kindly throughout, and appeals to them as brothers to give up their nefarious business. It says:—

"We believe, indeed, that your own mental vision is dimmed, and the voice of conscience in your breasts is deadened by alcoholic poison. Lifted out of the smoke and fumes of your present environment, we believe your perception of the relation which your business holds to the interests of the homes and to the citizenship of the Republic, would so appal you, that all of you who are not hopelessly dwarfed by greed of gain, would flee the traffic in alcoholic poisons as you would the pestilence. Whatever you favour we must condemn, and steadfastly antagonise your principle of license, wherever we encounter it, by the principle of prohibition. Brothers, the end is near; the doom of the liquor traffic is sealed; the clock of God has struck the hour of the people's deliverance. Will you not come with us in the great fight for a clear brain and a protected home? Will you not, of free choice, do that which must ere long be done under compulsion of the vox populi, which echoes the vox Dei? For this we earnestly ask, and for this we will fervently pray."

JUBILEE TESTAMENTS.—A committee, composed of several influential gentlemen in Richmond and neighbourhood, have arranged with the British and Foreign Bible Society for the distribution of some thousands of penny Testaments on June 21, the anniversary of Her Majesty's accession. The Royal Coat of Arms and "Search the Scriptures" will be stamped in gold on the outside cover. If any friends are desirous of undertaking to spread these special copies of the Word of God, Mr. H. THIRD EDITION.

"Preachers abound, but divines are few. The nting press pours forth a mass of matter, but a real book is a phenomenon. We count ourselves happy, for we have met with a divine in Dr. James Culross; and in his work entitled, 'John, whom Jesus Loved,' we have found a book. . . .

"Many writers are mere echoes of other men's voices . . . . they imitate the good steward in bringing forth things old, but things new are quite out of their way. . . . One of the excellencies of Dr. Culross is the freshness of his thought. The dew is on his branch; he is no withered bough of the autumn forest. His mind allows young flowers to break through its soil after their own fashion, and to blossom in their own sweet way. . . . It is altogether without reserve that we commend the work before us. It is not a bottle of milk for babes, but a portion of meat for men. A half-dozen readings will only make it more interesting to those who meditate upon what they read."

"All who admire Dr. Culross' insight, his delicacy of perception, his curious felicity of language, his broad and tender sympathies, his grasp of great truths, will welcome this volume, and hope for like expositions of the preceding six Epistles."

The Freeman.

"The exposition is fresh and original, displaying great critical skill and discrimination, together with happy quotations of Scripture. The style is all that could be desired—chaste and polished, yet full of force: here and there, as in the author's other works, we meet with passages of great poetic beauty."—Aberdeen Daily Press.

"This work is instructive, suggestive, full of spiritual force, and at the same time strong and manly. These latter adjectives we find it impossible to use concerning many of the devotional books produced in our day. Because we may honestly use them in this case, we heartily commend this book for the refreshment of our busy teachers."

Sunday School Chronicle.

"The glow, as from a golden sunset, which his imagination sheds over his style, gives it a great charm."—British Messenger.

"Its language is chaste and clear; its thoughts are fresh and invigorating; its tone is evangelical, without being sentimental. While there is a genial warmth of devout feeling, there runs through its pages a healthy breeze of robustness."

OUR RAILWAY SERVANTS.

THE RAILWAY MISSION—ITS OBJECT AND RESULTS.

President: The Earl of Aberdeen.
Vice-Presidents:
T. ANTHONY DENNY, Esq. | MILES MACINNES, Esq., M.P.
Treasurer: S. GURNEY SHEPPARD, Esq., 28, Threadneedle Street, E.C.

THE Object of the Mission is (1) to preach the Gospel to the employés on all Lines, by means of accredited evangelists holding special missions at large centres, and the establishment of weekly meetings for Prayer, Bible Study, and Evangelistic Addresses; (2) To help those who profess to be Christians to make known the Gospel to their mates by a consistent life and personal testimony; (3) To advocate the cause of Temperance among all grades, and to assist in every way possible, the various Societies already existing on our Railways.

There are over 36,600 Railway Stations in the United Kingdom, besides Canals and Coaling Stations, belonging to the Railway Companies. At only about 160 of these stations are meetings at present held. There are 367,000 Railway Servants in the United Kingdom, and it is calculated that this Mission reaches from 60,000 to 80,000 of the same. No allowance is here made for wives and children.

Nearly 5,000 Railway Servants have joined the "Railway Men's Christian Association;" but this embraces only a small number comparatively influenced by the Gospel preached and the advocacy of Temperance by our workers, as well as the circulation of pure literature. A great many are Christians and Total Abstainers who a short time ago were neither; and those who know most of our railway systems can testify to the improved condition of the employés: there are open doors on every hand. Special stress is laid upon the advantage of Colportage Work on our Railways. For this Money and Men are Needed.

Christian Ladies are a special help in this work. They can do much at a little cost, and with very encouraging results. We shall be glad to hear of any who can take an interest in this effort. The Mission in India is making progress; our Committee in that Empire is taking up the work with earnestness. For South Africa we sadly need a Railway-man Evangelist. Please Send a Donation.

EXTRACT from a LETTER RELATIVE to a CONSUMPTIVE GIRL.

In the summer before last, this young girl (who had been pronounced consumptive by Dr. B. three years before), was brought to me in a very critical state. She got well under my treatment, but six months after that took cold (last year), and some of her old symptoms reappeared. These, however, were soon overcome by return to the medicine. I have received a letter from Mrs. Lowther of Withrington, Sutton, in which she says:—"Mrs. James's daughter has quite recovered her usual tone."

CONSUMPTION,

I will demonstrate to the whole world, and to sufferers from these unfortunate maladies, how they can be permanently cured, by an entirely New Method of Treatment, without the chance of failure. All afflicted may write with full confidence to Mr. WILLIAMS, 10,

RATCLIFF "BRIDGE OF HOPE."

WORKERS among the poor in East London have very little spare time to study those social questions which some people seem to think should be satisfactorily settled before any effective work can be done. That there are enormous difficulties in the way of any who would attempt to help and to raise the lowest and most degraded no one will deny, and we all have to consider how, in trying to do good, we can keep from doing harm at the same time. Nevertheless God "has not given us the spirit of fear, but of power and of love and of a sound mind," and we can with patient hope, day by day, take up the task which we believe He has given us to do.

I think the greatest joy, on this side heaven, is to see the poor degraded sin-marked face light up, when the story of God's great love first enters the heart, and when first dawns upon the poor sin-racked soul the possibility of forgiveness and the hope of purity. "Do you mean to tell me that is for me? All for such as me?" a poor girl once said to me; "oh, it is too good, it is too good." "We can never quite get over it here," said another; "people seem always to remember, but up there it will be different, we shall all have white robes."

A short time ago, about twelve o'clock one frosty Saturday night, when the keen winter wind was driving all indoors who had a home or a shelter, a poor woman in utter misery and despair was pacing up and down the Thames Embankment. She had wandered into a mission hall during the evening, and had restlessly come out, carrying no remembrance of anything that had been said, but two lines of a hymn,

> "I've wandered far away on mountains cold,
> I've wandered far away from home,
> . . . . . .
> Come, great Deliverer, come."

She remembered, and cried aloud, "But there's no Deliverer for me." Very soon she was accosted by some Christian men, who were spending the night in seeking to gather in such outcasts as she. They offered to find her a shelter, and mechanically she followed them to our house. We received her into the night shelter, and on the quiet Sunday morning she sat by the fire and began to think. The human love and tenderness revealed to her the Divine; if we strangers had thus received her and cared for her, would not her Heavenly Father, about whose love she had heard, take her back again. Thus, without the help of words, she was led to the feet of Jesus, and to find that her sins, though many, were forgiven. "Things have often been up and down ma'am since then," she told me, "but I've never once lost the peace I found that morning."

We have room for thirty young women in the Ratcliff Highway Refuge, and in the Night Shelter for ten more. During the year we receive into our house from 300 to 400 of our sinning sisters, helping them humanly and tenderly, and, as far we can, wisely placing them, as we are able, where they will be cared for till they are stronger, and better fitted to withstand the temptations to which they may be subjected.

The large number of friendless and destitute young girls who apply to us, and who, although they have been brought up amid these evil surroundings, yet cannot be classed among the fallen, makes preventive work a necessity. In a neighbourhood like Ratcliff Highway our instinct is to try as far as possible to save such from following the terrible example which is always before them. In our Preventive Home at Ashburton House, and in the Branch Homes at Redhill and Crouch End, we have fifty young girls and children, all taken from circumstances of peculiar need, and each with some special reason for which careful training in habits of obedience and industry is needed, before she can be placed in a situation to earn her own living.

The Ratcliff Highway Refuge is within easy is always cheering to the workers, who are continuously living in the midst of much that is depressing. I have in your advertising columns very plainly and more fully told of our present needs. I have stated what is simply true in our daily experience, and I am sure that all who know us, in our work through the press and the poverty of the winter, and the heat and inconveniences of the summer, are convinced of our need of more convenient premises in which to carry on the work. A MIND FIXED ON ETERNITY.*

BY DR. ALEXANDER WHYTE, EDINBURGH.

JOHN BUNYAN says his mind was so turned by "these things" that it lay like a horse-leach at the vein of eternity, still crying out, "Give, Give." "These things" lead our thoughts back to the street-corner where the pious women talked about the things of God. That street-corner was to John Bunyan nothing less than the house of God and the very gate of Heaven. If they had been dozing in the sun, or gossiping about their neighbours' affairs, he would have gone home to supper unmoved; but, as it was, their conversation arrested him, and made him think. They talked about the great evangelical mystery of the New Birth. They understood, though they could not explain, the paradox of the New Birth plunging a man deeper in his corruptions while raising him out of them. They believed in the five points of Calvinism. John Calvin, John Knox, and Thomas Chalmers could have sat down beside them, and approved of all they said. May our preachers ever rejoice in such company, and delight in the proclamation of such truths!

The effect of all this on Bunyan was:—

(1) It struck him dumb. This was a good beginning. He had been a brisk talker about the externalities of religion. He could talk glibly about the Church, its worship, and disputes in congregations. But that was in the past; he was driven into silence now.

(2) It caused his heart to shake. This was an entirely new sensation for him. He had been bold and confident, but now he was distrustful about himself.

(3) It sent him home to his wife. He would throw down his satchel at the door, and enter his house, saying that he could not do any work that day. He would tell how he had heard the old women speak, and what they said. The news would fill her heart with joy. Over the cradle of blind Mary a new baptism was received, in which the hope of the future and the experience of the past would commingle in consecration to the service of God. His thirsty soul drank in the warm quick blood of eternity. His mind lay like a horse-leech at the veins of eternity, sucking in things about the Kingdom of Heaven. The best comment I know on this experience is to be found in Browning's "Arab Physician," and his account of Lazarus, the man who had eternity in his heart, and stood drinking in its grace and glories. There is noble evangelical teaching in that poem. Entertain and bless your children by reading it to them.

Certain lessons are to be learned from this stage in Bunyan's history:—

(1) An ecclesiastical lesson. You debate about the best church to be in. You ask where is the denomination with the best form of government and the most orthodox doctrines? The whole matter may be put in a nutshell. Test the churches by the work they do. By their fruits ye shall know them, not by their theorisings. The church that can turn a blackguard like Bunyan into a saint, or produce women like those who talked about the things of God at the street corner, is the church for me.

(2) An experimental lesson. John Bunyan was driven into self-examination. The words of the old women convinced him that he wanted the true tokens of a godly man, and made him feel guilty because he had not got them. Examine yourselves. Have you the tokens of a godly man or those of a godly woman?

(3) Peter speaks of wives winning their husbands by their conversation. Many husbands are lost through the conversation of their wives. What was your conversation about this afternoon? Did your visitors feel the power of your Christian testimony, or did they go away thinking you were sordid, worldly, money-hunting people?

Our meetings have come to an end for the winter. We have met nineteen times. What is the result of our communion together? Are you weaned from the world, and more at home in eternity? Do you think less about things seen and temporal and more about things which are unseen and eternal? Surely, some do! Surely some hearts are more fixed on eternity now than they were in the beginning of the winter!

HOME FOR THE FALLEN.

A HOME for the rescue of fallen girls of the better class of society has for some time been doing a good work in the neighbourhood of the Metropolis. It is mainly supported by a lady, and there are many who will all their lives bless her for providing the means of sheltering them in their time of direst distress. The inmates enjoy the advantage of home life; needlework and household duties being the chief employment. Many girls, after leading sad and sinful lives, have become in a comparatively short time civilised and well behaved, and better still softened by religious influence. Much work is done outside the "Home" as well as inside. Girls are constantly being visited in their own homes or lodgings, and here the superintendent has been received as a welcome visitor. Not a few of these poor girls have been brought to a better life through visits of this kind from ladies who persevere in this labour of love.

This "Home" was opened in February, 1885, and is intended as a means of restoring the idea of family life and pure affections, thoughts which have been lost, or disfigured and distorted. It is hoped that the pretty home-like rooms, and the sense of the lady's presence there, may lead some to long for their own families and homes, to which in time they may be restored. Others who have no association of this kind will learn to cling to their new friend, and so gradually the past loses its hold, and new desires and hopes begin to dawn. D.

HYDE PARK MISSION.

TO walk up Edgware-road on Good Friday evening was no pleasant task. It seemed sin and vice here, there, and everywhere. The horrible songs that were being sung by half drunken men and women, and the terrible language that was being indulged in was enough to make one shudder. Yet we came across one bright spot, for Mr. Chas. Cook, of Hyde Park Hall, had engaged the Metropolitan Music Hall for a service of sacred song.

The great hall was densely crowded, and the service was one for which we could but heartily thank God, and pray for more to follow.

The pieces sung were spiritual in tone, and well rendered, and in a brief address Mr. Cook entreated those present to accept Christ, telling them that salvation was as free as the March winds or April showers.

Having given up the Music Hall on Easter Sunday, Mr. Cook and his co-workers will recommence their work in Hyde Park for the season on May 1. Hundreds of young men not in the habit of attending a place of worship have been won from a life of sin to Christ through those open-air services. Will the readers of THE CHRISTIAN pray for this especial branch of work, that during the coming summer in Hyde Park many may be led is beautifully situated, but is not on the whole a pleasant place. I had only time to see Mons. and Madame Meuricoffre, who exercise a beneficent influence in the higher circles of society, and Mr. Stephen Burrowes, the sailors' missionary, who has found Madame Meuricoffre an indefatigable and friendly helper. The Presbyterians, Methodists, and Baptists are all well represented, and their schools are an immense blessing to this superstitious people.

LETTERS FROM ROME.—8.

I PRESERVE the title of these letters, although this is not written at Rome, but refers to other cities.

NAPLES

At Pozzuoli (the Puteoli of Luke, Acts xxviii. 13), where Paul landed on his way to Rome, Sir William Armstrong is erecting buildings, where 5000 Italians will be employed, chiefly under English foremen, in the manufacture of war material for the Italian Government. Here Mrs. Butler last year opened a Sailors' Rest, which will be an unspeakable boon, and which the sailors more and more appreciate. The letters, which Mr. Burrowes receives from sailors who have stayed at Naples are most encouraging. The following may be taken as one example :—

GOOD NEWS FROM ANOTHER SHIP.

"Carthagena, March 16, 1887.—We now take the opportunity of writing a few lines to you. We had a passage of nine days to here from Naples. We have been here twelve days, and expect to sail to New York on Monday. We can tell you that we miss the Sailors' Rest at Naples very much. Some of the crew went ashore on Sunday to look for an English Church, and could not find one. We miss the Sunday night services. We shall hold service on Sunday morning on board. We also inform you that the four men who took the pledge in Naples Bethel have kept it, and we think they will.

"Your obedient servants,
"Signed, ROBERT SARGENT, E. WILMOT,
A. E. MURRAY, STEPHENSON SANDERS.
"Bark James E. Marshall, Nova Scotia."

I found Mr. Burrowes in great sorrow, having recently lost, for the "little while," a dear child of eight years, a born missionary, and a sweet little Christian. Other family trials had weighed heavily on our friend, but all was working together for good, and I expect to hear of his being used more abundantly than ever in his useful work.

FLORENCE.

My first visit here was to Dr. Comandi, a true and spiritual Christian, who in 1873 opened a small orphanage where half a dozen boys were supplied with food and shelter, and found employment in the workshop. In 1876 the orphanage was removed to its present premises, 6, Via Aretina, Porta alla Croce. The boys received, varying in age from three to eleven, are all orphans, and their admission is entirely free of charge. There are now seventy-six in the Asilo.

In addition to this a small Home has been opened in the grounds for the children of workmen and artisans, who though in most cases Romanists had expressed their desire for their children to be brought up under evangelical teaching, and their willingness to pay for such education. The usual school instruction is thus given, and in addition a certain amount of technical education. Children who show aptitude for drawing and wood-carving are taught modelling in clay. The workshops where these boys are employed and taught give them an admirable preparation for the battle of life.

A crèche, or rather infant charity school, for children from two and a half to six years, is of inestimable service to the poor mothers of the locality.

Dr. Comandi, at that time an unbeliever, married a very estimable Christian lady of Swiss extraction. She died soon after her first child was born, and the little one died also. This sore sorrow was used of God to his conversion, but the shadow of the bereavement evidently still remains. It is remarkable that his prin-

a very similar experience, and with the same result—the death of his Christian wife was the means of leading him to life and light.

I shall never forget the happy faces of the people, young, middle-aged, and old, who streamed out of the Sunday morning school. The joy of the Lord and the manifest love to Dr. Comandi which they all exhibited, were sufficient evidence of the character and success of that Sunday-school instruction.

Many of our readers have read Mrs. Butler's "Catherine of Siena." Not far from St. Catherine's house Dr. Comandi, who is a native of Siena, has built the first Protestant church and school-house. They were opened in 1883, the Mayor sending his private secretary to congratulate Dr. Comandi on the occasion.

A touching instance of conversion just in time was told me by Dr. Comandi. A freethinker, within a day of his death, suddenly thought "What if there should be a God?" The misgiving as to his condition increased, and he begged that a Protestant pastor might be called in. They did not know where one lived; but a man in the house said he knew a tradesman who was a deacon in a Protestant church. He was sent for, and told the dying man the way of salvation, and the next day he died full of joy. I saw his father and mother with happy faces coming from the Sunday morning school referred to above.

Seeing a memorial tablet in the chapel I asked its history. Dr. Comandi replied that when Dr. Young lived in Florence a dear child died, and instead of a monument he gave the money for the building of this chapel for Dr. Comandi's orphans and others who attend—a worthy memento of the transfigured child.

The difference between the Municipal Schools and these is that here the teachers are all Christians and the teaching evangelical; there the teachers may be Romanist, sceptic, or indifferent. The Gospel is first taught, then a Catechism with Scripture proofs, then a catechism comparing Romanism, its Pope and its traditions, with the Word of God. If the accommodation were multiplied there would be no lack of scholars. Thursday is a holiday in the Municipal Schools, and on other days they leave at half past two. Dr. Comandi keeps them till half past four, and they come on Thursday. I asked if this was not giving them too much school. But the Dr. replied, that the parents do not know where to send their children, they are here kept out of mischief; they are happy in school; learning is made an enjoyment; and they pass their examinations with more than the average success. There are, perhaps, no schools in Italy where Christ is made so entirely the first object, and the conversion of the children so definitely the end and aim, as here. And the results justify the method.

At the house of Mrs. Jackson, an American lady, and her sister, I spent a very pleasant evening with a number of Christian workers, including the young Free Church minister, who is occupying the place of Dr. Macdougall, during his absence through ill-heath, and Miss Roberts (address, 11, Lungo il Mugnone), the Lady Superintendent of the Medical Mission—an invaluable institution here, as everywhere.

Signor Ginoulhiac, a large-hearted Christian of wealth and position, invited a number of workers to his house one afternoon. There were present Revs. B. Pons, Editor of Italia Evangelica; Dr. Meille, Waldensian Pastor; Prof. Revel, of the Waldensian College; Santi Stagnita, Free Italian Church; Prof. Constantine Tollis, and Mr. Gay, American Methodist Episcopal; Enrico Jahier, Baptist; Dr. Comandi, our host and hostess, and Signora Frances de Satur, the widowed sister of the latter.

In a conversation which occupied an hour or two I gathered that evangelical truth is carried by the Italia Evangelica (which circulates 1000 weekly) into many places where there is no preaching. Applications from secular papers to exchange, and from clubs for a gratuitous copy, show that it is exciting interest. Mr. Pons also edits a "Children's Friend," which has the recommendation of being imitated by other pub-

Friend of the House," also has a circulation of 20,000.

The circulation of the Scriptures is double what it was five years ago, and is effected in out of the way places by colporteurs, of whom God has raised up some energetic young men in connection with the Bible Society. One of these in the Abruzzi mountains was led into the truth by the Scriptures alone. Then he found the colporteur who had sold it him, and he, too, became a colporteur. He could earn much more otherwise, but he loved this work better. A thousand Scriptures were sold in January on the mountains bordering the Adriatic—Gospels, 5 cents = ½d.; Testaments, 20 cents and upwards; Bibles, 5 francs.

Everywhere the priests oppose the Gospel; but they are losing influence, especially in the towns; it is in country districts and isolated villages that they are more felt. But many among them are of an evangelistic spirit, and would come out of Romanism if they had any means of living. The Gospel has made great progress in Italy. Twenty years ago, to speak of the Gospel was worse than speaking of the devil; now the people are not shocked by it, and the advance is far greater than is apparent on the surface. The spread of education is against Romanism. Where the teachers are strict Romanists their influence will, of course, weigh in that direction; but it is noteworthy that some of those most prominent in the Revolution in Italy came out of Jesuit schools. Victor Emmanuel had for his teacher a rabid Roman Catholic.

One of the company remarked that "Mr. Gladstone should know what Romanism is. It is impossible to be a faithful Papist and a good citizen." The Free Church schools in Florence charge a small fee (notwithstanding that the Municipal Schools are free), because the applications are more than the accommodation. This is a cogent reply to the idea that evangelical schools have no chance in competition with those of the Government. Some of the Protestant schools, however, are not as thoroughly evangelical and evangelistic as they might be; they are too popular, too much secular, to be spiritual. It is better to have a few thoroughly permeated by the spirit of the Gospel, than a larger number less entirely evangelical. It must not be overlooked that the evangelical day-school is complemented by the Sunday-school: no day-school, no Sunday-school, or a feeble one at the best.

The Waldensian School was transferred to Florence in 1860. Fifty or sixty of its students are now engaged in pastoral or evangelistic work. The average number of students is from twelve to fifteen. A technical training is objected to; it is sad that the same amount of knowledge is necessary for an evangelist as a pastor. To this it was replied that there are men who cannot study Greek and Hebrew, yet who would with some training make good evangelists. To this again it was replied that Professor Pilatte had tried to establish a special school for evangelists, but it had not succeeded.

PISA.

I went over from Florence for a day to see Miss Carruthers' schools at Pisa and Cisanello. Altogether she has about 250 children and young people under her care, and I saw no schools in more perfect order, or under better control. The younger ones are taught on the Kindergarten principle, and enjoy school as much as play. The teachers are young women who have been brought up in the schools, and who have gained their certificates. There are night schools for young men and young women, and thus an evangelical influence is continued. I would recommend visitors to Pisa by all means to see these excellent schools. Christian travellers may do much to encourage workers in Continental cities, and thereby add greatly to their own enjoyment.

THE GOSPEL IN JAPAN.

Rev. H. Loomis, the American Bible Society's agent at Yokohama, Japan, writing on Feb. 18, says:—

While there is general progress in all places, and in the various branches of the work, there has been a special and very rich blessing in several localities. This has been the case at Sendai in particular, where the awakening first began. It was the result of most earnest prayer and faithful work. The results are known, at present, only in part; but, during the month of December, ninety were baptized within the bounds of that field, and fifty-one more in January. This is only a part of the number that will thus be gathered in.

In the Province of Toa there is also a continued and growing interest in Christianity. The church at Kochi was organised about two years ago, and now has 194 members. Of this number twenty-seven were added in December and thirty in January. They have been supporting their own pastor for some time, and are now about to erect a new and spacious building to accommodate the great numbers who come to hear the message of salvation.

During the past few days there has been a considerable awakening in Yokohama. Nine persons were baptized last Sabbath, and eighteen more have applied to be received into the Church. The severe earthquake on January 15 aroused many, who before had been hesitating or were indifferent, to accept Christ as their Saviour. A missionary went to the town of Ikuzawa, and found a large number of students of God's Word anxious to be shown the path of life. After a series of meetings, nineteen persons were baptized, and the whole town has practically accepted the Gospel. The Sabbath is now a day of rest in all the village, and the people gather joyfully for Christian worship.

A very talented and energetic young man, who was an infidel leader in one of the Tokio schools, and an active opponent of Christianity, was sent to prison last year for shielding a political friend who had been guilty of crime. This led him to seek God, and his conversion was most complete. He has since been instrumental in the conversion of several influential persons, amongst which are a young teacher and a doctor, both of whom are now efficient workers for Christ. The young man is about to study for the ministry, and, together with his accomplished wife, devote himself to the spreading of that Gospel which he once despised and opposed.

The annual statistics of Protestant missions in Japan have just been published. The total number of churches reported is 103, and of these 64 are self-supporting; the total membership is 14,815. There are 93 native ministers, and 196 native evangelists and helpers. 4800 scholars are under instruction in the various schools, and 169 are studying theology. These figures are below the actual numbers in all cases, as some reports are incomplete, and others include only a part of the year. The total number of Christians must be about 15,300. 426 have been reported as added in the month of January alone.

We have also received the following statistics from the National Bible Society of Scotland:—

The first Gospel printed in Japan, that of St. Mark, was issued in 1872, the whole New Testament in 1880, and the issue of the entire Scriptures in the native character is expected immediately. Meanwhile the National Bible Society of Scotland has issued a popular edition of the New Testament in Roman letter, which is meeting with a large sale. The Board of the Society have agreed to join the other Bible Societies in publishing an edition of this Testament with references. The introduction and acceptance of the Scriptures in Roman letter marks a new and important epoch in the history of Christian missions in Japan.

From the report of the Council of the United with 4356 adult members. The gain last year in churches was nine, and in members, 1128. The contributions of the native Christians for last year averaged seven shillings each. There are now 83 European and American missionaries in Japan. A remarkable revival has visited the churches in the north of the country. In one church thirty new members have been received, and in another, forty-six.

EVANGELISTIC MISSION.

EASTER MONDAY AT KILBURN HALL.

The large hall was nearly full for the afternoon meeting. The first half hour being given to prayer. Addresses were given by Mr. Henry Varley and Mr. H. L. Hastings, the latter of whom traced, in two examples—Simon, the Cyrenian, and the dying thief—the Divine purpose that men shall be sharers in Christ's earthly lot, previous to a share in His glory, when it shall be revealed.

At the evening meeting, which was crowded, special prayer was made for Christian work in many halls and districts, briefly mentioned by representatives present.

Dr. McKilliam spoke of the two prayers, on behalf of believers, in Ephesians—first, for a practical knowledge of the hope of Christ's calling, the riches of the glory of His inheritance in the saints, our own weakness, and the exceeding greatness of His power; then, for an emphatic dwelling of Christ in the heart, by faith, unto increasing acquaintance with His love and all the fulness of God. It is faith's privilege to cherish an expectation of present answers to these prayers.

Dr. Laseron read 1 Cor. xiii. 13. Faith, a growing thing, will be changed into sight, and hope will be changed into possession. Both have their origin in love, which uproots selfishness, makes believers Christlike, and abides for ever. To give money out of superabundance is easier than to give ourselves. We shrink from giving our daughters to China, because "there is so much to be done at home," and—we don't do it. If there is to be a revival of persecution, the sooner it comes, the better, that we may be rid of pretence. The love of Christ will make our sons and daughters willing to labour, not only in such places as Zenanas, where they are thought much of, but in scenes where they are likely to be little valued.

After addresses from Mr. Robert Paton and Mr. H. D. Brown, Mr. Henry Varley gave some advice to those who think of engaging in foreign mission work. Hundreds of young men, he said, are preaching in London to-day, whom God never called to do so. The last thing to do is to give up business for preaching. The Church needs a voluntary band of self-sustained leisure-time workers. The need is for Bible students and men of prayer, simplicity, and intelligence. There is ground for caution that we do not preach faith instead of Christ, and puzzle men by nice distinctions respecting the nature of faith.

Mr. J. McCall, in prayer, closed these meetings, which throughout had been marked with the greatest interest.

Similar meetings were held at Bignold Hall, the Forest Gate branch of the Mission, where Mr. Abraham Wallis was welcomed from a tour in Egypt. At Swindon between 50 and 100 souls have been brought to a knowledge of the truth, this gracious work having begun with the impression produced by a Christian railway guard accidentally losing his life. There is a need for larger buildings for preaching at Swindon and Kentish Town. Mr. Edward Hurditch has safely reached Melbourne, and, after he had been instrumental in bringing souls to God on the voyage, a long series of services,

CHILDREN IN DUBLIN.

In connection with the Mission Schools and Homes in Dublin, much earnest work has been going forward, in the face of unwearying opposition from Rome. One who was an inveterate drunkard is now an indefatigable worker and winner of souls. The children crowd into the Homes and Schools, and the people see the blessing God's Word brings to their families. A Roman Catholic woman married to an ignorant Protestant, wandered into one of the Mission meetings, and afterwards by her changed life was the means of bringing her husband to embrace the new life she had found. The spirit of inquiry spreads from one to another; new people are found continually at the meetings, and deeply interesting it is to find the errors of Rome vanishing before the light of the Gospel so carefully hidden from them. A bright intelligent woman said "I don't want my children to be brought up in my religion—it is no credit to us—all the crimes in Ireland are caused by ignorance of the Bible, and we are not taught the love and fear of God." What an influence for good must be the result of the careful teaching of God's Word to 1400 children day by day, these passing out to useful life, and their places filled up by little ones constantly pressing in.

The house-to-house visiting is carried on with loving zeal. A young woman who had been deeply interested in the Bible on seeing one of the Mission visitors enter said, "Oh, I am glad to see you; there are some ungodly women next door I would like to get in." She just knocked on the wall and in a few minutes in they came, reading and prayer from John iv. followed. It was like the woman of Samaria when she got salvation, running off to call her neighbours. A dear old deaf sailor on his death-bed, who had been brought out of heathen darkness to embrace the truth, when asked was he afraid to die? was he sure of going to heaven? smilingly replied, "only waiting for sailing orders." Communications may be addressed to Mrs. Smyly, 35, Upper Fitzwilliam-street, Dublin.

LONDON MEDICAL MISSION.

The lengthening days of spring help us to realise how great a boon it is to the poor children of this overcrowded London, to spend a week away from its depressing sights and sounds amidst happier scenes of rural life.

Holiday House is no experiment with us now. Since 1878 we have sent 3122 children in weekly parties of from twelve to twenty. Many boys and girls now growing up look back upon these visits as the bright spots in their young lives. Some of those who have been before, as well as many new faces, are now looking forward for this visit. How salutary in their circumstances is such an expectation, and how deep the influence for good which the remembrance of happy days thus spent has upon their young minds. Not a few have been led to decide for Christ on these occasions. Truths heard in the Sunday-school, or at their homes during sickness, are brought in power to their hearts through the earnest and loving words of the Matron.

Our country Cottage at Brasted Chart has been reopened for the season. Six shillings defrays the cost of one child for the week. Should any friend desire that children from other parts of London might have the benefit of a week's change, this could be arranged as opportunities occur upon writing to Dr. F. A. Pring, Medical Superintendent, 47, Endell-street, St. Giles', W.C.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of the late Mr. Robert Simpson, Merchant and Evangelist, Glasgow.

The evils of debt in association with Church affairs are not yet fully realised by Christian people. We are glad, however, to see the announcement of a scheme, by the Free Church of Scotland, to raise £50,000 for the extinguishment of debt. The man with the withered arm is a true representation of many churches which have this baneful influence cramping all their efforts.

It is stated that the Emperor of Russia purposes to copy the example of the British Government in Bengal with regard to the sale of intoxicating liquor in his dominions. The new Minister of Finance has suggested that the privilege of selling drink should be offered to the highest bidder. On the profitable nature of the transaction being explained to the Czar he is reported to have said:—

> Thank God; now there seems a prospect of a dawn in Russia.

Will not some candid friend inform him that a dawn in financial success by such means will produce a night of physical and moral depravity among his subjects?

Archdeacon Farrar has lost no time in replying to the censor who took him to task for saying that "we found India sober, and have made it drunken." He is able to quote overpowering authority in support of the statement, and claims his critic as an important witness. The admission that "only one-twelfth" of the people of Bengal consume spirituous liquors is sufficient to establish what the Archdeacon stated regarding a people to whom "shame-water" was once an utter abomination.

It is claimed by Mr. J. T. Cox, of the London Sunday-school Union, that what are called "Christian Bands" have proved the antidote of the comparative failure of Sunday-schools as feeders of the Church. These Bands associate young people between the ages of from ten to sixteen, and prepare them for Church fellowship. It is assuring to know that the Bible-class, the Christian Band, the Boy's Brigade, and similar agencies are harvesting in a field which until lately was much neglected.

The Sunday-school, with its place and power in Church work, is a subject which has yet to receive adequate attention. Good Friday was made useful in Leamington by a Conference of the Midland Counties Sunday-school Association, when a valuable paper was read by Dr. Fairbairn, of Mansfield College. He claimed that with the parents lies the principal educating power, and that the teacher is but a supplementary aid. This is a statement worthy the attention of many Christian parents who largely depend upon the Sunday-school for the

The Bishop of Carlisle is interesting himself in the cause of the Hindoo Lady Rukhmabai. He has sent to The Times a long letter which that lady has addressed to a member of his family. Here is a woman, says the bishop, whose letter testifies to her intelligence, her refinement, her elevation of character, condemned either to the disgrace of imprisonment or to a life which to such a woman must be a living death. Is it necessary that a government which abolished suttee should respect such a venerable relic of barbarous and cruel tradition and custom?

The proposed abolition of the half-yearly sacramental fast-day in Scotland is not, as a Times correspondent states, "a striking proof of the decadence of Church influence," but rather a wiser religious conviction that "fast days" cannot be enforced on the general population. Calvin's sad and bitter experience in Geneva, to say nothing of Scripture, should have taught churches long ago that spiritual requirements and prohibitions cannot, without discomfiture be enforced on a mixed society. The Church regains influence when it relies on godly persuasion instead of legal sanctions.

What is coming over our novelists? A while ago their worst fault was that they were contributing to a sad waste of time, and that they were doing much to disseminate false views of life. Now, however, if they were only weak and silly we should indeed be thankful; for, if they abstain from the revolting pruriency of the French realistic school, with its literature of the sewer and the charnel house, they are giving to the public works which no doubt are more dangerous because less disgusting. In many of these books, read in scores by the young daughters of thoughtless and careless parents, all the sympathy is with wrongdoing and evil-doers, and if there is any attempt whatever to aim at poetic justice it is of so boneless a character that the reader necessarily feels that it has been brought in merely to save appearances. The publication of these "works of fiction" is fast becoming an unmixed evil, and we shall soon require something in the direction of a stern censorship if our girls and young men are to be preserved in anything like purity. Of a recent novel an able critic has just said:—

> This is a very powerful book, and as disagreeable as it is powerful. It is a picture of shameless falsehood, levity, and infidelity, followed by no true repentance, and yet crowned in the end with perfect success, nor does Mr. —— seem to paint his picture in any spirit of indignation that redeems the moral drift of the book, &c., &c.

That is bad enough, but our female novelists are the most serious offenders, and this is what the same critic, not at all a squeamish reviewer, says of a new novel by one of them:—

> It is an able book, with some bright and strong work, but "the trail of the serpent is over it all." A novel the whole interest of which centres in adultery is always bad, and of such material this story is all compact. One hideous situation seems to have been suggested by certain evidence given at a recent trial...a more repulsive invention than this it is not easy to conceive.

So repulsive is it, in fact, that we dare not further refer to it, yet this is a book written by a woman, for the women and girls who find recreation in novel-reading. The moral responsibility of such a writer and of her publishers is terrible to

The poem entitled "The Jubilee Year," which appeared in our last, may be had in leaflet form, tastefully printed, price 2s. per 100.

A contemporary states that although the first missionary who entered Fiji, and "surprised the natives at their cannibal feast by the story of the Cross," is still living, to-day 98½ per cent. of the whole population attend the Wesleyan services, and that their contributions for missionary work, last year, amounted to over £4000. In one district, Bau, out of a population of 11,508 the large number of 11,328 attend. No wonder that James Calvert, the pioneer missionary in the islands, has "boundless faith in the power of the Gospel to save the world."

Archdeacon Blyth has been consecrated Bishop of the Church of England in Jerusalem, and it is interesting to note that the Greek Patriarch of Jerusalem has expressed a hope that the presence of the Anglican Bishop in the city may to some extent counteract "the aggressive action of the Papal Church." The English Churchman has stated, however, that the new Bishop "distinctly teaches Baptismal Regeneration in its most objectionable form," that in regard to the observance of the Lord's Day he avows himself "decidedly anti-Sabbatarian," and that he holds Mr. Sadler's views on Priestly Absolution. If this be the case, the Greek Patriarch will probably be disappointed.

The following facts concerning foreign missions deserve a condensed notice. Unmarried ladies in the mission field now number 2400, and this must be noted as a result which has come to pass spite of fears which prevailed a few years ago. In an equally short space of time the Alabama Indians of Texas have risen from savagery to having among them flourishing day and Sunday-schools; now raise bales of cotton; and are surrounded with the comforts of life. Missionary facts are everywhere giving pertinence to two questions lately asked at Bournemouth by the Bishop of Winchester, and which we quote from The Guardian:—

> England is the wealthiest nation in the world, and is it not a sin and a scandal that although a vast amount of the wealth is owned by the gentry and the middle classes, the lower classes, according to their means, and the poor clergy, should be left to contribute the most to the great missionary societies? Might he not ask, did it not call for a judgment?

Everyone who has the use of his legs can walk, but graceful walking comes by training. The structure of the throat is exceedingly delicate and complicated, and the right production of the voice requires studious education and careful training. An educated voice adds greatly to the attractiveness of a preacher, and to his ease and power in conveying thought; yet few have learned the art of making the best use of it. Dr. Morell Mackenzie is, perhaps, the highest living authority on the throat, its formation, its use, and its diseases, and everyone who exercises his voice in public would do well to possess himself of his valuable work, "The Hygiene of the Vocal Organs: a Practical Handbook for Singers and Speakers" (Macmillan, 6s.). Indeed, all parents and teachers ought themselves to know the importance and understand something of the structure of the vocal organs, that they may appreciate children and pupils. We write feelingly, and wish we had read Dr. Mackenzie's treatise years ago.

It has been often said, and is said again at this time of spiritual Conferences, that the Church of Christ needs a "baptized secularism," and should not live in a transcendental region of devotional emotion so that no "bitter cry" from the underpaid needlewoman or starved child can reach it. But two things must be remembered: First, the objection has been taken against the teaching of Paul that it was too spiritual, and left Roman slavery alone; but Paul knew well that the adoption of the religion he preached would put an end to slavery and all other tyrannies; and, secondly, the men and the women who in our times are working for starved children and underpaid needlewomen, are pre-eminently those who seek to move in a region of devotional emotion. Devotion for man is the earthly fruit of love to God.

Notwithstanding doctrinal defects in the Life of Bishop Fraser, just issued by Messrs. Macmillan & Co., there are characteristics deserving attention. On beginning his course as a preacher, he asked his mother to tell him whether she thought his sermons would awaken a hearer and lead to self-application, and adds—"I want my sermons to be useful, and not to display any learning or eloquence of my own" (p. 48). It was his custom in his first rural charge to go over the parochial incidents of the year, in the New Year's sermon. In 1862, one who was present says, "he rebuked plainly and sharply," because of one illegitimate birth that year in the parish (p. 110). To the working men's wives of Manchester he said—"You must win your children early if you would win them at all" (p. 217). Speaking of elaborate ceremonials in churches he said—"I can't see that they are making anyone better, purer, stronger;" and then he thus characterises the epicurean cynicism now so common:—

> Cruelly mocking at life, itself secure; abjuring every high aim in pursuit of personal comfort; checked on the path of selfishness by no moral considerations; wrecking woman's honour; shattering simple faith; the unhappy offspring of an age which has resolved religion into phrases, and God's service into a gorgeous ceremonial.

It is interesting to notice, in connection with the paragraph in THE CHRISTIAN of March 31, as to The Pall Mall Gazette's speculation with regard to the Papal Chair becoming "the Peace centre of the modern world," that there is a growing fear in Italy lest one of the terms of the Tripartite Alliance should have been the restoration to some extent or other of the Temporal Power of the Pope. An attempt certainly will be made shortly in that direction, and already the bishops have given instructions to the priests to do all they can to prepare the public mind, by pointing out the advantages to follow peace between the Italian nation and the Pope. But if ever Italy places her neck under the Papal yoke she will, this time, deserve her slavery. Rome never gives a penny without exacting twopence in return, and Italy, of all lands, ought to know that. Eadem semper, ubique et omnibus. For our part, with regard to the value of Rome as "a peace centre," we prefer the testimony of Edmond About, whose "Question Romaine" ought to be reprinted at this juncture, so full is it of testimonies to the fact that the peace of Rome is that of death, and that it is never possessed save at the cost of entire sub-

There is a lovely thought in one of the chapters of Vaughan's masterly "Hours with the Mystics," where the gifted author, speaking of the doctrine of perfection, says:—

> This is not a principle peculiar to mysticism. It is of little practical importance. It is difficult to see how it can be applied to individual experience. The man who has reached such a state of purity must be the last to know it. If we do not, by some strange confusion of thought, identify ourselves with God, the nearer we approach to Him the more profoundly must we be conscious of our distance. As in a still water, we may see reflected the bird that sings in an overhanging tree, and the bird that soars towards the zenith—the image deepest as the ascent is highest—so is it with our approximation to the Infinite Holiness.

In connection with this thought we may take another, for which we are indebted to Rev. Professor Momerie, that the self-denial which Christ requires of us is not self-mutilation, but self-development; not self-neglect, but self-fulfilment. This it is which will bring us gradually to the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ.

We beg to acknowledge the many communications we have received from our readers, intimating that copies of this journal are being sent abroad; or offering to send copies to missionaries. As those foreign workers who are now receiving copies only comprise about a tenth part of the whole missionary forces, there is still ample room for the thoughtful kindness of other readers in this direction.

Many Christians who have known him only by name will feel that they have lost a personal friend by the recent decease at Newark, N.J., of Dr. Ray Palmer, author of "My faith looks up to Thee," and other less-known hymns of trust and hope. He passed quietly away from earth at the age of seventy-nine, death being caused by a general breaking down of his physical powers. He served his generation well as a Christian pastor, but his songs of Zion have given him world-wide repute. Speaking of him as a hymn writer, the New York Independent says:—

> No other American stands his equal. He will be classed in the Church's history, if not on the same pre-eminent height with Watts and Wesley, yet alongside of Doddridge and Cowper and Newton. As a writer of religious verse he was not characterised by passion. There were in his religious life no ups and downs, and his life flowed along on one level of assured faith. He could not, like Cowper, cry out in despair, for he never felt despair. He knew, and he always knew, in whom he believed. He was never carried away by a whirlwind of fervour. His mind was calm, being stayed on God.

We would draw special attention to the valuable addresses on the teaching of Solomon's Temple being given each day this week by Mr. Thomas Newberry, at Mildmay Conference Hall; particulars as to hours of meeting will be found in our list of announcements. The stimulating and practical character of these talks can only be understood by those who have heard them, and we trust all who can will attend them.

ST. KATHERINE'S HALL.—This hall, situated in Leadenhall-street, was opened last week, and will form the centre of new evangelistic work in East London. In this Rev. Dr. Whittemore, who presided at the opening, takes a great interest, frequently conducting the daily prayer-meeting, and in many ways stimulating and helping the workers, whom again he reminded that "other foundation can no man lay than that which is laid, which is Jesus Christ." Some of the members of the prayer-meeting during the evening related their Christian experience, and their testimony was Messrs. Fullerton & Smith in Sheffield.

To many of the Lord's people here, the last three weeks have been a time of sunshine and holy inspiration. We have had amongst us for an evangelistic mission Messrs. Fullerton and Smith. Both brethren were in fine health of body, and the unction of the Holy One was truly in their spirit and speech. Of the whole series of services, not one has been feeble or unfruitful. Meetings have been held for various classes of people at hours most suited to their convenience. In all of these the power of Mr. Smith's sweet, clear, melodious voice, and of Mr. Fullerton's warm, pungent, pithy appeals, has been acknowledged. In the great majority of cases the converts are persons associated with some Christian congregation; but not a few are from the wide waste, where, but for these services, they might have been left to perish.

Some of the most successful meetings as to visible results have been those conducted by Mrs. Fullerton for women only. The most fruitful meeting of all seems to have been one held for young women chiefly employed in factories and domestic service. This meeting was held in the evening of a day when over seven hundred married women had been addressed by our devoted sister at three o'clock.

In seeking out the anxious, many instances of usefulness, through the former mission of our brethren here six years ago, have come to light. Several such cases turned up in one day in a meeting for railway-men, where three men told how they had yielded themselves to Christ at the former mission. F. B.

Another correspondent writes: — Earnest prayer had been offered, which has been abundantly answered. A small band of Christian women met in their homes to pray for dear ones still far from Christ. Before our friends came, one had the joy of seeing her husband converted, and another heard of the conversion of a son in America. Many testify with joy to their own salvation, and others are conscious of a quickening of their spiritual life.

ST. NEOTS.—Mr. and Mrs. Newman, who have laboured so long and successfully in their Mission at St. Neots and neighbourhood, have now been led to seek a new sphere of service. The work in connection with their five mission halls has been undertaken by Mr. G. D. Shipley, of The Village Mission.

CHRISTIAN LIFE AND EXPERIENCE.—On Tuesday and following days of last week, a Conference of Christians was held at the Highbury Athenæum on this subject. The promoters of the gatherings were Rev. Frank D. Sandford, of Boston, U.S.A., Dr. W. Woods-Smyth, of Maidstone, and Rev. W. Darlow Sarjeant, of Greenwich.

SOUTH TOTTENHAM.—A successful mission has been conducted here, in connection with the Bible Christian Church, by Miss North, of Axminster, assisted by Miss Ryall. Believers have been filled with joy, and over seventy persons entered the inquiry rooms. On Good Friday, a meeting for Christian testimony was held, presided over by the pastor, Rev. J. Horsey. Between three and four hundred persons were present and as many as could find opportunity testified to the saving and sustaining power of Divine grace.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER AND PRAISE.—Prayer for blessing on the following special missions:—Rev. Alfred Jones (of Newport, Mon.), at Stapleton-road Chapel, Bristol, April 23 to 29; Messrs. Scroggie and Cairns, at the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road E.; Mr. James B. Wookey, at Bristol, to April 22.——Special services for children, at Louth, Lincolnshire, by Mr. Arrowsmith; also by Mr. Josiah Spiers, at Blue Ribbon Hall, Forster-road, Tottenham, April 25 to 29.——Church Parochial Mission: Rev. J. H. Haslam, St. Andrew's, Stockwell, S.W., April 24 to 30; Rev. R. D. Monro, Highampton, North Devon, April 23 to May 3.——For restoration to health of Mrs. Parsons, directress of the Orphan Homes, Walthamstow.——Miss De Broen asks prayer for herself and her twelve lady workers, that much blessing may attend their work among the poor in Belleville, Paris.——Praise for blessing experienced

MISSIONARY FAREWELLS.

HARLEY HOUSE, BOW.

FEW things are more cheering in Christian work just now than the marked revival and increase of missionary zeal. The tide had taken a turn in the right direction, but it must continue to flow strongly and long, before the wide shores of heathendom will be covered. It is not three months since the last band of out-going missionaries was dismissed from Harley House. Tidings of their arrival on the Congo only reached this country a day or two ago, and now a larger band are about to follow.

Twenty out-going missionaries were on the platform at the meeting on Friday last, of whom sixteen are entering on the work for the first time, and four are returning to fields of labour. They were not all students of the Institute, five having arrived from America, en route to the Congo, and one, Mr. E. W. Brooke, being also an outsider; but the other fourteen had all spent a longer or shorter time in the College. With one exception all were bound for the Dark Continent, twelve for the Congo Valley, five for North Africa, and two for the Soudan.

The Congo party includes the ladies from America, the Misses Falkner, Hamilton and Fleming, and three from our own country, Miss Clarke, Mrs. Banks and Miss Shakle—who will, on her arrival, be married to Mr. Billington. The six brethren are Messrs. Lewis and Camp, from the United States, Messrs. Pettersen, Hokanson and Scarp, from Sweden, and Mr. Banks.

The North African party, all going out for the first time, consists of Mr. Summers, who sails this week, and four ladies, who will accompany Mr. Glenny a week or two later—the Misses Cox, Smith, Blackwell, and Copping. Miss Blackwell has already been some years in the country, and is to be married to M. Mercadier, a French brother already in the field.

The meetings were full of interest, many well-known Christian friends being present. Sir R. PHAYRE, who presided in the afternoon, referred aptly to many features in the career of the great missionary Paul—his experiences, his message, and his Master. There was some sweet singing by the students of the Institute, especially a Russian hymn sung by two Russian students, one of whom is an exile, and has been a prisoner for the Gospel's sake.

Three African spheres were especially brought before the attention of the meetings: (1) The great Northern Region, eleven hundred miles in length, including Morocco, Oran, Algeria, Constantine, Tunis, and Tripoli; (2) the Congo Valley, and the extended line of stations of the Livingstone Inland Mission; (3) The and comparatively unexplored and unknown Soudan region, lying a thousand miles to the north of the Congo, and two thousand miles south of the Mediterranean coast line.

Mr. G. W. BROOKE has the honour of being the first missionary to start for this sphere. He has already been—in the Senegal country—further into the interior than any other white man, and in parts where he was warned that it was quite unsafe for any Christian to venture. But the Lord preserved him from all danger, and he found open doors everywhere. His bright, manly, earnest, and solemn appeal to young Christians to go forth hopefully and quickly into the very heart of heathendom, and into the midst of Islam, was very telling, as coming from one who, young as he looks, had already faced danger and death, and was preparing to do so again. He told how he had been providentially brought into contact with Sélim, a native of the Dinka country—who has been for some time a student in the Institute, and who was on the platform—and how they were hoping now to go together, viâ the Congo and Mobangi rivers, to the Niam Niam and Monbutto country, to settle, perhaps, among the Dinka people, or wherever the door should be opened for them.

Mr. GLENNY gave a few particulars of the sphere to which the North African party are going. The Mission to the Kabyles and Berbers of that region has only been in working order between three and four years, but it has already twenty-two missionaries, six of whom are married, at work in Morocco, Algiers, and Tunis, and these five raise the number to over thirty. The stations are scattered along a coast line of twelve hundred miles; give one lady missionary to every ten thousand women in these countries, we should want a thousand more labourers, and the same number of men to give one preacher to each ten thousand Mohammedan men, while another thousand would find ample work among the children and young folks. He mentioned a most cheering fact, that he had just received a letter suggesting that the Mission should open up Tripoli also—as no single ambassador for Christ is as yet at work in all its extent of 200,000 square miles. The letter proposed also sending workers down to the south to Ghadames and Mourzook, and, if possible, on to Lake Chad, and intimated that if the men were forthcoming, the means would be—a noble offer verily, and one that will make the hearts of Christians who are longing, as Paul did of old, to hasten the spread of the Gospel in unevangelised parts of the world, to leap for very joy! The writer even suggested the possibility of putting a steamer on Lake Chad. How many are there in wealthy, Christian England, who, if they would, might do as much for Christ, but who, instead of "seeking first the kingdom," are by their selfish heedlessness bringing down upon themselves the they came not up to the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord against the mighty." Thank God, there are some large-hearted men of wealth who feel that the noblest use to which they can put their gold, is to extend Gospel agencies over the earth.

We wish space would permit us to give the earnest words spoken by the missionaries, as, one by one, they rose in the meeting—and later on in the evening gathering, over which Mr. T. A. DENNY presided—telling simply how they had been led to give themselves to the work, and expressing their emotions in entering on it. "I feel how weak I am; no one could be more helpless," said the coloured sister, Miss Fleming, who had left nine brothers and sisters behind her in the States, "and I know Christ's kingdom can come in the Dark Continent without my humble service; but thanks be unto God that He has called me to help in the work. I am ready to stand or die, to fall on the Congo, or to work there till He comes. My grandfather was stolen from the Congo, and now I am going back with glad tidings to my race. My heart is glad! His peace is enough! Underneath are the everlasting arms." This sister has laboured already for some years in the Southern States.

Mr. SUMMERS, who has been over two years in the Institute, told of his mother's last words to him, as, just before his boat started, they walked up and down the quay at Aberdeen, "Remember, laddie, that if you are faithful to God, God will be faithful to you!" and said that it was in this assurance he was going forth. "We feel that we are going home, in returning to the Congo," said Brother Pettersen; "here we seem in a strange place where we have no right to be; we only long to get back to our home on the Congo!" "Sometimes," said Sélim, his coal black Dinka face shining with earnest faith, "Sometimes I pray in your language, but it is hard. Many a time when I pray in my own language, I think, Does God really put his Spirit in my heart? And I feel my heart going like a clock! Yes. It is true. But my people not know this. Oh, would it not be the joy of Christian men to go and make my people beautiful and lovely like Christ?"

A Congo lad was also on the platform, and Mrs. Guinness read a letter from Mr. Murphy mentioning how helpful the lads, who had been in England, proved to newly arrived missionaries, enabling them at once to preach by interpretation. He said that some of them were themselves eloquent evangelists, and doing good.

The first iron church for the Congo is now being built in the Messrs. Croggon's yard at Bow. It is for Banza Manteka—to seat 600—and will be sent out early next month. The £500 needful to purchase, transport, and re-erect it was contributed in one meeting at Dr. Gordon's church in Boston. May it prove the birthplace

YOUNG MEN IN LONDON.

MANSION HOUSE MEETING.

"The august mother of nearly three thousand Young Men's Christian Associations," as the home at 186, Aldersgate-street has been called, held its forty-third annual meeting in the Egyptian Hall of the Mansion House on Thursday evening last. The noble hall, well suited for a gathering so important as that of this Y.M.C.A., was filled with young men and their friends, and the president, Mr. George Williams, was surrounded by a large number of influential supporters. Perhaps there is nothing that has so much tended to link in a warm bond of sympathy and fellowship this ancient Association with Christian workers, in almost all lands, as the Noonday Prayer Meeting. To this gather day after day many who love the quiet of a "sweet hour of prayer," and who find refreshing and renewal of strength in the precious teaching of the Word, or in the accounts of work in the Lord's vineyard given sometimes by labourers from far-off lands, who return hither as to a home fragrant with many precious memories, and sometimes by evangelists and others busily occupied in spiritual husbandry in our own land. But, as was well pointed out by the chairman, an association doing such a work amongst young men of the City as is that at Aldersgate-street, with its 800 active members, 1000 associates, and about 800 students in the different classes (400 of these not being members), well deserves the support of City merchants and men of influence.

Considerable gratification was felt when Mr. Williams announced that this had been expressed in a very practical manner, a total deficiency in the balance-sheet amounting to over £1000 having been entirely cleared off, the sons of the late Mr. Samuel Morley, who said they would do the same as their father did, contributing £200 for this purpose. Mr. Williams referred also to the value of the definite Christian training given to the 2200 young men who here find many of the advantages of a home, not the least of these being the hearty sympathy ever extended to them by Mr. Burn, and the fatherly counsel which in so many times of difficulty and trial has proved so helpful. It is this Christian training which gives power and strength to resist temptation, and which enables young men to pass through life to their own credit and to the advantage of their employers. Mr. Williams concluded a characteristic address by saying he believed there was yet a bright future for the commerce of England. If only her citizens are guided by principle and sterling character, as inculcated by such associations, of which there are sixty-four in London and the suburbs, England, he was sure, would hold its own everywhere.

Mr. R. Burn, Secretary, having referred to the principal features in the report, spoke of the influence exerted by the young men themselves, and quoted from several letters to show how much spiritual work is done by the instrumentality of this Association and the unceasing work here carried on, in co-operation with which it is now intended to form a Ladies' Auxiliary. A gymnasium was also referred to as a much-needed addition to other agencies.

Rev. Thomas Champness said those who lived in the country knew well what an amount of sorrow was expressed in the single sentence often heard in farmhouse and cottage, "My lad is gone to London." They who like himself were interested in farmhouse and cottage homes were glad that such Associations were doing much to help the young men of the land. Many of these will return to the country, and upon the habits they form whilst in the Metropolis, the stamp impressed upon them here, very much depends. He urged upon all the importance at the very beginning of life of taking the Lord Jesus as their guide and captain—of being out-and-out soldiers and servants of his. He a missionary in Africa, stood up and said, "I am a Jesus Christ man," sending also years after a message to the same effect to the same missionary; and by that of a young man who, having accepted Christ as his Saviour, confessed Him in his daily life amongst his companions, and now occupies an honourable position, both as an employer, and as a servant of the Lord.

After an address from Capt. James Cundy (of the firm of Dent, Allcroft & Co.), who quoted from speeches by the late Lord Shaftesbury, Earl Cairns, and Mr. Samuel Morley, as showing how much they valued Y.M.C.A. work, Rev. Dr. Thain Davidson gave an extract from the common-place book of the poet Burns, in which he gives this advice to young men:—"Whatever else you do, see to it that you keep up a regular, warm intercourse with the Deity." Such a quotation from the writings of one who, though he knew what was right, followed the wrong, is full of warning, for, unfortunately, there are hundreds of young men deliberately going on in a course of vice and folly, while all the time conscience is reproving them. From his own experience, Dr. Davidson added, he was convinced that no ministerial work pays in its results as does that amongst young men. In conclusion, he mentioned four "anchors" which would keep them secure amidst the storms and temptations of life—loyalty to the religion of their fathers, steadfast attachment to the ordinances of religion, determined fidelity to moral principle, and, most important of all, a firm hold by faith of Jesus Christ.

At intervals during the evening a choir from the Royal Normal School for the Blind, Norwood, rendered some sacred musical selections in an excellent manner.

EASTER IN RATCLIFF HIGHWAY.

Easter is always a lively time in Ratcliff Highway, and this year the few workers who remained in town were even more busy than usual at the Strangers' Rest. On Good Friday afternoon a large number of seamen met for the usual service and tea, a prayer-meeting following, seeking special blessing on the Gospel meetings then to be held, and as the men crowded in afterwards to hear "the glad news," surely this prayer was abundantly answered.

Part of the helpers adjourned to the Lads' Institute, where fifty uncared for and some destitute boys enjoyed the new gymnasium, and still more a hearty supper, kindly provided by a lady at Clitheroe. After this, in another room, they were told of that Saviour who provides an everlasting feast for all who love Him.

On Easter Monday a large tea was provided for the sailors, and the room was overcrowded. Then came a testimony meeting, and the workers' hearts were cheered, as one after another rose to tell what the Lord had done for his soul. Several, desiring salvation, asked for special prayer.

All then adjourned to the street corner, where a large open-air meeting was held, and indoors various services were going on. At nine the meetings closed, and the workers left, full of thankfulness for the joy of sharing in this glorious work of winning souls.

AGRICULTURAL HALL SERVICES.—A large social gathering of those accustomed to attend these services was held on Good Friday evening, in the Liverpool-road Wesleyan Chapel, Islington. Dr. Thain Davidson read a genial letter from Mr. Spurgeon, regretting his necessary absence. Dr. Davidson, reviewing the past eighteen years in which the work had been carried on, expressed the conviction that the people were not yet wearied of the old evangelical faith, and that nothing but the Gospel would bring such large numbers together on the Lord's-day. Revs. C. B. Sawday and James Ellis, and Mr. Elvin, spoke of the blessing which issued from the Agricultural Hall, and anticipated

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

Rev. J. M. Hewson has been holding temperance meetings in Devonshire and Yorkshire.

The Yorkshire Band of Hope Union consists of thirty-one local unions, with a membership of 150,000.

Glasgow police-court returns, on a recent Monday, showed a large increase in arrests for drunkenness.

The Times fears the enormous profit of the drink-trade with Africa will be too strong for philanthropy.

After an address by Madame Woyka, at Oban, a branch of the Women's Temperance Association was recently formed.

It is stated that fifty Dublin magistrates have become disqualified for sitting at licensing sessions owing to their having taken shares in Guinness's brewery.

The twenty-fifth series of winter meetings at Lambeth Baths was recently brought to a close. Seven hundred have signed the pledge during the past winter, and 23,110 since the meetings began.

The late Mr. J. Sanders, formerly a wine and spirit merchant in the city, has left £225 to the National Temperance League, to provide three prizes for the best essays in advocacy of the principles of total abstinence.

Canon Ellison, presiding at the ninth annual meeting of the Church of England Temperance Benefit Society, said there had been an increase of thirty-four fresh lodges, and the receipts of the benefit fund amounted to £1366.

Dr. Alfred Carpenter, J.P., addressing a meeting of public sanitary inspectors at Westminster, recently, said that spirituous liquors were no correctives of impure water, they "preserve the dormant germs of disease."

Mr. W. I. Palmer, of Reading, at a great meeting, recently, said were each teetotaler in the United Kingdom to secure another, and the process were annually repeated, in four years the entire population would have become teetotalers.

At the Model Lodging-house, Clyde-street, Glasgow, great efforts are made to promote temperance amongst the hundreds who from week to week use the house. They frequently express a wish that the public-houses were closed as the temptations are too strong.

The secretary of the Licensed Victualler's Protection Society, London, has written to The Times against Sunday closing. He says the present Acts "have encouraged drinking in its most repugnant form and demoralised localities." This is contrary to the evidence of reliable returns.

Mr. Mundella, in opening a new temperance hall at Sheffield, said that owing to drinking habits our sailors had been largely superseded by Scandinavians, Norwegians, and Danes. Happily four-fifths of the English sailors are now steady men. The Board of Trade arrangements now enabled sailors to transmit money, and three millions had been sent home in the course of a few years.

FOREIGN.

The Pall Mall Gazette states Germany is reaping great profits from her trade in spirits, mostly of a vile kind, with Spain.

The Student Statesman is the name of a new inter-collegiate quarterly in the Prohibition interest to be issued in Ohio.

The W.C.T.U. is the largest society ever exclusively formed of and managed by women. The adult membership is about 150,000.

Dr. J. L. Down states, in Norway, when the spirit duty was removed insanity increased 50 per cent. and congenital idiocy 150 per cent.

Rev. J. Gelson Gregson says that in India it is common for natives to describe a Christian as "a man who eats pork and drinks strong drink."

A great representative temperance meeting is to be held in Abo, Finland, in the summer. A religious service in connection is to be held in the ancient cathedral of the town.

The Excise returns, in India, during the last few years have risen 36 per cent.; in Burmah, in three years, they have risen 74 per cent.; and in Assam they have trebled in ten years!

Rev. James Johnson, of Lagos, recently addressed a meeting of M.P.'s in the Conference Room of the House of Commons on the "enormities of the West African liquor-traffic."

In The National Temperance Advocate (U.S.), Rev. J. M. Van Buren says, "Shekar," Numb. xxiii. 7, translated in the Revised Version, "strong drink," should be "sweet drink."

The Republican party in New York Legislature has disappointed the Prohibitionists by its alleged indifference to temperance legislation, and sympathy with the liquor interest.

The temperance committee, at the Philadelphia yearly meeting of the Society of Friends, has issued an address to physicians, urging them to use their influence on the side of abstinence.

Sir Charles Warren recently expressed fear lest "the work of those noble missionaries, Moffat, Livingstone, Mackenzie, and others, may be overthrown by our English laws" on the drink-traffic.

"The Australian Army of Crusaders" is a temperance organisation founded in the colony many years since. Its highest award is a gold cross for sixteen-year-old abstainers, forty-two years of age and upwards.

Mr. J. B. Finch, head of the American branch of the Good Templars, has announced the week beginning May 22, as a week of prayer prior to the contemplated reunion meeting of the English and American branches

BLESSING AT CHELTENHAM.

The Mission and Conference held last year in this town was so encouraging that the Y.M.C.A. again invited Mr. Spencer Walton for a similar effort.

THE MISSION

commenced on March 24, and some remarkable cases were noted. In one family four members, long prayed for, were blessed, while in one house of business six were brought to Christ. Two large children's meetings were held, and many parents are rejoicing over answered prayer.

A special feature of the mission was the early prayer-meetings, conducted by young men and women engaged all day in places of business, commencing at 7.15 a.m., and largely attended.

THE CONFERENCE

commenced on Wednesday, the 13th instant, and the absence of Lord Cavan, who presided last year, was greatly regretted. Mr. Spencer Walton presided at the first meeting, at which Rev. J. Gelson Gregson followed with a very practical word on the subject of the day, The Christian Walk. We are called to walk with Christ as yoke fellows, and to be witnesses —of what? of his resurrection. The life of Christ should dwell in us, and so manifest itself abroad. When I saw pilgrims, he said, worshipping at the Holy Sepulchre at Jerusalem, I could not help exclaiming, "Oh! it is faith in a living Christ we need, not in a dead one!" Rev. J. J. Luce, of Gloucester, followed, speaking from Ps. cxvi. 9. Israel walked in the wilderness through unbelief. We are not called to walk in the dead wilderness, but in the land of the living. A life of walking with God implies Abraham's three steps: Heb. xi. 8, Separation; ver. 9, Sojourning or abiding; ver. 17, Sacrificing. Mr. Reader Harris followed, with some very practical remarks, showing how perfectly the Lord can deliver us, and how blessedly a Christian can walk in companionship with the Lord on the highway of holiness.

At the afternoon meeting Mr. John M'Auliffe gave a most interesting account of Bible-carriage work in England. Then Rev. Gelson Gregson severely condemned the inconsistencies of professing Christians in India, which are a greater hindrance to the Gospel than caste. If you see a man drunk in a bazaar you hear the natives say, "There goes a Christian." It is the witnessing of the life that must tell.

In the evening Mr. Gregson presided, and spoke from Gal. ii. 20. Mr. Harris followed, speaking from Matt. iv. 19, "Follow Me, and I will make you fishers of men."

Rev. Colin Campbell in closing said, Life, rest, and communion are necessary for service. We cannot work without life; we get it in Him. We cannot work without rest: our week begins with the Day of Rest, it does not end with it. We cannot work without Communion; we must go in before we go out.

THURSDAY.

The Christian Warfare was the subject chosen, and Mr. Walton, who occupied the chair, after a few remarks on Eph. vi. 11, 12, called upon the Rev. Colin Campbell. He commenced by saying that the Christian's life is full of paradoxes; it is a life of satisfaction ("I shall not want"), a life is rest ("He maketh me to lie down"), a life of conflict. Joshua before Jericho is a wonderful picture of the rest and fight of faith. We enter into rest and have to fight at once. How often after a great blessing we find a Jericho in front of us.

In the afternoon the claims of the Railway Mission, North Africa, and the Church Army were urged by Messrs. Spencer, Glenny, and Webster respectively. These accounts of mission work were listened to with intense interest by a large congregation, and several remained to consult the speakers at the close.

Numbers flocked into the Corn Exchange for the evening meeting, when The Christian's Resources were dwelt upon. In Lord Radstock's absence Mr. Walton presided, and opened with 2 Cor. ix. 8 as the keynote. He remarked that the outgood work. "Freely ye have received, freely give." Not merely coming together for three days' feast at Conference, but taking portions to the poor.

Mr. Campbell, in a forcible address, presented the inexhaustible riches in Christ Jesus. "All that I have is thine."

Rev. F. B. Meyer, with many illustrations, showed that great riches are laid at the feet of every Christian. We have an Amazon; like the banks of the river, let us not be anxious about the supply, but keep widening for more to flow through us. Rev. F. Webster gave the closing address, and, starting on "I am the Almighty God," dwelt upon the "I ams" of Scripture, from those presented during the life of Abraham to the life and experiences of St. Paul.

The third day was chiefly occupied by important missionary addresses from Revs. Hudson Taylor and F. B. Meyer, whose earnest and burning words will, we trust, produce results as practical as those accomplished in the leading cities of Scotland during the last few weeks.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Egremont, Cheshire.—The second anniversary of this Mission, conducted by Miss Owen and Miss Moore, was recently held. Amidst many difficulties, and through peculiar trials, the work has been carried on in simple faith in God, "whose faithfulness" has been proved "to reach unto the clouds." Special services were held at Egremont, and at Seacombe, conducted by Dr. W. Woods Smyth. Great blessings were bestowed on believers, and on the unsaved. D. H. H.

Mr. J. C. Rainey has been evangelising amongst the soldiers and marines at Stonehouse. It is an interesting work, as the men are at once so frank and yet so childlike—shy birds; but, when won, full of earnest purpose and desire. Much joy was felt as night after night many went into the inquiry-room and were led to Christ, and afterwards brought their comrades to share in the blessing. The work is being continued by Mr. Scroggie, of Dulverton. Mr. Rainey is now at Newton Abbott.

Mr. J. W. Moodie has just concluded a month's mission at Stockton-on-Tees, in connection with the Northcote-street Baptist Mission Chapel. A large number professedly accepted Christ, and the changed lives of not a few testify to the reality of the profession. One of these was an ex-publican, at whose bar many of the big sinners who have recently been saved at this chapel used to drink and gamble. For three years has his son earnestly requested prayer for his father, and great was the joy when he led him to the inquiry-room. Mr. Moodie's afternoon Bible-readings were much enjoyed by Christians. The last week was occupied by the delivery of lectures on the Tabernacle, illustrated by large diagrams. J. Corrie.

Crawley, Sussex.—A very successful evangelistic mission has just been held in connection with the Baptist Church. Considerable opposition was experienced in the open air during the first week, but gradually ceased towards the close. About thirty anxious inquirers were dealt with, many of whom it is believed have entered upon a new life. At an open testimony-meeting on Good Friday fourteen friends (not all recent converts) gave testimony to the saving grace of God, amongst the number being four ladies. The workers have also been stimulated to fresh consecration and effort. Mr. Walter Notman, of the Evangelisation Society, was the preacher, the pastor, Rev. J. McAuslane, assisting, and taking charge of the open-air work.

Rev. Hay Aitken.—A most blessed work of grace has been going on at St. Jude's, Mildmay-park, N., amongst us during the past week. Our beloved brother, Rev. William Hay Aitken, has revisited the scene of his former labours, and day after day has unfolded to us, with wonderful power, some of the mysteries of the kingdom of grace. The closing scenes of our Lord's life on earth have suggested his leading topics, and our hearts have, in turn, been melted into tenderness, and elevated into holy fellowship with our risen Lord as we listened to his words. On Thursday evening three hundred and twenty-six gathered around the Table of our Lord, and there remembered their Master's dying command. Mr. Aitken's discourse on Good Friday evening to the unconverted was very solemn, and not a few will thank God throughout eternity for the faithful words

Edinburgh.—Professor Henry Drummond has been visiting a penny "gaff," off Blackfriars-street, Edinburgh, on successive Sunday evenings. His simple, unconventional way of putting truth impressed as well as interested the company of loafers and tramps there assembled. The meetings were so successful that they are to be continued.

Ayr, N.B.—A month's united special services, conducted by Mr. and Mrs. Somerset Gardner, have been recently brought to a close here. The first meeting of the series was conducted by Dr. Moxey, at which he told, to a crowded audience in the Town Hall, the story of his conversion. For the first fortnight the meetings were held in two of the churches. In the afternoons Mrs. Gardner held meetings for women only. The second fortnight was devoted specially to the non-church going classes, the meetings being held in the James-street Hall, and Seaman's Bethel.

Rev. W. Haslam.—On Good Friday, Rev. Wm. Haslam concluded a very successful mission at Trinity Church, Buxton. We were much encouraged by the good attendance at the different gatherings. Mr. Haslam's morning addresses on "The Christian Life" were made very helpful to believers, and will no doubt prove a great stimulus to consistent witness for Christ in the daily life. Mrs. Haslam's meetings for women were also helpful to many. The whole effort has been characterised by a deep, quiet, healthy, solemnity. And though it has been unaccompanied by much outward demonstration, we are convinced there has been a very real work for God.

Buxton. Rev. Conrad S. Green.

Dundee.—A fortnight's mission has been conducted by Mr. Richard Hill, in Bonnethill Free Church, of which Rev. J. A. Simpson is pastor. The meetings had been much prayed about, and the good result of this was evident. Every evening there were two open-air meetings in the district, which led many to attend the meeting in the church. One encouraging feature was the number of young men who attended, several of whom have been converted, and others are seeking light. Mr. Hill's addresses, while very powerful, were simple and attractive, and the after-meetings, to which a very large proportion of the people remained, were most helpful and earnest. Mr. Hill conducted a subsequent series of meetings in the Y.M.C.A. Hall, which were characterised by the same earnestness and power. W. S.

Chicago.—The evangelistic services conducted by Messrs. Moody, Murphy, and Sankey in this city have been attended by immense audiences. Those which assembled in the Oakland-avenue rink to hear Mr. Moody were, it is believed, the largest he has ever addressed in Chicago. Having denounced the sins of lying, stealing, adultery, and hypocrisy in the severest terms, he urged all sinners to make restitution, as far as they could, and to turn to the Saviour. His earnest appeals bore abundant fruit, for the inquiry-rooms were crowded, and many professed the Lord Jesus. Union Park Congregational Church, where Messrs. Sankey and Bliss are doing a great work, was crowded every night. Mr. Murphy has been attracting large audiences to Farwell Hall, where he has been giving his message of love embodied in Gospel temperance, Messrs. Moody and Sankey also co-operating. Altogether, the city has been greatly moved. The Canadian evangelists, Messrs. Crossley and Hunter, have also been preaching at Grace Methodist Episcopal Church.

Rev. W. H. Aitken conducts a mission at Enniskillen, Ireland, April 24 to May 9.

Rev. W. Haslam is at St. Mary's Church, Hammersmith-road, West Kensington, April 23 to May 3.

MADAME LOPEZ RODRIGUEZ, with whose work at Figueras, Spain, our readers are familiar, hopes to be in London with her husband for change and rest by April 26. She will be glad if friends will aid the work in Spain by having little sales of cheap Spanish pottery in their drawing-rooms, and will herself gladly give some account of the Mission. All communications should be addressed, care of Colonel Baynes, 87, Elgin-crescent, Notting-hill, W.

EAST CENTRAL BRANCH.—A five days' mission, for which much prayer had been offered, was held at the Margate Y.M.C.A. during the Easter holidays, and conducted by nine or ten members of this Y.M.C A. (Metal Exchange, Whittington-avenue). Three services were held daily, the afternoon being reserved for the children. The evening meetings were well attended, and several professed to have received the Saviour. The members of the Y.M.C A. returned to town on Tuesday, but the meetings were sustained by local friends until the arrival of Mr. Henry Thorne who commenced his mission on

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, APRIL 24.—PSALM LXXVIII.

Delitzsch entitles this Psalm "The warning-mirror of history from Moses to David."

2.—I will open my mouth in a parable.—"It is not a mere recapitulation of important events in Israelitish history, but is intended to be viewed as a parable setting forth the conduct and experience of believers in all ages."—C. H. Spurgeon.

9.—The children of Ephraim, being armed, and carrying bows, turned back in the day of battle.—"It is only in a figurative sense that the Psalmist speaks of their flight in the day of battle, as indicating their apostasy in the day of trial, because in verse 57 the Ephraimites, who are here compared to bowmen, are compared to bows which will not do their work. The children of Ephraim are not in opposition to the rest of Israel, but they represent the whole, as they formed, during the period of the Judges, the leading tribe."—Hengstenberg. The apostasy of Israel during the period of the Judges might well be described by their leading tribe becoming cowardly bowmen, because Joseph their great ancestor was described in his father Jacob's blessing as one whose "bow abode in strength, and the arms of his hands were made strong by the hands of the mighty God of Jacob."

22.—Because they believed not in God, and trusted not in his salvation.—"This is the master sin, the crying sin. Like Jeroboam the son of Nebat, it sins and makes Israel to sin. In the text it appears as if all Israel's other sins were as nothing compared with this. From this let every unbeliever learn to tremble more at his unbelief than at anything else."—C. H. Spurgeon.

25.—Man did eat angels' food.—This is explained by the Chaldee, "food which came from the habitation of the angels."

60.—So that He forsook the Tabernacle of Shiloh.—See Jer. vii. 12—14.

68.—But chose the tribe of Judah.—"To give the nation another trial, this tribe was elected to supremacy.—C. H. S. This trial ended, so far as man was concerned, by the Jews casting out of the vineyard and slaying the Son of God; but God overruled their wicked action to carry out his purposes of love, and Jesus, whom they slew, became "the Lion of the tribe of Judah."

MONDAY, APRIL 25.—PSALM LXXIX.

"Psalm lxxviii. had traced the onward course of Israel till it was placed under the rule of David. In Ps. lxxix. the Temple is in ruins, the heathen in possession. We must look onward (lxxx) for the true Shepherd of Israel."—Kay. The question which critics discuss as to the particular invasion referred to in the Psalm is best answered by regarding the language as so directed by the Spirit of God as to be applicable to any or all of the invasions of Jewish history, including the greatest of all, that of the Romans.

9.—Help us, O God of our salvation, for the glory of thy name.—The true ground of God's intervention on behalf of his people is here pointed out. "The name of the Lord is a strong tower: the righteous runneth into it, and is safe" (Prov. xviii. 10). His name, too, is pleaded as the ground for pardon of sin in the close of the verse. Comp. Ps. xxv. 11, "For thy name's sake, O Lord, pardon mine iniquity; for it is great."

11.—Let the sighing of the prisoner come before Thee.—"We ought to add, 'as it once did in Egypt' (Exod. ii. 23—25). The people of God have the privilege in every trouble of looking to the early deliverances as pledges of those yet to come; and hence they possess a sure ground of confidence.

13.—To all generations—Literally, "To generation and generation." One passing on to the next the wonderful tales of a God's deliverance.

TUESDAY, APRIL 26.—PSALM LXXX.

Many indications in this Psalm point to its being the "expression of the painful feelings awakened in Judah's mind by the captivity of the ten tribes."—Hengstenberg. This view is given by the LXX., who entitle the Psalm "on account of the Assyrian." The mention of 2.—Before Ephraim, Benjamin, and Manasseh; stir up thy strength, and come and save us.—"These were the children of Rachel; who were placed together on the western side of the camp in the wilderness (Num. ii. 17—24), and had the Ark in front of them when marching. As the holiest was in the western end of the Tabernacle, it was nearest to these three tribes."—Kay.

3.—Cause thy face to shine; and we shall be saved.—"To be fulfilled only in Him who is the radiance of the Father's glory."—Ibid.

8.—Thou hast brought a vine out of Egypt.—Compare Isa. v. 1—7, xxvii. 2—6; Jer. ii. 21, xii. 10; Ezek. xv. 6, xvii. 6; Hosea x. 1. Compare also our Lord's applying the image of the vineyard to Israel (Matt. xxi. 33), and the vine to Himself (John xv. 1).

12.—Why hast Thou then broken down her hedges?—This question is answered in Isa. v. 5, where the Lord says, "I will take away the hedge thereof," &c., and that because, "What could have been done more in my vineyard that I have not done in it? Wherefore, when I looked that it should bring forth grapes, brought it forth wild grapes?"

17.—Let thy hand be upon the Man of thy right hand, upon the Son of Man whom Thou madest strong for Thyself.—"Messiah is 'the Man of God's right hand' (Ps. cx. 1); once Benoni, 'Son of my sorrow' (Gen. xxxv. 18), as 'the Man of Sorrows' (Isa. liii. 3), but afterwards 'exalted by the right hand of the Father to be a Prince and a Saviour' (Acts v. 31), the Branch (Zech. iii. 8), so becoming Benjamin, 'Son of my right hand.'"—A. R. Fausset.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 27.—PSALM LXXXI.

What the "solemn feast day" (ver. 3) was, in relation to which this Psalm was written, is much controverted. Hengstenberg and others take it to be the Passover, on account of the allusions to the Exodus; but the reference in ver. 3 to "the trumpet in the new moon" decides Kay, Canon Cook, and others in favour of the Feast of Trumpets, on the first day of the seventh month, which introduced the Day of Atonement and Feast of Tabernacles. It is by ancient Jewish custom the Psalm of the Feast of Trumpets (Num. xxix. 1).—Delitzsch.

5.—Where I heard a language that I understood not.—There is no "where" in the Hebrew; "language" is "lip," and "understood" is literally "knew." So Kay and Delizsch render it, "The lip of one I knew not I heard," and take it to refer to the voice of God speaking to Israel at Sinai. So R.V. in margin, "I heard the speech of one that I knew not." "The reference to that great manifestation (at Sinai) seems better suited to the context and introduces the following address of the Deity."—S.C.

10.—Open thy mouth wide, and I will fill it.—These words immediately follow after a quotation of the opening words of the law, "I am the Lord thy God that brought thee up from the land of Egypt," as though to show that God's command, "Thou shalt have no other gods before Me," involved not merely a command but also a promise that God would be the soul-satisfying portion of those who would have Him to be their God.

13.—Oh that my people had hearkened, &c.—R.V., following most commentators, renders this, "O that my people would hearken unto Me," and so to the end of the Psalm, "The voice of God again invites them by the Psalmist's mouth to trust Him and obey Him, it is not yet too late."—Kay.

THURSDAY, APRIL 28.—PSALM LXXXII.

1.—God standeth in the congregation of the mighty.—R.V. is to be preferred as more literal, "God standeth in the congregation of God." It is because they are "God's congregation" that those who are judges over them occupy God's place as administering God's justice. Just as in our own courts of law, judges have the royal arms over their seat of justice, and administer justice in the sovereign's name, so, as God was King in Israel, the people were subject to his laws, and the judges were his representatives to the people, and hence are themselves called "gods" at the end of the verse.

5.—They know not, neither will they under- flagrant act of injustice perpetrated upon Him, "They know not what they do." Walking on in darkness points to the moral atmosphere of this world, under the sway of "the rulers of the darkness of this world" (Eph. vi. 12).

6.—I have said, Ye are gods.—"By reference to this verse, Jesus proves to the Jews (John x. 34—36) that when He calls Himself the Son of God, He does not blaspheme God. If the law, so He argues, calls even those 'gods' who are officially invested with this name, by a declaration of the Divine Will, then it surely cannot be blasphemy if He calls Himself the Son of God who, with his whole life, is ministering to the accomplishment of a work to which the Father had already sanctified Him when He came into the world."—Delitzsch.

8.—For Thou shalt inherit all nations.—"Thou" is emphatic. "'Thou' in person, David and David's own son have been found wanting. They cannot 'ask' God to 'give them the heathen for their inheritance' (Ps. ii. 8). God's own Son must arise and substantiate the claim (Heb. i. 2)."—Kay.

FRIDAY, APRIL 29.—PSALM LXXXIII.

Nearly all ancient and most modern commentators think that this Psalm "refers to the war of Jehoshaphat against the allied Edomites, Moabites, Ammonites, and other nations (2 Chron. xx.)."—Hengstenberg. Mark that, in 2 Chron. xx. 14, Jahaziel, upon whom "came the Spirit of the Lord," was "of the sons of Asaph." This may (in the opinion of some) account for a Psalm, probably written by him, being attributed to Asaph.

6.—The tabernacles of Edom, &c.—Ten nations are specified; for "the children of Lot," with which the text closes, is but another name for the Moabites and Ammonites, who have been already mentioned; and who, according to 2 Chron. xx. 1, were the actual leaders of this confederacy. This confederacy of ten nations against Israel, "to cut them off from being a nation," has a prophetic aspect which has not escaped thoughtful readers. "The Psalm awaits a further fulfilment in the last days. It foreshadows the final gathering of the ten kings under Antichrist, to the battle of that great day of God Almighty" (Rev. xvi. 14).—Fausset.

9.—Do unto them as unto the Midianites.—This prayer was literally fulfilled. Compare 2 Chron. xx. 22, 23, with Judges vii. 22.

16.—That they may seek thy name, O Lord.—"Their calamities will be converted into blessings unless they persist in rebellion: in that case the curses denounced in the last verse must be accomplished."—S.C.

18.—That men may know.—R.V. is better (as there is no authority for "men") "that they may know."

SATURDAY, APRIL 30.—PSALM LXXXIV.

"This introduces another set of Psalms by the sons of Korah, all of them closely resembling those by the same authors in the preceding book. The division of the Psalm into three equal parts, each of four lines, is marked by 'Selah.'"—S.C.

1.—How amiable are thy tabernacles.—The Hebrew word for "amiable" (according to Hengstenberg) signifies always "beloved" rather than "lovely."

3.—Yea, the sparrow hath found an house … even thine altars.—"By the bird that has found a comfortable home on the place of the altars of Jehovah in the Temple court he means himself."—Delitzsch. The plural "altars," as well as "tabernacles," probably point to the two tabernacles which existed in David's reign. One at Gibeon, the other at Zion.

5.—In whose heart are the ways of them.—The meaning of this obscure expression is probably correctly given in R.V.: "In whose heart are the highways (to Zion)."

6.—The rain also filleth the pools.—"Yea, the early rain covers it with blessings."—Kay and R.V.

9.—Look upon the face of thine Anointed.—A suitable expression of the prayer of faith, pleading the merit of Christ before God.

10.—The Lord God is a sun and shield.—"A sun, radiating forth good; a shield, protecting

THE ROYAL JUBILEE, 1887.

THE JUBILEE PRESENTATION BOOK.

Victoria R.I. — HER LIFE AND REIGN.

By Dr. Macaulay, author of "Sea Pictures," "Luther Anecdotes," &c. With Five Portraits of the Queen and Sixty Engravings by E. Whymper and others. Small Quarto. 10s. 6d. cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges.

This book is intended to be more than a passing memorial of the Jubilee Year. It contains a complete sketch of the leading personal and public events in the life of the Queen. It also contains very careful sketches, written in Dr. Macaulay's popular style, of the religious, educational, social, and political progress during the last wonderful half-century. The sections devoted to these subjects, no less than those bearing more directly upon the personal life of the Queen, will be found to possess permanent value.

FOR YOUNG PEOPLE.

The great success of the larger Edition with Coloured Pictures (at 3s.) warrants the hope that in its cheaper form this very interesting story will find a much wider circle of readers amongst the youthful subjects of "Our Gracious Queen." Her Majesty graciously expressed her approval of this book in its larger form, and suggested several improvements.

The Book World.

Two Royal Lives, by Dorothea Roberts (T. Fisher Unwin), is a delightful compilation, revealing to the interested reader the past history of our own Princess Royal, and her Imperial husband the Crown Prince of Germany, with pleasing glimpses of their daily life in Berlin.

Dr. Macaulay has issued a revised edition of his excellent store of Gordon Anecdotes (Religious Tract Society), which present a view of the great Christian soldier about as complete as would a more detailed biography. Few lives known to fame lend themselves more to such a method of treatment, and this well-edited volume will help to enshrine Gordon's memory still more deeply in the hearts of his fellow-countrymen.

Moses: His Life and Times. By Professor George Rawlinson, M.A. 2s. 6d. Nisbet & Co. The title suggests at once a volume of considerable interest, nor is the expectant reader disappointed. At first one might wonder how so much could be written on the subject; but before twenty pages are read one feels how thoroughly the writer has dealt with it, going much into detail, but avoiding anything of a tedious character. It will prove a useful handbook for ministers, preachers, and teachers.

The Queen's Resolve. 2s. 6d. Home Words Office, 7, Paternoster-square. Rev. Chas. Bullock's "Jubilee Memorial," a book of absorbing interest, containing many leaves from Her Majesty's Journal, has already passed through three editions. In order to meet the desire of many of the clergy and others to present to day and Sunday scholars a copy of this book, it is now supplied in parcels of fifty, at 1s. each. A better plan for inculcating the lesson the book so well teaches of the value and beauty of true home life could scarcely be devised.

Two additions have lately been made to the goodly family of Text Books. The Little Ones' Text Book (2s. 6d. Whittingham & Co., Gracechurch-street) is brightened with coloured borders and illustrations appropriate to each month. There are spaces for names and notes, with an original stanza for each day, in keeping with the text. The Daily Text Book concerning the Lord Jesus Christ (3s. 6d. Andrew Stevenson, Edinburgh) is very chaste in style and neat in form. The daily passages, as the title implies, are "all about Jesus."

Scottish Nationality and other Papers. By the late Dr. John Ker. Andrew Elliot. This collection of stray papers from the pen of the deceased Scottish preacher, is not an unfitting memorial of his literary prowess, as the two volumes of Sermons, and the little work on the Psalms, are of his theological position and attainments. The topics appeal chiefly to northern readers, but all who admire the outbreathings of a rarely gifted mind, through a cultured and graceful style, will receive large enjoyment from the perusal of these pages.

The volume entitled The Papacy of Modern Times, containing the papers, addresses, and discussions at the recent Protestant Conference, in Glasgow, makes a comely and eminently readable book. Its value at the present crisis of our nation's history can scarcely be over-estimated. We hope every intelligent young man and woman will take steps to possess a copy, and will give it calm, serious study. If its contents were fairly mastered by the rising generation, the doom of Romanism in this land ought speedily to be sealed; how could it stand against such an overwhelming indictment? The volume is to be had from the office of the Scottish Protestant Alliance, 177, Buchanan-street, Glasgow. Price 5s.

The Mormon imposture may seem to some to be too remote in its action to arouse a very practical solicitude among British subjects. The author of a volume before us, The Mormon Puzzle, and How to Solve It (3s. Funk & Wagnalls) makes a statement, however, which proves our interest in the question to be very direct and immediate. "At the least calculation," he says, "there are three hundred Mormon missionaries constantly in the field, going up and down in the United States, and also the countries of Europe, and the isles of the sea." The writer, a Presbyterian minister in Maryland, claims to be a skilled and impartial authority on this burning question, and makes out a good case for his solution of the perplexing political, social, and religious puzzle that is now exciting the attention of our cousins across the sea. This solution, he thinks, must come through Christian colonisation and educa-

Exposition of the New Testament. By Matthew Henry. Jack & Co. We are glad to announce Vol. vii. of this well-known work, and heartily commend it to any who desire a handy and attractive edition of a useful commentary. It embraces Acts xxii. to end of Epistle to Romans.

Enquire within upon Everything. Houlston & Sons. This book has long played a useful part as a standard of reference on a vast variety of subjects of general interest in the household. A new edition (the seventy-fifth), revised and enlarged, has just been issued. This, making a total of one million copies, speaks loudly as to the value of the work.

Queen Victoria: Her Life and Reign. By T. F. Ball, with ninety-four illustrations. 2s. 6d. Partridge & Co. No loyal subject of our beloved Queen need be at a loss for a history of her reign, unless it is that he find a difficulty in selecting the one which is written the best. This volume seems to have stood the test of criticism, for the ninth edition is now before us, and certainly its contents justify a wide circulation.

Hymns and Thoughts in Verse. By E. A. W. Hunt & Co., 12, Paternoster-row. The thoughts that here find expression in beautiful and truly poetic language, are such as will give comfort and peace to the Christian at many a period of his chequered pilgrimage. The author is evidently familiar with the deeps as well as the heights of the spiritual life, and amongst the joys of the latter may be reckoned that of having ministered true consolation to brethren and sisters in those times of need which come to all. Every tried follower of Christ, we might almost say, every lover of Christ, will be grateful for the spirit which breathes throughout these lines. Of this spirit, the following verse from "Where is He?" will serve as a fit illustration:—

> I bow before Thee, Jesus! Son of God!
>   All that lost man can need, I see Thou art.
> And, while thy glory overspreads the world,
>   Behold, thy dwelling is a contrite heart.

We have heard a good deal lately of French aggression in the New Hebrides, but we fear our knowledge of these distant isles is very partial, though the literature of the subject is pretty extensive. An interesting addition to it, especially from the missionary point of view, is found in the venerable Dr. John Inglis's recently published work In the New Hebrides (6s. T. Nelson & Sons). Dr. Inglis confines his attention mainly to the little island of Aneityum, where he toiled as a missionary for nearly thirty years, and his story is one to make glad the heart of the ardent friend of foreign missions. There are chapters on "The Labour Traffic," and "The French in the New Hebrides," that should help to mould a correct public opinion at home on these matters. Brief biographical sketches are given of some workers who have been closely identified with the cause of South Sea Missions (including the late Mrs. Inglis), and these add variety to the volume, which we trust will be widely read.

The Channel Squadron. In this little booklet (½d. Shaw & Co.) Captain Dawson tells the story and applies the lesson of a terrible collision which resulted in the loss of many lives.

The Queen. 1d. Partridge & Co. From beginning to end, this narrative of personal incidents and scenes in the life of her Majesty, is full of interest, sometimes of a pathos exceedingly touching.

Asked and Given. 3d. C. E. T. Depôt, 9, Bridge-street, Westminster. Number 4 of the series of temperance stories with song is written by Edith M. Danglish, and is full of touching incident illustrative of a prodigal's return.

The Young Disciple. 3d. Wm. Hunt & Co. Confirmation candidates will find here some very helpful teaching, pointing to the true meaning of the ordinance, and to Him through whom alone they can hope to stand firm to the confession they make.

Dinner Hour Readings. 6d. Religious Tract Society. This packet of tracts, by Revs. P. B. Power and George Everard, contains some very profitable little talks, and will help to the attainment of the purpose of all, so well expressed in one, "Do good," and in the advice of a physician to a lady who was the victim of a thousand imaginary ailments, "Do good to somebody."

Lucifer's Oration to the Infernals on Religion and Morals. 1s. Ridgway, Piccadilly. The author takes us down to hell's "drear abodes," and treats us to an oration from Satan in blank verse. The poem is a vigorous statement of the various errors of Roman Catholicism, but it loses in point by the form in which it appears; it would be better in prose, and easier to read.

Uses and Abuses of Animals. By W. Smith. 2s. Jarrold & Sons. There is here much valuable information as to the treatment of animals, from which young people may learn both their duty towards these dumb creatures, of whom often they are so fond; and how best to secure the health and well-being of their pets. There are several good illustrations, and many pleasing

Is the Bible inspired of God? 1d. Haughton & Co., 10, Paternoster-row. Mr. Hastings's answer to this question is so conclusive, and withal so plain to the understanding of all, that it will no doubt play a great part in the battle with infidelity.

The Death of Aaron, and the Hidden Grave of Moses. Elliot Stock. The death of these two leaders of Israel is a subject that has appealed to the imagination of many. In this sermon, by Rev. James E. Walker, it is treated with great discrimination and deep feeling.

Words of Help for Christian Girls. ½d. Partridge & Co. In this little booklet, Rev. F. B. Meyer gives some cheering and helpful counsel in reference to such matters as dress, amusements, and books. The point of the whole may be summed up in the advice to be all for Christ.

The latest issue of the "Biographical Series" of tracts issued by the Religious Tract Society carries us back to the early days of childhood and to the hymns learnt at a mother's knee. This sketch of the life of Isaac Watts, who may well be called the children's poet, is a very valuable addition to the series.

Household Readings. 1s. Jarrold & Sons. This packet of twelve books contains good practical teaching on a variety of social subjects, and will do good service amongst young people, of both sexes, just entering upon life. The several stories are well told, and will exercise a healthy influence wherever read.

The Chart of the Holy Seed. 1s. S. Bagster & Sons. This chart will be found helpful by those who have begun to study the prophetic Scriptures, with a view to a better understanding of the signs of the times. Side by side with the historical representation of the rise, growth, and fall of nations, we see the development of the spirit of apostasy, both the old and new dispensations, and also the thin golden line, sometimes attenuated, almost to extinction, representing the chosen seed.

Peril and Adventure in Central Africa. This penny reprint (Religious Tract Society) of Bishop Hannington's letters to his nephews and nieces at home, affording the most delightfully humorous, not to say comic, glimpses of one side of missionary life in Africa, should have a warm welcome in the homes and Sunday-schools of our land.——The Life and Reign of Queen Victoria (same price and publishers). The story of family life in our royal household, as here told, is one the deep interest of which will be universally recognised, and for which as a nation we should be devoutly thankful.

Among the Churches.

⁂ We shall be happy to receive from our readers brief items of news for this page, respecting Christian work carried on, or progress achieved, in connection with any evangelical church at home or abroad.

BAPTIST.

Since the settlement of Rev. Wm. Donald at Kilmarnock, N.B., three years ago, the Church has quadrupled its membership.

Miss Davies, of the Rhondda Valley, has been holding revival services at Brecon, and also at Penkelly, Llechfaen, and other places in the neighbourhood.

A fortnight's mission at Abbotsham, Devon, conducted by Rev. W. Gillard and Mr. Williams, of Bideford, has resulted in the decision of forty persons for Christ.

A series of evangelistic services, recently held at Bridgnorth, and at the branch chapel, Chorley, brought many to hear the Gospel, who usually attend no place of worship, and some have professed to find the Saviour through these services.

The annual gathering of the members and supporters of Dunn's Institute Mission, which is connected with the Metropolitan Tabernacle Evangelists' Association, took place on Good Friday at the Institute, Newington-causeway, under the presidency of Mr. G. Goldston.

Rev. J. H. Shakespeare, and Mr. George White, of Norwich, in connection with the Norfolk Association, have been conducting evangelical services in the Independent Chapel at Diss, Norfolk. The various Nonconformists churches took part, and there was much blessing.

Mr. G. D. Shipley, who has held the pastorate of Breachwood-green village church, near Welwyn, for seven years, is now resigning, in order to devote himself more entirely to work in connection with his "Evangelistic Village Mission." On Good Friday thirteen believers were baptized. During Mr. Shipley's pastorate nearly one hundred and fifty new converts have been received into Church fellowship.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The Clergy Distress Fund now amounts to £21,420.

Nine mission stations have been established along the Panama Canal by the Church of England.

Sir John Henry Kennaway, Bart., M.P., has accepted the office of President of the Church Missionary Society.

The new English Church in Rome was opened on Easter Sunday, by the Bishops of Gibraltar and Carlisle.

Rev. G. W. Hanford, Vicar of St. Andrew's, Cardiff, is formulating a scheme for re-establishing services in the Welsh language.

A ladies' missionary prayer-meeting, lately started at Brighton, and presided over by Mrs. Hannington (the Bishop's widow), is attended by over one hundred ladies.

The special evening services in the nave of Westminster Abbey, for the present season, commenced on Sunday last, and will be continued till the last Sunday in July.

Several branches of the Church Association have passed a resolution approving the Bill now before the House of Commons to substitute deprivation for imprisonment in ecclesiastical cases.

Rev. John Hymers, D.D., rector of Brandesburton, East Yorkshire, has left to the Mayor and Corporation of Hull, an immense fortune "for the training of intelligence in whatever rank of life it may be found."

The Church Missionary Society hope to send an expedition under Bishop Parker to try and treat with King Mwanga for the release of Mr. Mackay. It is proposed to put a small steamer on Lake Victoria in aid of this project.

Rev. J. Bennett, D.D., commenced a course of lectures at Park Chapel, Chelsea, on Sunday morning last, the subject being "Inspiration." The subjects for the following Sunday mornings are—"Messianic Prophecy," "The Jew," "Christ and Scripture," "Miracles," "Difficulties, and How to Meet Them."

At the annual meeting of the Norfolk Book Society it was stated that free grants had been made during the year to nineteen reading-rooms, and that boxes from the Loan Library had been circulated amongst eighteen of the reading-rooms and workmen's clubs.

Of the seventeen stations formed in connection with the Niger Mission, nine are at present in operation. Seven have been abandoned for various reasons; but the Church Missionary Society has been unable to respond to twelve invitations from important centres to establish stations for want of suitable agents.

Rev. T. Neville Jones, of St. George's, Bolton, in an article in the Pastoral Aid Society's Magazine, says, "The Church has made very rapid progress here during the last twenty-five years." £145,000 has been contributed by people themselves for the erection and enlargement or improvement of churches; and whereas in 1860 but few schools existed, now every church has its own school, with ample accommodation for both day and Sunday scholars.

Rev. P. R. Fyson, of the C.M.S., writing from Tokio, says, "Stations have had more visible success than ever before. In the Osaka district alone there were over 140 baptisms last year; other missions, especially the American Presbyterian and Congregationalists, carry on work here on a far larger scale than our C.M.S., and have a much larger number of converts. They have such a large body of women workers, and Christianity is making rapid strides all through the country." Mr. Fyson is himself engaged on translational work,

PRESBYTERIAN.

A costermongers' barrow club is one of the "utilities" at Dr. Dykes's mission in Compton-place. About thirty barrows are already on the books.

In London-road Church, Glasgow, 147 members have been added during the past year, making a total of 950 since the induction of Rev. David Lowe.

Mr. William Thompson, of Glasgow, has been conducting a mission at Newcastle-on-Tyne. Much spiritual blessing was the result, many having professed decision for Christ.

Dr. Thain Davidson's last monthly sermon to young men was based on the shipwreck recorded in Acts xxvii. 29. The leading points in the discourse were reproduced in his address to young men at the Mansion House on Thursday evening.

The city mission, conducted by Mr. Robert M'Lean, in connection with the East Church, at Partick, Glasgow, has made good progress during the past year. The Bible-class has a membership of seventy-five, and prayer-meeting and evangelistic service on Sunday evenings are well attended.

CONGREGATIONAL.

At the annual meeting of the Yorkshire Congregational Union, it was unanimously resolved to form a Lay Preacher's Association for the county.

Young men attending a sermon class at Argyle Church (Rev. T. Stephens, pastor) are conducting evangelistic services in the village churches around Bath with good results.

Ebenezer Chapel, Chatham, of which Rev. J. R. Webster is pastor, has now 392 in church fellowship, with 1410 children in the Sunday-schools, 30 lay preachers, and 4 mission stations.

Buckland Church, Portsmouth (Rev. E. D. Braimbridge, pastor), has added 48 members during the year, making the total 468. The Sunday-school numbers 864, with 50 teachers, all of these and 77 scholars being members of the church. In the five different temperance branches there are about 600 members.

At the anniversary meeting of Bulmer Chapel, Sudbury, Mr. Jonathan Grubb, of the Society of Friends, gave a most touching account of "Life Scenes in Gaols, Workhouses, Hospitals, and Refuges," as witnessed by himself in London, Birmingham, Edinburgh, and other large places. The testimony to the power of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, lovingly offered even to the most depraved, was most encouraging and inspiring, while the indictment against alcohol was terrible and conclusive.

METHODIST.

Rev. Alexander M'Aulay and Mr. Sampson have safely returned from their West Indian tour of evangelism.

At Brimington, Chesterfield, a strong singing band goes through some part of the parish every Sunday evening, and is doing useful work in many ways.

Special services at Dodworth, Barnsley, conducted by Mr. W. Thorpe, of Nottingham, have been much blessed.

Two new society classes have been formed at Queensbury Chapel, Halifax, as a result of the recent mission.

The mission anniversary of the Cornish United Methodist Free Church Circuit, just held, has been a great success.

Twenty-five adults and thirty children have professed conversion as the result of evangelistic services held at Paddock, in the Lindley Circuit.

Rev. Mark Guy Pearse is by this time in Canada, whither he has gone, entirely at his own suggestion, to preach and lecture on behalf of his future work in connection with the London Mission.

At Beeston, Biggleswade, the gracious work begun by the recent revival is still going on. Cottage prayer-meetings have been started by the new converts, and at a recent love-feast over fifty spoke of the goodness of Jesus. Over eighty have signed the pledge since February 1.

The Free Methodists of Gateshead are now erecting a new chapel and school-room in Cuthbert-street, Bonsham, for the accommodation of the Mission and Sunday-school, conducted for fifteen years in an upper room which had become much too small and inconvenient for the work.

During a mission at Skelmersdale, Ormskirk, the mission preachers, Messrs. Champness and Walker, of Southport, spent much time in visiting the homes of the people and the public-houses. In all prayer was offered, and an invitation to the services given. About sixty persons decided for Christ.

The first year's work at the Clapton Park Tabernacle has been one of encouraging success. Many sinners have been converted at the services, and the band of hope has 140 members. The benevolent society has assisted needy families comprising 4500 persons, and 34,000 tracts have been distributed by the workers.

Rev. Thomas Cook, Connexional evangelist, has recently conducted a twelve days' mission at Altrincham. Nearly 400 persons passed through the inquiry-room, some of whom belonged to different Christian bodies, but over 200 have been brought out of the world.

The first report of the Rescue Home at Plymouth, which accommodates twenty-three girls and three officers, states that during the year 118 girls have passed through the Home, many to situations, where they are doing well.

At Lowestoft a Drunkards' and Public-house Brigade has been formed. A Lodging-house Brigade, which has been at work several weeks, is also doing much good The captain reports over a hundred conversions in nine weeks, and an increase of more than seventy soldiers.

New barracks are being erected at Fenny Stratford, in the Oxford district, and it is stated that, in the four months, since the Army commenced operations there. the fourteen lasses who form the depôt have spent 8000 hours in visiting, opened fourteen outposts, walked over 6000 miles, and made 40,000 visits to houses. "The result is 350 souls, and all this in a little town of 2000 inhabitants."

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

George Satterthwaite, late Principal of Flounders College, Yorks, is now holding public meetings in the Eastern Counties.

English Friends have sent out large libraries to the newly established meetings in Sydney, Auckland, Brisbane, Hobart Town, &c., where Quaker literature was very scarce.

The Friend's Quarterly Examiner is a periodical well worthy of support, "alike for erudition, research, and earnestness." Almost all current questions are carefully and Christianly discussed.

Anne Jackson, a minister newly settled in New Zealand, who has been travelling among the isolated families there, has been obliged, through illness, to suspend the prosecution of her greatly appreciated labours.

John A. Clark, a colonial minister, has been visiting Friend's Training College in Arkansas, and sends very favourable reports of the good work done. He was surprised and gratified at the extent and character of the education given.

Arthur Dixon, whose labours in Ulster have been so successful, has had to come home, to Yorkshire, for rest and the recruiting of his health. Many hopeful conversions have resulted from his meetings, and his absence will be much felt.

Henrietta Green, who has been three years in China, and doing useful missionary work at Hankow, is obliged to come home, on account of the failure of her health. Her medical and other work can ill be spared in that dark land. She is soon expected in England in company with Mr. and Mrs. Foster.

The relation of the Society to mission work has recently occupied the attention of London Friends, and the report of a committee set apart to consider how the mission meetings in Spitalfields, Bethnal-green, Peel, and Bunhill-fields, can be affiliated and rendered more useful to the Church, will be discussed at a special meeting in a few days.

The Friends in Ireland are thorough supporters of Bible circulation and Bible colportage there. An interesting report lies before us of the "Lisburn, Hillsborough, and Dunmurry branch of the Bible and Colportage Society of Ireland," of which James N. Richardson and Arthur Pim, both ministers, are president and treasurer. The first year's work of the branch has been both successful and hopeful.

"FALLEN ON SLEEP."

Rev. John Colwell, a Wesleyan minister, appointed only last year to the Highgate Circuit; well known also as a ready and popular writer.—Mr. and Mrs. George Woodcock, of Holbeck. They were both 78 years of age, had been for upwards of fifty years members of the Methodist Society, and for a long time class leaders, and both died in the same hour.—Mr. William Hardwick, for seventy-seven years connected with North-row Baptist Church, Warminster. He was superintendent of the Sunday-school for nearly sixty years.—Rev. Andrew Morton, late minister of St. James's United Presbyterian Church, Edinburgh.—Rev. Charles James Burton, Chancellor of the diocese of Carlisle, the vicar of Lydd, Kent, aged 96.—Mr. John Smith, of Padiham, who as a Wesleyan had held every office open to a layman.—Dr. Ray Palmer, of Newark, N.J., author of "My Faith looks up to Thee," and other well-known hymns.—Rev. W. Vaughan, for twenty-seven years minister at Darfield-street, Bradford.—Rev. Thomas Davis, of Newark, N.J., who, since 1848, has been pastor of several churches in that State.—Mr. John Ross, one of the original members of Jarvis-street Church, Toronto.—Rev. Thomas Cummin, of Newbury, for thirty-two years a minister of the Primitive Methodist Church.—Rev. Dr. Alfred Lee, Bishop of Delaware, the presiding bishop of United States.—Rev. J. R. Stock,

A DOOR OF HOPE

While the story of our girls and their temptations has lately been much under consideration, the result for good will be limited to the advantages practically secured.

We want to write most briefly and practically about our East-end Factory Girls. And truly our heart is enlarged over the perils and temptations, the privations and vicissitudes, and in many instances the grinding oppression of the labour of these poor girls, and more especially the Match Factory Girls of Bow and Stratford.

Their Sorrows.

We have learnt, while sitting at the tea-tables and work-benches of our Factory Girls' Institute, conducted at our Mission Premises in Devons-road, Bow, something of the hard conditions under which they labour, and some of the worse conditions under which they live.

The homes of most are such abodes of poverty that the little earnings are pledged days before they are taken, and of clothing they are obliged to minimise till decency is scarcely saved. Out of the two hundred girls from 14 years to 20 attending our Factory Girls' Institute, scarcely a girl was found to be wearing anything in the shape of flannel through the terrible frost in December last.

In many instances the girls from various causes are living in lodgings, and from their experiences during sickness or when without work many a harrowing story could be told. In other cases, from insufficient accommodation, there are the gravest perils inseparable from overcrowding; and the home, which ought to be a sanctuary for purity, lacks of necessity even the elements of chastity. We give a case.

Among the army of unemployed poor at the East-end during the late winter was the father of one of our factory girls, who, with his wife and family of two big boys and this girl of sixteen years, were driven to the greatest straits. Early in the year this girl was thrown out of work from trade depression, and after a while the landlord distrained and took everything in the place for the rent due. From this time all attempts to keep up the separation of the sexes was out of question, and when we rescued this girl, which we did as soon as we learnt the real state of things, the whole family had been sleeping together upon the floor for a fortnight upon a single borrowed bed.

Their Temptations.

Then there are the ever-abiding temptations of the streets. Turned loose at a comparatively early hour in the evening, they fall into loose company, and become the prey of the wicked. Hundreds of these girls are "treated" nightly by those who compass their destruction to the low Theatres and Music Halls in the East of London. We should say that no more terrible picture could be realised of Pandemonium short of its reality than the gallery of a low theatre crowded by these girls and their youthful seducers affords.

It seems but a common-place sequel to say we have girls in the Institute who have become mothers at a tender age, and that one, in telling her story to us, should add, "and there's many more of us in the same state."

FACTORY GIRLS, FROM LIFE.

To sink into the vortex of factory life is to most a condition out of which there is practically no return. It is one of the easiest things possible to lay down this paper, and say, "Why don't they go to service?" If there were present the conditions that would fit the girl for service, there would yet be an insurmountable barrier in the lack of clothes.

It is thus practically impossible, with large numbers of these poor girls, however much they may groan under their afflictive circumstances, and sigh for a purer atmosphere, to find any door of escape. What we want to provide is so that a virtuous girl, anxious to leave her factory life, and live in domestic service, and thus attain healthier and purer surroundings, and that a better and a brighter future may be opened to her, should be enabled to pursue her good desires.

We are aware how rough and boisterous their exterior and manners are in many instances, and we give a rough sketch from life of a couple whose features will not prepossess our readers. But we find that underneath the bluster and rags there are chords that vibrate to a loving touch and a gentle word.

Learning the more than usually distressing circumstances of two poor girls in January last, we were induced to take at least these two away from their dirt, rags, and misery, to Enfield, and find room for them at our Children's Holiday Home for a time, train them, and, if found suitable for service, clothe them, and send them to situations.

Calling upon a Christian gentleman a day or two after, we told briefly our experiences, and our burden and desire to save these girls by opening

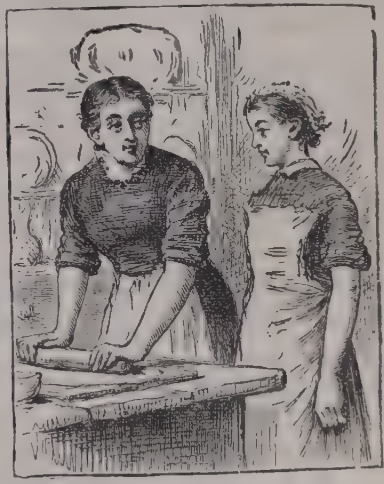
if our experiences of these trial cases proved satisfactory; and to help us in such a desirable line, he at once subscribed £15; with this good beginning we could but thank God and take courage, further adding to our numbers at Enfield four more, including the distressing case before mentioned, all we could possibly take. But the applications came from many more, and of course all pleading urgency, that we had the greatest difficulty to restrain ourselves within the limits of the inexorable—no more room.

A Great Contrast.

We have found, however, a month or two at Enfield to have quite a marked influence for good, not only upon their behaviour, but specially their features and general appearance. With the heavy fringe brushed back, and other little neatnesses inculcated, they were scarcely recognised as the same by those who had lost sight of them a few weeks. Three give us hope of their conversion of heart.



Hence we are much encouraged to pursue this good course, which, however, can only be done by our providing accommodation elsewhere.

Who will become sharers together with us of the joys of finding this accommodation, and saying, "Come" to the poor girls who are anxiously awaiting the result of these endeavours on their behalf?

We are pleased to say, contributions would be gladly received on our behalf by the Editors of "The Christian," or by

Mrs. Frank A. Bevan,

THE "BRIDGE OF HOPE" MISSION,

RATCLIFF HIGHWAY.

THE "Bridge of Hope" was opened eight years ago for the benefit of the Women, Young Girls, and Children in the vicinity of Ratcliff Highway. This neighbourhood has long been well known as a stronghold of vice, and notwithstanding the marked improvement consequent upon various religious and philanthropic efforts, it is still the resort of the most depraved among the lowest classes of society.

Added to this, during the last few years, owing to the depression in trade, large numbers of those who have failed in better employment have migrated with their families to the neighbourhoods of Ratcliff and Shadwell, in the hope of obtaining occupation, though it proves but precarious, in the Docks. The need of work among Women cannot be overestimated. On the one hand there is the open door of temptation to the young and inexperienced girl, and on the other hand, a life of hard and wearisome toil, repaid by starvation wages.

The work at the "Bridge of Hope" necessarily divides itself into two distinct branches: the Rescue of those who have already fallen, and the Preventive Work amongst the younger girls and children whose circumstances place them in peculiar danger.

The Ratcliff Highway Refuge is a DOOR OF ESCAPE for the fallen and tempted. It is open Night and Day, and no applicant is refused admittance as long as there is room to receive her.

From the Refuge the inmates are transferred to other Homes, restored to their friends, or placed in situations, as circumstances admit.

Since its opening, more than 1,800 have passed through the Refuge, a large proportion of whom have been permanently benefited, and are now leading honest and respectable lives. There is accommodation in the Refuge, and a little Hospital for Thirty women, and in the Night Shelter for Ten.

In the Training Home at Ashburton House there is room for Twenty-six Young Girls, and in the Branch Preventive Homes at Red Hill and Crouch End for Twenty-four more. The two latter Homes are superintended and partly supported by ladies living in the respective neighbourhoods, and the benefit of giving the East London children country air, and dissociating them from their old surroundings, is incalculable. From these Homes several have been Emigrated to the Colonies, and the others are trained for domestic service.

A considerable portion of Mission Work is also carried on out of doors. The Mothers' Meeting, Sewing Classes, Gospel Services, and Children's Meetings are proved in their results to be a great blessing to the poor around.

The Workers in the Mission are drawn from all sections of the Church of Christ, united in love to Him who came to seek and to save that which was lost.

There were no preliminary expenses when the Refuge was first opened. A small house was taken, six beds provided, and the work carried on as Funds came in.

Nearly four years ago an opportunity presented itself for taking the Lease of Three Small Houses for twenty-one years. These houses had borne a notorious character, even for Ratcliff Highway, and one was a Public-house which had been closed. These were transformed into the present Refuge, and the Dancing Saloon of the Public-house is now one of the brightest little Mission Halls in London.

For the adaptation, partial re-building, and furnishing of these Premises, £1,400 was required, and raised within twelve months. The Houses, when finished, were entered free of debt.

The need of aggressive work increases. It becomes yearly more important that the "Bridge of Hope," being such a CENTRE for RESCUE work in East London, should be placed on a permanent and more self-supporting basis.

The Council have been offered a piece of Land immediately adjoining the present Refuge on advantageous terms, and this, together with the premises we already occupy, we intend to take on a Lease of 99 years.

On this site it is proposed to build a Mission House for the Workers, reception of cases, and the transaction of the general business of the Mission; a Night Shelter, which for some time has been a greatly needed adjunct to the work, and a Laundry which will afford healthy employment for the women, and materially add to the Funds.

In order to the completion of these Plans, £4000 is required, of which sum more than £1700 has been raised, without any Public appeal being made. A gentleman has promised £100 conditionally upon nine others sending the same sum. Six friends have already responded.

With these new buildings we shall be enabled to give up the small and inconvenient houses which we now occupy. The yearly rents will be thus considerably lessened, and many difficulties connected with the present scattered households for Rescue cases will be obviated.

This Appeal is made on behalf of a work which for several years has been quietly and economically carried on, without any attempt to tabulate exaggerated results, but rather with the avoidance of anything that may appear sensational.

The Work is difficult beyond the conception of those not continuously living in the midst of it, or engaged in trying to raise those who have fallen to the lowest depths.

A House where the workers may live in ordinary comfort, and under sanitary conditions, has become an imperative necessity to the successful continuance of the work.

The yearly expenditure is about £2000. The Mission has never been in debt, and by far the larger portion of its income has come in small sums, with helpful expressions of prayerful sympathy.

At this juncture it is felt that to lay the needs of the Mission before the Christian public is legitimate and right.

The fact that last year 1738 Nights' Lodgings were given to destitute women and girls is in itself a sufficient plea for the Night Shelter, and surely the project for the Laundry must commend itself to all who would help those who try to help themselves.

It is a cause for deep thankfulness that there has been no need for frequent appeals for Funds. Hitherto the daily wants have been daily supplied, and God has owned and blessed the work.

The cry comes on behalf of the most outcast in outcast London, and we earnestly believe the sympathy and help so much needed will be forthcoming.

April, 1887.

PORTABLE 3/6 EDITION.

"'CRUDEN'S COMPLETE CONCORDANCE' in a well-bound and conveniently-sized volume issued at 3s. 6d., seems one of the marvels of modern book production. Messrs. Morgan & Scott's portable edition is of this class. There has been copious controversy on the merits and demerits of Cruden's great work; but we prefer to believe in Lowndes's opinion that 'Cruden's Concordance should be in every library.' It is uncommonly complete, the definitions of leading words remarkably accurate, and the references exceedingly correct."—Publishers' Circular, March 15, 1887.

"The best cheap edition of 'CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE' that we have seen is the one published by Morgan & Scott—a portable edition, clearly printed on good paper and well bound, unabridged, and with the proper names newly translated, all for 3s. 6d. Even the poorest Christian may now have a Concordance to help him in studying the Word of God with profit."—Christian Leader, March 17, 1887.

Mr. C. H. SPURGEON writes:—"Your Concordance at 3s. 6d. must be a great boon to ministers. We could very well dispense with a Concordance to the Apocrypha. As in all other respects it is an unabridged Cruden, I am greatly rejoiced to see it produced for so small a sum. May you sell tens of thousands!"

THE LATE MR. ROBERT SIMP

ALTHOUGH we know that in this dispensation death is the common lot of all of us, we seldom seem to be prepared for its approach. To many, the recent news of the sudden removal of Mr. Robert Simpson from the scene of a busy and blessed life, must have come as a painful shock; to Mr. Simpson himself, the dark-winged messenger could only bring the welcome call, "Come up higher."

The name of ROBERT SIMPSON, of Glasgow, the merchant-minister, has long been a household word among Christians and temperance reformers; not only in Glasgow, but throughout Scotland; and latterly also in London, where he laboured zealously during Mr. Moody's last visit. In the inquiry-rooms here he spoke personally to over four hundred inquirers, taking their names and addresses and sending to each a little book on the way of salvation. He was indefatigable in his attendance and work at Mr. Moody's meetings, and earned for himself, among the workers, the cognomen of the "war-horse."

Mr. Simpson fell asleep in Jesus on Sabbath evening April 3, after a few hours' illness. He died without ache or pain, and although his mental vision was clear to the last, he seemed unconscious that his labour for the Master below was completed. He died in harness as all true workers would like to die. His last week was a fair sample of the active Christian life he led for the long period of sixty years. The Sabbath previous to his death he had five engagements, which occupied him for thirteen hours, starting at 7.45 a.m. Four of these engagements were addressing public meetings, and the fifth, speaking about salvation to two young women with whom he had been dealing the night before. From Monday till Friday he was busy either speaking at on Christian work. On Friday, two days before his "translation," he took part in the funeral service of a "Mizpah Band" brother at Cathcart cemetery, where he spoke from the words "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord." His address to the large gathering of working men, including the grave-diggers, was felt to be delivered with great power. He remarked after the service, that he was determined to give the grave-diggers the Gospel, as they might not have had the chance of hearing it often. Strange to say it was in Cathcart, sixty years before, that the Spirit of God convicted him of sin at the age of nineteen, and led him to his Saviour.

On the evening of the same day he visited especially as it was the last Saturday afternoon practice (the time being now changed to Wednesday evening), for it was he who opened with prayer the first Saturday afternoon meeting, nearly five years ago. The evening was spent in the house of his son-in-law, Mr. R. Hunter Craig, where he partook of his last meal, the long conversation then engaged in being about the Lord's work. He left early, as he said, for an extra hour's rest to fit him for the following day's work, having engaged to preach in two different churches; but, unknown to him, his labour on earth was ended, and after a few hours' illness in bed, during which he said he felt delightful, he fell asleep in Jesus.

During the sixty years of his Christian career, the life of this merchant-minister was one of extraordinary, if not almost unequalled zeal. "He was always at it, and at it till the end." Working six days a week at his business (he was for sixty years a merchant in Glasgow), busy with Gospel temperance work in the week even-

At the age of twenty Mr. Simpson was elected an elder in Dr. Heugh's congregation, one of the largest and most influential United Presbyterian churches in Glasgow. He entered actively into Christian work, and carried on a very successful Sunday-school, at Parkhead, numbering over four hundred scholars. His zeal led him to start the then unpopular work of open-air preaching, and during his subsequent lifetime this mode of proclaiming the Gospel was a favourite one with him. When he had reached the age of thirty, being anxious to qualify himself as a minister, he entered the University, and attended the theological course of lectures delivered by the accomplished Dr. Morell Mackenzie, Dr. Wardlaw, and others. Completing his course, he was ordained pastor of a congregation in the east end of Glasgow, brought together through his own efforts. It still exists in a flourishing condition, under the pastorate of Rev. Robert Hood, and is known as Muslin-street Evangelical Union Church. Mr. Simpson afterwards laboured in different parts of the city, raising churches and resuscitating others.

Mr. Simpson made periodical tours through Scotland during his lifetime, successfully engaging in revival work. His first effort in this direction was in Alexandria in 1838, in conjunction with John Kirk, latterly Professor Kirk, his life-long friend, and others. The hearts of these young men were "filled with laughter"

Simpson afterwards shared in the work of the Kilsyth revival; in latter years he evangelised much in the North of Scotland, including the Orkney and Shetland islands, and although some places were hurriedly visited, the fruit was very abundant. In one place, in conjunction with Rev. George Moir, where their stay was only from Friday till Monday, the Congregational minister added thirty-four communicants to his roll, as the direct result of this short visit.

He had just returned, two weeks before his death, from six weeks' evangelistic labour in the Ross-shire village of Avoch and district, in conjunction with Rev. George Moir, of that place. He was very bright, relating incidents of that successful mission, and stating that he had spoken sixty times in public while away, besides dealing with anxious ones in their homes during each day. Last year when there was a remarkable outbreak of revival at Avoch, and again this year, he wrote short accounts of the work, which appeared in our columns, at the same time keeping up a voluminous correspondence with his many friends.

During his lifetime, Mr. Simpson was an advanced temperance reformer. Of late years he worked principally in connection with the Glasgow United Evangelistic Association, of which he was a Director. Between Mr. Moody's first and second visits to Glasgow he presided over the Gospel temperance work at James Morrison-street Hall, and at Mr. Moody's urgent request agreed to undertake the formation and management of the "Mizpah Band," in conjunction with Mr. R. Hunter Craig. This Band is now in its fifth year, and numbers over one thousand male members. It has just added a women's branch, two meetings of the latter having been constituted in Glasgow. Mr. Simpson also had the honour of starting the Mizpah Bands in London, Liverpool, and throughout Scotland. He was deservedly designated the Father of the Mizpah Band in Britain.

Though in terrible earnest as a Christian worker, he was full of quaint humour, and in the social circle was ever an attractive guest. He was very happy in his family relations, and during more than half a century of friendship it never suffered a single jar.

It was the desire of the family that his funeral should be a private one, but to meet many earnest solicitations they agreed to give a public welcome to friends, inviting them to meet in the large hall of the Christian Institute. Rev. Dr. Ferguson, of Montrose-street Evangelical Union Church, conducted the service, giving a very able impromptu résumé of Mr. Simp-

It is no secret that, especially in the latter part of his life, he has been in comfortable circumstances, so that he might have retired and done no work at all. But his rest was to work for Christ. That was his idea of otium cum dignitate—the dignity of using the time at his disposal for the work of an ambassador of Christ, when his affectionate sons found that they could dispense with his presence in their large commercial establishment. Our city bells toll and toll worthily at the death of magistrates who have borne the burden and heat of the day in the city's service; but if Glasgow bells did not toll at Robert Simpson's burial, heaven looked down with approval and owned that no worthier or more useful citizen than he has been carried to his grave for many a day.

The hall of the Institute was crowded to overflowing, while hundreds congregated outside. The profound respect shown by all grades of society, in the uncovered heads, while the cortège passed by, was remarked by many as a testimony of respect for the truths of the Gospel, which he had been so long known to advocate: a fulfilment of the Divine promise, "Them that honour Me I will honour." The members of the Mizpah Band showed their deep respect by sacrificing a day's work and a day's remuneration, and turning out in hundreds, and marching in front of the cortège. Fortunately the day was brilliant. On arrival at the Necropolis, hundreds of mourners were waiting. Rev. Dr. Ferguson having engaged in prayer, the Mizpah Choir sung over the grave one of their appropriate hymns, "The Roll Call," with the refrain—

> Let him sleep, calmly sleep,
> While the days and the years go by;
> Let him sleep, sweetly sleep,
> Till the call of the roll on high.

His mortal remains were lovingly laid to rest in the tomb, in the sure and certain hope of a coming day, when he, and the many souls God gave him for his hire, will together cast their crowns at the Redeemer's feet.

In Memoriam.

(From the League Journal.)

Sleep comes at last; sweet rest
  Comes like the falling leaf;
In ripe old age death's last bequest
  Brings honoured, full relief.
The runner in the race hath run—
The goal is reached, the wreath is won.

Strong swimmer, long against the stream
  Thy manly breast did'st bear.
'Twas hard, oftimes without a gleam
  Of light thy soul to cheer.
But He who walked on Galilee
Was with thee on the roughest sea.

Brave captain in the long, red line
  That stretches down from Calvary's Cross,
In many a battle thou did'st shine,
  Was oft repulsed and suffered loss;
But still the fight thou did'st maintain,
For loss for Christ to thee was gain.

Thy stately form we'll meet no more,
  Thy silken locks so white and fair;
Nor shall thy tongue, with burning zeal,
  God's wondrous love to man declare.
But souls are glad, and homes are blest,
Who found through thee soul-saving rest.

Thy coffined dust to earth is gone,
  Thyself into the heavens above;
No meaner theme thy soul engaged,
  Than Christ's unfathomable love.
Farewell; dear saint of God good-bye,
We'll meet, to part no more, on high.

We'll seek to follow in thy steps,
  And plead with men to pause and think;
We'll emulate thy scathing scorn
  Against that soul-destroying drink.
Oh, give us grace to plead and pray,
Till Scotland 's free from sin's dark sway.

THE TESTIMONY OF LIFE.

By Dr. JAMES CULROSS.

NUGGETS FROM PRESIDENTIAL ADDRESS TO THE BAPTIST UNION.

One of our Lord's pregnant sayings, which fascinates the more it is pondered, was this: "He that believeth on Me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater things than these shall he do; because I go unto My Father." I do not try to open out these words; but one thing they tell unmistakably—the might of faith; herein echoing all Scripture, which finds in faith the secret of the greatest deeds and noblest lives.

"Greater things than these" shall ye do. We are surprised. What can these "greater things" be? The Christian centuries have been answering. Apostolic history is the beginning of the answer. Endued with power from on high, the disciples go forth declaring the great redemptive facts, the life, death, and resurrection of the Son of God; they preach in his name repentance and the remission of sins; they assert his legal dominion over hearts and lives; their words kindle and burn; a mysterious power attends them; men bow heart-stricken and penitent before God, not by ones and twos, but "multitudes both of men and women." This went on, not over some little area, but far and wide. With the sword of the Spirit they smote great nations and overthrew mighty kings. In all this we see the world-conquering might of faith, and begin dimly to perceive how vast the sweep of our Lord's promise.

Into the great varied life of the world, in all its realms and interests, with its scheming and toiling, its philosophy and science and art, its questionings and doubts, its folly, vice, poverty, misery, unshaped fears, its pride, its self-righteousness, and its social abysses, suddenly yawning, where honesty, purity, and truth seem all but impossible—we are called to enter, as men redeemed with precious blood, who have experienced the new-fashioning power of Christ in the heart, and who know that He is able to save to the uttermost. And our special business is to do those "greater things" of which we have the beginnings in New Testament history—"to open men's eyes, to turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God."

The secret of power for this end is disclosed in the words, "Because I go unto my Father." This carried in it the coming of the Holy Spirit. Hence "the Acts of the Apostles" were in a most real sense the acts of the glorified Christ. Here is our power to-day—power as abiding and constant as any of the forces of nature. The praying heart knows it.

We must ourselves be the Bible to them; and our daily lives must be the sermon, preached all the week in our daily employments and our social intercourse. We must put our soul's truth, our soul's integrity, our soul's loyalty to God—in other words, our Christianity—into all we do: the builder into the wall he builds, the artisan into the work he turns out, the manufacturer into his cloth, the magistrate into his administration of justice, the Member of throughout. It ought to be no unsafe experiment for men to take their idea of Christ from what they see in the Christian Church.

From one quarter the cry comes up, not flippantly but from well-nigh breaking hearts, that they have stumbled into doubt against their seeking: Is there in very truth a living God, who is Light and Love? or is there only eternal matter and changeless law? And is the God of my childhood, to whom my mother taught me to say, "Our Father who art in heaven," an illusion that melts away before advancing light and science? Is heaven empty, and earth fatherless?

On another side, from some blasted spot in one of our great cities, where human beings are huddled together in poverty and squalor, and have all but abandoned hope whether in God or man, a voice rises piercingly: Have you aught to say about human brotherhood? Not a stone's cast from us is wealth, luxury, refinement, a civilisation such as the world never saw before, churches glorious to look at, but into which shame forbids us to venture: and here, in miserable dens, we are herding like wild beasts, the life crushed out of us by hunger and want. We were born into this state; so are our children; and we see no redemption from it: have you any help for us? Has your Gospel anything in it to meet our case? Or must we look to socialism and communism? There must be a terrible wrong somewhere: can you do anything to remedy it?

It is of no use to put the questioner off with rhetoric, or authority, or pious abuse, and calling of bad names. And yet charges are made that we do these very things. The pulpit, we are told, is Coward's Castle. The preacher is sometimes a twaddler; sometimes a mere exhibitor of old theological bones which he rattles before the congregation; sometimes a man who mistakes vociferation for power, as if the rumble of a cart laden with rubbish were mistaken for thunder; and sometimes an ancient Pagan with a gospel of good advice, the only Christian thing about him being his white neck-tie; but, whichever of these descriptions may fit him, he "sells his wind" for praise or for money, and in seven cases out of ten he gives the "go-by" to the real needs of humanity.

What the world's need demands of us is not more eloquent preaching, more passionate appeal, more subtle philosophising, more originality of thought, but the clear-voiced outspeaking of God's Word as it has of our own heart and conscience. Only let men come face to face with the facts of redemption, and with the thoughts of God as they are incarnated in Jesus Christ, with their self-evidencing light and power, and we may trust God for all the rest. This would bring the weary and heavy-laden round us, like thirsty travellers round a newly-discovered well. It would restore the Church's ancient power of prayer, of rebuking iniquity, of touching consciences, of winning hearts, and would develop among us a nobler form of life in the beauty of holiness. And it would "tell" most powerfully on all the interests of humanity.

What manner of men our ministers must be. Not bishop-made "priests," standing separate from their brethren, and thereby denying the universal priesthood of believers; nor men who know how to subscribe with a good conscience what they do not believe; nor hucksters of the Word, who have entered sacred office for a piece of bread, or with an eye to a golden stall, or as a profession in which they may distinguish themselves. In God's name, not men like these—but men who have seen Christ, and in whom the very Christ Himself is seen. Such men are not to be hired for money, nor "ordered" from any of our colleges—they are the "gift" of Christ. You may purchase graceless talent as you may purchase a fleet horse or a fine organ; but you cannot purchase the Holy Ghost.

I foresee for our Churches and for our rising ministry a period of fierce conflict, the battle gathering more and more round the person of our Saviour. But I foresee in that very conflict a glorious opportunity for the brave and true. He who believes on the Son of God shall conquer. We are not on the losing side, or (at best) retiring in good order. We are going on to victory, for it is written: "As truly as I live, all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord."

A MACEDONIAN CRY.—Miss Gardner, of the American Foreign Mission in India, gives a glimpse of the woe that settles down in all its desolation on the heart of a heathen:—"Coming back from the dear home land, with all its light and privilege, into this land of darkness and weariness, there comes over my soul the same old sense of the utter desolateness of its women that oppressed me all the time I was here before. The same old cries go up from weary hearts. Just a day or two ago, as one of our ladies passed by a house not far from her own, she heard the agonised cry, 'Oh where has he gone?—Oh! where has he gone?' It was the same old story. Somebody—some loved one, had been taken away, and the question 'where?' to which no answer came, left the heart comfortless and weary."

HOWARD-STREET MISSION.—We have now brought our free breakfasts on Sabbath mornings to a close, with several of the men who came for the free meal deciding for Christ. One of the number said that he had not been in a church or place of worship for twenty-five years till he had an invitation to the breakfast. He said he should thank God as long as he lived for the good he had received and the kindness shown to him. He came to one of the Sabbath evening services, stayed till the close and asked to be prayed for, after which he rose and testified his faith in Christ as his Saviour; he has attended the services several times since. We praise God for an outpouring of his Holy Spirit. During the past three weeks upwards of twenty men and women, young and old, have professed conversion, their lives testifying to God's power to save. The work of conviction is still going on in the hearts of many of the worst of characters.

THE WITNESSING CHURCH.—5.

A MISSIONARY SERMON

BY THE LATE REV. JOHN HARRIS, D.D.

"Ye are my witnesses, saith the Lord, that I am God."—ISA. xliii. 12.

WE have now seen that the Christian Church is, in its very constitution and design, a missionary Church—that its history illustrates this truth—and that all the original motives for enforcing it still exist in ever-accumulating force. What, then, can be more appropriate for us, fourthly, than to survey our condition, and estimate our wants, in relation to that design, to profit by that history, and to yield obedience to those motives.

(1) Now it must be obvious that whatever else may be necessary, a vivid and all-pervading apprehension of the original design of the Church is of the first importance. "But do not our various aggressive efforts show that we have already recovered that apprehension?" To a very limited extent. Until recently, the Christian Church was well nigh as local and stationary as the Jewish. And, as might be expected, considering the state of its piety, its movements, since it began to awake, have been fitful and uncertain, rather than healthy and regular. Are not its members, still, too content, generally speaking, with supporting a ministry for themselves alone; and thus resembling the local character of the Jewish Church? Is not the clear apprehension of its missionary design confined still to a small minority? Or, if felt by the many, felt only as a passing impulse—the result of an annual appeal, rather than as a personal obligation, and a universal principle? Or, if felt as a claim, felt as a duty to be easily devolved, and discharged by proxy?

Brethren, according to the theory of the Christian Church, every one of its members is a witness for Christ. In making you, Christian, a partaker of his grace, He not only intended your own salvation; He intended the salvation of others by your instrumentality. He intended that you should go forth from his presence as a witness, conveying to the world the cheering intelligence that He is still pardoning and saving sinners — sitting on his throne of mercy, waiting to be gracious to them, as He has been to you. He says to you, in effect, "You have given yourselves to Me, and I give you to the world—give you as my witnesses: look on yourselves as dedicated to this office—dedicated from eternity." Brethren, your very business, as Christians, your calling, is to propagate your religion. Is the Gospel-cause a warfare? Every Christian present is to regard himself as drawn to serve. Is there a great cause at issue between God and the world? Every Christian present is subpœnaed as a witness for God. Look on yourself in this light, and you will not, on the ground of disqualification, dismiss the subject from your mind. You will not think that a mere annual subscription buys you off from that great duty for which God has made you a Christian. "I cannot speak for Christ," said a martyr, on his way to the flames, "but I can die for Him." And, in the same martyr spirit, you will say, "I cannot speak for Christ, would that I could, the world shall hear of Him; my lips cannot speak for Him, but my life shall; my tongue cannot witness, but others can; and, if property can aid, and prayers prevail, they shall." Brethren, this is simply the sentiment of the first Christians: they regarded themselves individually as born to be witnesses for Christ—ordained to the office of diffusing the Gospel. Wherever they went, the language of Christ was still sounding in their ears—"Ye are my witnesses—go into all the world." Is it true that He has said this to us? To the ear of piety He is saying it still—to the eye of piety He is here this day to repeat it—do you not behold Him? Do you not hear Him saying it to you—and to you? Never till Christians feel thus individually addressed, will the Church fulfil its lofty design as a missionary witness for Christ to the world.

(2) A second requisite for this end is wisdom—wisdom to mark the characteristic features of the age, and the movements of the world—to appreciate the peculiar position of the Church in relation to them, and to apprehend and obey the indications of God concerning them. Never was there an age when the wide field of human misery was so accurately measured, and so fully explored, as the present; and, consequently, there never was a time when the obligation of the Christian Church to bring out all its Divine resources and remedies, was so binding and so great. Never was there an age when science attempted so much, and promised so largely—challenging the Gospel, in effect, to run with it a race of philanthropy; and, consequently, never was there a time when it so much concerned the Church to vindicate her character as to the true angel of mercy to the world; and to show that not by might, nor by power, but by the Spirit of God, the wounds of the world must be healed. Never was there a time when the elements of universal society exhibited so much restlessness and change—when the ancient superstitions exhibited so many signs of dotage and approaching death—when the field of the world was so extensively broken up, and ready for cultivation; broken up, not by the ordinary ploughshare of human instrumentality, but by strange convulsions from beneath, and by bolts from an invisible hand above; and, consequently, never was there a time which so loudly called on the Christian sower te go forth and sow. And never was there a land blessed with such peculiar facilities as Britain, for acting as a witness for Christ to the world. Why is it that the Gospel is at this time in trust with a people whose ships cover the seas—who are the merchants of the world? Has He who drew the boundaries of Judea with his own finger, who selected the precise spot for the Temple, who did everything for the Jewish Church with design, abandoned the Christian Church to accident? And if not —if He has placed the Gospel here with

Christians, ours is, indeed, a post of responsibility and of honour! On us have accumulated all the advantages of the past; and on us lies the great stress of the present. The world is waiting, breath-wisdom, to act in harmony with the high appointments of Providence—to seize the crisis which has come for blessing the world!

(3) A third requisite is Christian union. It is in vain to talk of the beneficial rivalry of sects. This only shows that we are so much accustomed to our divisions that we are beginning to see beauty in that which forms our deformity and disgrace. It is in vain to say that good is done notwithstanding our want of union. Is not the good which is effected abroad, effected by merging the disputes of home—in fact, by uniting? And would not a knowledge of our differences there be fatal to our usefulness? But the doctrine of Christ on the subject is decisive—"that they all may be one, that the world may believe that Thou hast sent Me." In other words, the visible union of Christians is essential to the conversion of the world. It is in vain to say that but little disagreement exists as yet among the Christian witnesses abroad; the seeds of discord only ask for time, and they will not fail to bear their proper fruit. But why have not the witnesses abroad differed? If they are right, must we not be wrong? And how is it that even we, on occasions like the present, can quit our denominational camps, and proclaim the truce of God? Both owing to the same means—by paying greater deference to the will of Christ than to the claims of party—by looking out on a world perishing—by erecting the Cross for its salvation, and rallying around it; in a word, by reverting practically to the design of the Church. Oh! who is not ready to say, at such times, "Would that the whole Church could be converted into a Christian Missionary Society, and meet in that capacity alone." The union wanted is not the union of one day in a year, but the union of every day—not merely a oneness of purpose, but, as far as practicable, a union of means for the attainment of that purpose. Here is one society calling aloud for agents, and pledging itself to raise the funds for their support; while another proclaims that it has agents ready, if it did but possess the means of sending them forth. Now the spirit we need is that which, on the first hearing of a statement like this, should induce the parties to sympathise in each other's wants, and, by uniting their respective means to supply them. Brethren, the same obligation which binds the Church to act as a witness for God at all, binds it to do so in the best manner, and to the full amount of its resources. While division is making that which is already little, still less—not only would a spirit of union, by combining our resources, economise and increase them, but by evincing a greater concern for the will of Christ than for the success of party, it would invite it—it would humbly challenge his blessing, for it would be a substantial fulfilment of his prayer.

CAIRO HOME FOR FREED WOMEN.—Mr. C. H. Allen, secretary of the British and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society, 55, New Broad-street, E.C., writes to us:—Your readers some time since forwarded to you some contributions for the Cairo Home for Freed Women Slaves. Sir Evelyn Baring has addressed a letter to me respecting the work of the Home. This work is so satisfactory that the Anti-Slavery Society has gladly responded to Sir E. Baring's request that it should endeavour to raise the necessary funds to carry on the work. The Society affords the necessary office room free of charge, and the necessary clerical labour will be cheerfully and gratuitously given by myself and EVANGELICO-POPISH HYMNS.

It is the fashion for evangelical Christians to quote the poems and sing the hymns of the pervert to Rome, F. W. Faber. There are some of his hymns that seem pious, and a beauty of language is characteristic of them generally. But it should be remembered that they were written for the express purpose of leading the people of England into the Romish net. We are not prepared to say that all of them teach error, but we do say that there are very few of them which are not marked by an unwholesome sentimentality.

The following verses are sent to us in a letter from a friend. She had copied them from a selection of poems called "Heavenward," given her by an evangelical lady who would be horrified at spreading Popish or other error:—

> But God is never so far off
>   As even to be near;
> He is within; our spirit is
>   The home He holds most dear.
> To think of Him as by our side
>   Is almost as untrue
> As to remove his throne beyond
>   Those skies of starry blue.

This is artificial, sentimental, unscriptural. It is most true that the body of the believer is the temple of the Holy Ghost; but it is not untrue to think of God as by our side, for Enech walked with God. God promised Moses, "Certainly I will be with thee." And if it be replied that that was in the old dispensation, and that Jesus said of the Holy Spirit, "He dwelleth with you, and shall be in you," we reply again, that the Apostle to the Hebrews contrasts the law, which made nothing perfect, with the "better hope by the which we draw nigh unto God." He says, "Having liberty to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus...and having a Great Priest over the house of God, let us draw near." And James exhorts, "Draw nigh to God, and God will draw nigh to you." It is, therefore, a misrepresentation of the truth to say,—

> But God is never so far off
>   As even to be near.

And it is equally forsaking "the form of sound words," which the Apostle bade us "hold fast," to say,—

> To think of Him as by our side
>   Is almost as untrue
> As to remove his throne beyond
>   Those skies of starry blue.

Was John, our brother and companion in tribulation, and in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ, untrue, when he was in spirit on the Lord's day, and saw One sitting upon the throne, and the Lamb in the midst of the throne, and the seven lamps of fire before the throne, which are the seven Spirits of God? Did the Revealer mock his beloved disciple with visions which were untrue? Does the Apostle deceive us with vain words when he says, "Set your affection on things above, where Christ is sitting on the right hand of God"? Or is "The Truth" "untrue" when He says, "To him that overcometh will I give to sit down with Me upon my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne"? M.

THE BETHSHAN (Faith-healing Home), late of 161, Islington, which for the last four years has been under the superintendence of Miss Gibbs, has

"THE SPIRITS IN PRISON."

Dr. Campbell, the Ven. Archdeacon of Dromore, contributes to the current number of The Churchman (E. Stock, 1s) a remarkable and suggestive paper on "The Spirits in Prison" (1 Pet. iii. 18). He opposes the supposition that these were human souls either in the body or out of it; but thinks that they are the angels mentioned by the same Apostle in his 2nd Epistle as having sinned, and by Jude, as having left their first estate; and that their sin is described in Gen. vi. 1—4: "The sons of God saw the daughters of men that they were fair, and took them wives of all which they chose." The original word, here translated "preached," does not mean "evangelised," but simply "announced," or "proclaimed." It might be good or evil tidings; and the Archdeacon suggests that it was "something consonant to their peculiar sin, and His triumph over their effort to ruin the human race."

We think, with the Archdeacon, that "the sons of God" of Gen. vi. were angels. This harmonises 2 Pet. ii. 4, 5 and Jude 6–8 with the passage in Gen., and accounts for the two Apostles' reference to "other flesh," and to Sodom and Gomorrha. But we should like to see the writer's explanation of 1 Pet. iv. 6, which says that "good tidings were preached to the dead," and here evidently men not angels are referred to.

The Archdeacon insists that the preaching did not take place between the Lord's death and his resurrection, but after his resurrection. So far as we have light on this mysterious passage, we think otherwise. The context seems to require that the words, "being put to death as to the flesh, but quickened as to the spirit, in which also He went and preached [announced] to the spirits in prison," should be understood to mean that while as to his flesh He was dead, in his spirit He was quickened, and that in his spirit He went and made a proclamation to the spirits in prison.

For this whole passage is introduced to encourage the persecuted saints to bear their sufferings patiently, as the Lord Jesus had told them: "Fear not them which kill the body, and after that have no more that they can do." When they suffer in the flesh unto its death, the spirit is set free. And Christ Himself is the great instance and illustration of this: for when He suffered for sins, the Just for the unjust, that He might bring us to God, He was "put to death, indeed, as to flesh, but quickened as to spirit, in which also He went and preached to the spirits in prison." And the Apostle exhorts the scattered and persecuted saints, "Forasmuch then as Christ hath suffered as to the flesh, arm yourselves likewise with the same mind. For he that hath suffered in the flesh hath ceased from sin, that he no longer should live the rest of his time in the flesh to the lusts of men, but to the will of God."

Martyrs first die inwardly, or they would never endure the dungeon, the rack, the wheel, the stake. They first let that mind be in them which was also in Christ Jesus; who, being in the form of God, humbled Himself and became obedient to the death, even of the cross; they arm themselves with that mind, thus putting on the whole armour of God, and are enabled to stand against the wiles of the devil.

> "Oh, let us learn this lesson of the cross,

The main purpose of the Archdeacon's paper, however, is to show that the sin of the angels was not a mere lapse under the power of temptation, but the result of a deeply-laid plan of Satan. For this we must refer our readers to the article itself.

THE "JAMES HANNINGTON."—Rev. R. P. Ashe writes:—Five years ago Bishop Hannington appealed to the British public for a boat to be used upon the Victoria Nyanza, and a small sailing boat was obtained; but, being built of wood, she already shows signs of decay. It is felt now more than ever, since the murder of Bishop Hannington and the detention of Mr. Mackay, that some more effectual means of communication with Uganda is necessary, and it is purposed to procure a boat built of steel. The construction and carriage up country would cost £2000, and the question of putting steam into her will depend entirely upon the amount subscribed. She would be appropriately named the James Hannington, as a memorial of the devoted man who laid down his life for the cause. Letters addressed to Major-

ROUSING THE SCOTTISH CHURCHES.

BY THE WAY.

In the exercise of faith we do not seem to have entertained me with a description of one such journey of 1500 miles down a great river, swollen by rains, accomplished in fifteen days.

Perhaps nothing in all the reminiscences furnished by these far-travelled friends astonished me more than Mr. Taylor's statement that in one part of Southern China azaleas are so plentiful that they are commonly used for fuel. In the summer the land seems like one huge parterre of roses, and the gorgeous tints of autumn have a glory all their own. I have thought it worth while to incorporate in my narrative these subsidiary paragraphs, so that any young friends whose hearts are drawn out towards China as a life spher, emay not think they are to leave God's fair handiwork behind

INVERNESS.

With the exception of a day's flying visit to the Highland Capital by Mr. Radcliffe, some twenty-six years ago, none of the evangelists had ever before spoken in Inverness. Thanks, however, to the heartiness and energy of Rev. G. Robson, of the United Presbyterian Church, a good interest was awakened among the more earnest Christians of the town. Within an hour of their arrival, after a long day of tedious travel from Dundee, the evangelists were confronting a not very numerous company of Christians, on the Saturday evening. Next day was a very busy one. At an early and well-attended meeting of workers, Mr. Radcliffe spoke on the power of prayer, in its bearing upon missions. All three evangelists occupied church pulpits at the morning service. A united meeting was held in the Music Hall in the afternoon. Mr. Taylor and Mr. Radcliffe preached again in the evening, and a final gathering, at which all were again present, was held in the Music Hall, after the ordinary services were concluded. On Monday three meetings were held in the Music Hall; not large ones by any means for a town of 20,000 inhabitants, and with such a transcendent theme.

Inverness men of business seem, on the whole, to be much cumbered with the cares that cluster around the counter and the desk; and the prevalent depression of trade, if I am well informed, has there reached deeper depths than in most places. Mr. Radcliffe was very plain in expressing his conviction at one of the towns—I forget which—that it is Britain's neglect of the Lord's business that has caused Him to visit us with commercial stagnation and bankruptcy. In his first address at Inverness, Mr. Taylor hazarded the assertion that Britain exercises far less influence in the councils of Europe than she did twenty years ago, his implication being, of course, that such a result is only the Nemesis that ever follows a dereliction of paramount duty, and a neglect of privilege. There was not much said in the course of this Scotch tour about the infamy that clings to our national skirts by reason of our opium poisonings in China, our brandy poisonings in India and Africa, and our gin and whisky poisonings at home, but now and then these were alluded to with great effect. Unless these national sins are confessed and repented of and put away, how can we expect to see the tide of national prosperity flowing in again?

The line of teaching and exhortation employed here was largely the same as at other places, and I may not repeat what has been already recorded. Mr. Radcliffe made a strong point in one of his Music Hall addresses, by quoting the utterances of three illustrious Scotchmen, David Livingstone, Dr. Duff, and Dr. Somerville. In a previous report I referred to his extracts from a speech by the veteran Dr. Duff, warning his countrymen that spiritual barrenness at home would follow a selfish expenditure of the Church's resources, a result which Mr. Radcliffe thinks has come to pass. The intense longing of Livingstone's heart for the evangelisation of Africa, and his resolves of fresh consecration to that cause, near the tragic close of his devoted life, were cited and pressed home. So were the eloquent words of the Free Church Moderator, spoken at Edinburgh last May. As Dr. Somerville recently visited Inverness, this reference to his missionary plea must have carried all the greater sanction. Both Mr. Radcliffe and Mr. Taylor spoke of the unwearied devotion to the cause of the heathen shown by another Scotchman, William C. Burns, one of the pioneer missionaries to China. Mr. Taylor confessed that it was association with Mr. Burns, in his own early China days, that had given the bent to his own thoughts and efforts, which resulted in the formation of the Inland Mission.

ARE THEY WORTH SAVING?

This question Mr. Taylor asked, and proceeded to answer, on one occasion. The Lord's people in these Christian lands, he had said, need to go has only two. We have been reading "go ye" as "stay ye," and, while we have been staying at home, something else has been staying: the Lord has been staying the windows of heaven. How is it that with the Bible so cheap, infidelity is on the increase? The reason is simple: we have forgotten our lesson. This is not mere pleasantry, added Mr. Taylor, but an attempt to impress your memories with an important lesson.

Then came the question, "Are these people worth saving?" There are some who believe that the converts in India or China are rice Christians: that they accept the Gospel for what they can get out of it. Well, he would not deny that there are some of that kind, just as some people at home make a profession of religion in order to benefit their business. But from an acquaintanceship of thirty years with Chinese Christians he could say that a great many of them are of a very different stamp indeed. Then he recited the truly harrowing details of persecution that some whom he knew had undergone—how they had been stripped of friends, of property, of home; had been most cruelly beaten and tormented nigh unto death, and yet they had stood as firm as any of the martyrs in the arena at Rome. They took joyfully the spoiling of their goods and the torturing of their bodies rather than deny the name of Jesus, or promise not to proclaim his blessed saving Gospel. On one occasion when he thought he would try and give some of these persecuted ones some comfort, they were filled with such a strange joy that they could rather have comforted him. Some very striking instances Mr. Taylor also gave, of the power of God through his Gospel, in enabling Chinese to break through the chains of evil habit.

The presentation of the claims of the foreign field in such a thorough-going way has never before been undertaken, I presume, in these far northern parts. The people were evidently impressed with it, and, if the pastors will go on to water the seed that has been sown, there may yet be a harvest of missionary workers from among the dwellers in Clachnacuddin. I know of some young ladies, at least, of social standing, who were in deep and frequent consultation with Mr. Taylor on the point.

ABERDEEN.

Here the tour was ended by some of the most encouraging meetings of the series. Mr. Clarke left Inverness a day before his companions, in order to conduct the earlier meetings arranged by the Aberdeen friends. His recent mission in the Granite City, recorded in these columns at the time, was a remarkably successful one, and the young evangelist has found a warm place in many hearts in that district. The missionary meetings were held in the spacious Music Hall and the rooms of the adjoining Y.M.C.A. Mr. Sherriffs, the wise and devoted secretary of the Association is a man like-minded with his brother secretaries, Mr. Oatts, of Glasgow, Mr. Lamont, of Greenock, and Mr. Smith, of Dundee: each of these friends, besides other earnest workers, did their utmost to ensure the success of the missionary campaign. Mr. Sherriffs has two large Bible-classes for young men, and these have for some time been a training ground for consecration to missionary work. Perhaps more of Mr. Taylor's time was taken up at Aberdeen than at any other place in private consultations with those who meditate giving their lives to work among the heathen. The late mission by Mr. Clarke has, no doubt, supplied some of these, or brought them up to the point of decision.

Mr. Taylor was able at one of the meetings to arouse much interest by telling the story of George Duncan, who was working in Aberdeen as an artisan many years ago, but who went out to China as one of the earliest workers of the Inland Mission. He was a man of singular faith and resolution, and the narrative by Mr. Taylor of his early difficulties, and the way in which the Lord honoured his simple trust, was

WHAT THE CHURCHES MIGHT DO.

All through this tour, Mr. Taylor's main object, in recounting the goodness of God in the past, seemed to be to stir up the Churches to launch out into the deep, and seize the present favourable opportunity. He was able to say, for the encouragement of the Churches in Scotland, that the Wesleyan Methodists are awaking to the fact that a few ordained and highly trained men will never meet the overwhelming needs of the heathen. They have therefore resolved to form an auxiliary mission, to send out lay workers who can strengthen the hands of the regular missionaries and assist them in their work.

On the other hand, it was somewhat discouraging to hear Mr. Taylor tell about a letter he had received when in Inverness from a man in one of the cities previously visited. He wrote: "Why do you go about making such pitiable appeals for more missionaries when there are men who have been trying for years to get out to the foreign field and nobody will have them?" The writer went on to state that he had applied to a society to be accepted for Africa and the answer was, "No funds." With this for a text, Mr. Taylor sought to strengthen the faith of the Churches by telling something of God's goodness to the Inland Mission in the supply of funds. He told how some friends who knew of their desire to send out 100 workers this year had met, and had promised large amounts towards the expenses; already they had promises that would meet the cost of eighty or ninety passages. Has not God all resources at command? Even if the silver and gold were to be exhausted, could He not cause new gold mines to be discovered? Nay, could He not create them if it were necessary? But how many of the Lord's stewards are depriving themselves of a blessing by withholding their means from his service! The Inland Mission receives many precious letters from donors, telling of the personal blessing they have experienced by having fellowship in this work. There are ample means in the hands of the Churches for the evangelisation of the world. The four friends who lately gave £500 each for the Inland Mission would probably have pledged themselves for similar amounts for work in India, if they saw it could be well applied. Let the Churches tithe their money, and tithe their members, and tithe their ministers, for the foreign field, and they will see what an immense return God will make in giving them prosperity at home.

Mr. Taylor's words seem to have excited notice, as a letter, in one of the local papers on the morning of the last day of the meetings, stated that his views were quite subversive of the usual ideas held respecting the preparation needed for foreign mission work. The afternoon meeting, in the Y.M.C.A. Institute, was therefore devoted by Mr. Taylor to a further exposition of his experiences on this point. He said he would not like to see any branch of missionary work carried on by inferior agents. But it was a question of adaptation. In some cases there might be years of preparation needed, especially in the case of medical missions. At the same time he emphasised what he urged at Greenock, that much of the work can be done perfectly well by persons of limited education and culture. Some very valuable things he said too about waiting patiently on God for the removal of obstacles that seem to bar the way; and about the faithful discharge of present duty during the waiting time. Incidents from his own experience were told that deeply interested the hearers, showing how God cares for those who put their trust in Him. To my mind this calm and well-weighed afternoon talk of Mr. Taylor's, every word of it born of rich experience, must have been one of the most fruitful of the whole campaign. In twenty minutes after its conclusion, he was in the train en route for Cheltenham, to address a conference there next day.

The evening meetings in the Music Hall were attended by immense crowds, and were times of real spiritual impressiveness and blessing. On the second evening a very solemn after-meeting was conducted by Mr. Clarke; from the way the people waited to the last and the presentation of it. At the closing service of all, about 3000 persons were present. Mr. Radcliffe spoke with much power, putting not a few of the older friends in mind of the stirring and fruitful days of 1859 and 1860. His rousing fervour was most marked, and his tender touching appeals told irresistibly on the vast audience. Mr. Clarke had a grand opportunity for preaching Christ, and urging to decision. And he was equal to the occasion—the presence and power of the Spirit were manifest. Many stood up in response to his manly and fervid appeals. I can state on the authority of one of the leading workers that the visit of these three honoured servants of God has greatly refreshed hundreds in Aberdeen, and led many to seek a more truly consecrated Christian life, whether to be spent in home or foreign service. The motto of these reports, as of the meetings themselves, has been "The Gospel for the World." I cherish the belief that in after days it may be found that the truths so plentifully sown, and harrowed in, so to speak, by the entreaties of the three evangelists, have solidly helped to win

THE WORLD FOR CHRIST.

OUR BOYS' REST, NEW ZEALAND.

From Auckland, New Zealand, we have the first report of this institution, founded in 1855. The story of its origin, of the difficulties created by the disorderly conduct of some lads, who were for a time admitted to the Strangers' Rest, out of which grew a sympathy for these untrained and neglected ones, and a spirit of waiting upon the Lord for them, which resulted at length in the opening of this Home, is one that will excite widespread interest and deep thankfulness of heart.

It is a story which, in some of its features, is familiar enough to many Christian workers. But the wild and reckless behaviour of these lads, and the evil habits born of a long course of unrestrained license, were subdued by the patient love and winning wisdom with which they were met by those whose hearts had been moved with compassion towards them. The flowers that were given them spoke of purity, and the hymns they once ridiculed made a deep impression upon their hearts, so that the good work has been fairly begun. A missionary, Mr. John Moss, has been appointed to superintend the work and the amusements of the boys in the Home, which is in Little Queen-street, Auckland, New Zealand.

EMIGRATION TO CANADA.—About fifty children from Dr. Stephenson's Homes at Bolton and London sailed from Liverpool last week, for the Home at Hamilton, Ontario, previous to their being drafted to their various situations. There is said to be a great demand for these boys.

THE DORE GALLERY.—In celebration of the Queen's Jubilee, Messrs. Fairless and Beeforth propose to open the Doré Gallery, 35, New Bond-street, W., on the evenings in June next, between the hours of five and eight, for the free admission of teachers of Sunday-schools, and members of Young Men's Christian Associations. It is requested that clergymen, ministers, superintendents, or secretaries representing those desirous of making use of this occasion, will make application to Messrs. Fairless and Beeforth by letter, before May 21 (enclosing stamped envelope for reply), stating the number of admissions required, that they may be enabled to make the most convenient arrangements, and issue the necessary form of free admission.

THE RIVIERA.—Mr. Thomas Hanbury, who has been distributing the money sent by Mrs. Butler for the sufferers in the Riviera earthquake, says that a portion of the money subscribed by poor and working people has been bestowed upon the survivors at Bajardo, which Mr. Charles Butler visited a few hours after the earthquake, and who have suffered greatly. Mr. Hanbury is having an inscription put up in a prominent place in the town as follows:—"An offering of sympathy to the people of Bajardo from English labouring classes." The Mayor of San Remo and the Relief Committee are delighted with this idea, and say it will have an excellent effect. Huts are being put up

MR. WOOD, OF BRIGHTON.

We called our readers' attention to the fanaticism and worse of Mr. Wood, late of Australia, and his deluded followers at Brighton, who have adopted the title, "The Army of the Lord." We also noted the charge brought against Messrs. Barker and Hughes before the magistrates, who refused to decide it, and committed the accused to the Quarter Sessions, admitting them to bail. They were charged with wilfully and maliciously disturbing a certain meeting of persons assembled for religious worship at the Assembly Hall, Edward-street, on January 4 last. The case was tried on Monday, 18th inst., before the Recorder, Mr. P. C. Gates, and occupied a very long day. The prosecution declined to call Mr. Wood as a witness, evidently because his cross-examination would have damaged an already bad case. The whole question was whether this could be regarded as a religious meeting. If it were, the disturbance, which was not disputed, would render the accused liable to punishment. The report of the trial occupies six columns of The Sussex Daily News. The following was the result:—

> The Recorder briefly summed up, remarking that the question for the jury to consider was whether or not this congregation assembled was entitled to the protection of the Act of Parliament as a congregation assembled for the purpose of religious worship. He directed the attention of the jury to the admissions made in cross-examination, and pointing to the strong observations made with reference to the men not having earned an honest sixpence by any legitimate occupation for some time past, and to their living in the common house supported out of the proceeds of the collections at the hall, commented on the fact that the man whom the statements chiefly concerned had not been called. In conclusion, he again pointed out that if the jury really felt the body were properly assembled for religious worship, they were entitled to the protection of the Act of Parliament, but if they felt that they were not so assembled, then they were not entitled to that protection.
> The jury immediately returned a verdict of Not Guilty; and the announcement was received with loud applause.
> The prisoners, on leaving the dock, were heartily congratulated by their friends, and were received outside the Court by a large and enthusiastic crowd which had assembled.

No other verdict could have been returned, and we know not whether to wonder more at the temerity of the "Army" in carrying such a case into Court, or the weakness of the magistrates in not dismissing it summarily, instead of wasting time and money by committing two respectable men on such a charge.

As it is it will cost them £100. We shall be pleased to receive and remit contributions. All Christians are deeply interested in the disclosures made, and are benefited by the discrediting of a disgraceful travesty of religion.

CARRUBBER'S CLOSE MISSION, EDINBURGH.—At the sixth annual meeting of the Gospel Temperance Branch, held last week, it was stated that the year's work had been very encouraging. The secret of success was traced to the prominence given, in addition to abstinence teaching, to Gospel effort and the high tone of the singing. The work is exercising a very large educative influence in the community.

THE STAINER HOMES.—The Homes for Deaf and Dumb Children, founded by Rev. Wm. Stainer in 1875, have lately been considerably enlarged and are now in a very satisfactory condition for carrying on their important work. There are six Homes in different parts of London. At Pentonville-road there are separate houses for infants, and boys and girls above twelve years of age. The former is fitted with kindergarten and other appliances for the amusement and instruction of the little ones. For the boys and girls there is regular and competent instruction in various useful occupations, large work-rooms being set apart for this purpose. There is also a Home for boys under twelve in Bethnal-green, and another at Camberwell and Paddington for girls and little boys. The importance of a special training for children so afflicted will not be denied, but this is impossible, except through the agency of such Homes as these, for the children of the poor. HOME OF INDUSTRY.

WORKERS' MEETING.

A very tender feeling pervaded the upper room on the evening of the 20th. All were charmed with the blithesome band of girls. Mrs. Merry's cheery talk of praise concerning the faithfulness of our God awoke deep echoes in many a heart. Three sister voices called forth prayer for Africa, and three asked for prayer, who are in training at the Home of Industry for work in India. A Jew led in praise for several of his brethren who had come into the marvellous light.

The address was given by Mr. Robert Brown, and proved a most profitable exposition. Thanks were offered for the good voyage granted to the Jubilee party. The farewell of about one hundred girls will be May 18. The furnishing of the new Home is about to be commenced.—Yours in the Master's service,

Annie Macpherson.

MR. BROWN ON CHRISTIAN PERFECTION.

There are four aspects of sanctification in the Word of God:—(1) The procuring cause, the precious Blood of Christ; (2) The instrumental cause, Faith; (3) The efficient cause, the Holy Spirit; (4) The medium, the Divine Word. Sanctification, in its primary meaning, is setting apart for holy purposes. First, we have the precious Blood (see Heb. xiii. 12, Heb. x. 14, Heb. x. 10, 1 Cor. i. 30, 31), "Christ Jesus... made unto us...sanctification. We can only get it in Christ. What is the channel? Faith: "sanctified by faith" (Acts xxvi. 17, 18); "purifying their hearts by faith" (Acts xv. 9).

The efficient cause is the Divine Spirit. It is He who begins, continues, and ends; "sanctified ...by the Spirit of God" (1 Cor. vi. 11). The Spirit gives power and fortifies against sin. The medium through which this comes is the Divine Word. What are all the delusions of the present day caused by, but through the departure from the Divine Word? "...clean, through the Word" (John xv. 1—3); "...washing of water by the Word" (Eph. v. 26). What, then, is practical sanctification? The extension of the dominion of the new creation of God in us by the power of the indwelling Spirit, through faith in the Divine Word.

Let us see what perfection is not. It is not the destruction of the old man in us. It is not the eradication of sin. Those who say so, deny original sin in us. "...In me dwelleth no good thing," &c. (Rom. vii. 18). "That which is born of the flesh is flesh" (John iii. 6), and nothing else. You cannot make anything more of it. It is not to be amended or improved; it is to be put under our feet. "The thought of foolishness is sin" (Prov. xxiv. 9). Have you had a foolish thought? Then you have sinned. Hear what the beloved Apostle who lay on the bosom of the Saviour says (1 John i. 8). There are two words used for sin: one means "missing the mark," the other, "lawlessness." The least conceivable departure from the will of God is sin. This is your mark; have you hit it? That Holy One never pleased Himself (Rom. xv. 3). Do you ever do anything to please yourself? Then you have missed the mark. "I do always those things that please Him" (John viii. 29). Have you done so? If not, you have missed the mark.

How is this perfection to be attained? "After ye have suffered a while, make you perfect, stablish, strengthen, settle you" (1 Peter v. 10, 11). The more you suffer, the nearer you get to the Lord. The louder Satan roars, the nearer it will bring you to the Master. You have the grace of God at the back of you to help you. "Perfect." The word here is to make fully ready, equipped for the Christian course. It is not the end, but the beginning. This word "perfect" is applied to faith—"perfect that which is lacking in your faith." It is applied be complete and ready for the work God has for you to do.

"Stablish, strengthen, settle you." When is a man stablished? When the soul knows that it has a perfect standing in Christ. We hear what we have in title, now we seek to get it in possession. "Strengthen." What does this mean?" To get out of Christ what we want at the time. Some want a stock of grace in themselves, but we are commanded to be "strong in the Lord." We cannot be strengthened until we are stablished. When Solomon had finished the Temple he set up two pillars, Jachin and Boaz —"establishment" and "strength." Jachin was first. Some young Christians want to set up Boaz first; they want a stock of strength in them selves and then down comes their pillar.

The disciples are in a storm on the Lake of Galilee. Jesus comes to them walking on the water—they are afraid—Jesus says, "Be not afraid." Peter says, "Lord, if it be Thou, bid me come unto Thee on the water." Here is a soul that casts itself on the word of God. Peter performed impossibilities without knowing it. Now Satan comes—there is a roar of the wind—Peter takes his eyes off Jesus, down he goes, but he cries, Lord save me," &c. Little faith can walk on the water, but great faith will continue walking on it.

CONVENTION IN NORWICH.

This Convention was held on Wednesday and Thursday, last week. The morning meeting on the first day was under the presidency of Canon Patteson, who was well supported on the platform. Rev. Thomas Richardson, of St. Benet's, Stepney, in opening out the subject of the morning, "The death of Christ is the life of his people," said that from Genesis to Revelation the whole Bible is full of two subjects, "death" and "life." Life can only be had through death, and death is therefore the prelude to life. The most successful preachers have always been those, who like the olden prophets, dwelt much on the character and reality of sin, from which there is no deliverance but by the death of Christ.

Rev. H. E. Brooke expressed great satisfaction that the subjects selected for consideration were fundamental truths. Every wise architect, if he desired to add to the superstructure, would first of all see to the necessary strengthening of the foundation. He amplified the proposition before them by reading it, "The death of Christ is the death of his people, and the life of Christ is the life of his people." Lord Radstock briefly dwelt on that aspect of death in which our Lord is set forth as the seed-corn dying and bringing forth much fruit.

Space will not permit us to do more than briefly notice the succeeding meetings. At that on Wednesday evening (Mr. Geo. M. Chamberlin, chairman) the "thesis" was "Complete salvation is secured by a believing appropriation of the Lord Jesus Christ," which was spoken to by Revs. E. A. Stuart, C. Graham, and F. H. White. On Thursday morning, Rev. W. A. McAllan, chairman, the speakers were the Revs. F. H. White and E. A. Stuart, and the subject "The gracious work of the Holy Spirit commences with conviction of sin." The concluding meeting of the series was on Thursday evening. Revs. H. E. Brooke and Chas. Graham spoke on "Believers grow in the grace and knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ by the indwelling of the Holy Spirit." There were afternoon Bible-readings in the Lecture Hall of the Young Men's Christian Association—that on Wednesday conducted by Rev. E. A. Stuart, and that on Thursday by Rev. Thomas Richardson.

The whole of the meetings were well attended, and the presence and power of the Great Master of Assemblies were manifestly felt.

PRAYER FOR THE BLIND.—The thirty-first anniversary of the day of special prayer and

LONDON AGED CHRISTIAN SOCIETY.

One hundred and sixty-seven aged poor, between sixty-five and ninety years of age are now on the pension list of this Society, which was established upwards of sixty years ago for the purpose of granting pensions of ten shillings per month to the decidedly Christian poor residing in London and the suburbs. During that period over eleven hundred have been recipients of its bounty.

The present number of pensioners being much larger than at any previous time, and many applicants anxiously waiting to be admitted, a large increase in the public support is greatly needed to maintain and extend the usefulness of this truly Christian charity. Information will be gladly supplied by the secretary, Mr Robert Johnstone, 32, Sackville-street, Piccadilly, W.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

A license has been refused for the sale of drink on the Great Eastern steamship, now exhibited at Liverpool.

At the temperance mission conducted at Barnstaple by Mr. G. F. Cook, over two hundred pledges were taken.

At their recent annual visit to the Mansion House the Bluecoat Boys, by an increasingly large majority chose for their beverages temperance drinks.

It is proposed to enact that, with certain exceptions, the payment of farm labourers and farm servants in beer, cider, or other intoxicants, shall be punishable by fine.

Joyful News invites all who desire that strong drink shall not be sold on the Sabbath-day to make Friday, May 13, a day for special prayer respecting the closing of public-houses on the Sunday.

Between 1884—86 Messrs. Allsopp's sale of beer was reduced by 174,000 barrels, and that of Messrs. Bass by 60.500 barrels, while there was a total decrease of 663,039 barrels, with a fall in duty paid of £207,199. The number of licensed brewers in this country has decreased from 21,223 in 1881 to 14,166 last year.

FOREIGN.

Over one hundred colleges in the United States have started Prohibition clubs.

The Spirit Monopoly Bill, passed by the Swiss Councils last year, is to be submitted to the vote of the people.

On his return from a recent lecturing tour in Kansas and Iowa, Dr. Talmage said he had seen only one intoxicated man in those States.

The American Women's Christian Temperance Union has just published 500,000 temperance tracts in the German and Scandinavian languages.

Mr. John Sugden, describing a recent visit to a Presbyterian Sunday-school in Egypt, says he found "all the teachers and staff were thorough abstainers, one of them stating they considered it a part of their religion."

Oscar Lenz, the great African traveller, recently told The Times correspondent at Vienna that by avoiding intoxicants and careful observance of sanitary rules, he had "passed unscathed through regions infected with marsh fevers, ague, and small-pox."

In Michigan the Prohibition amendment to the constitution was probably lost by three or four thousand votes, though this will not be fully conceded until the official count. The rural districts voted largely in favour, but the cities turned the scale by still larger majorities against it.

At a recent meeting of temperance Christians in Washington City, U.S.A., it was decided to plead with the American and European Governments, to interfere in behalf of Africa's salvation, from the utter ruin of its tawny millions by the 10.800 000 gallons (!) of alcoholic poison annually sent into the Dark Continent from the illuminated countries of Christendom.

The temperance question in New South Wales looks well for support, as several members of the new Parliament have been returned on the Local Option ticket; but it will not come forward very early, it being thought advisable to wait till the Royal Commission, which was appointed to inquire into the drink question, has presented its report, which will be soon, although some time will be required for its consideration.

Twelve extraordinary services, conducted by leaders from different denominations of Protestant Christians, were, at the invitation of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, held in the M. E. Church, Washington, U.S.A., on March 29. Each service lasted half an hour, and consisted of prayer for the Divine influence upon the Liquor Prohibition Vote in all of the cities and towns in the State of Michigan, on Monday, April 4. Every citizen of Michigan was at liberty to cast his ballot on that occasion on the issue, "Shall the manufacture of intoxicating beverages be prohibited throughout the State?"

BAPTISTS IN GERMANY.—The Wahrheitszeitung gives a report of the position of the Baptist churches in a great many towns in Germany. In most places quiet progress is being made. From Cologne, Frankfort,

MR. SPURGEON'S COLLEGE.

For the twenty-third time the ministers who have been educated in Mr. Spurgeon's College met last week in conference. On Monday evening an inaugural service was held at Stoke Newington Baptist Church. Pastor C. H. SPURGEON addressed the audience upon "The glories of Christ, and the privilege of being engaged in his service." The general state of the College was also dwelt upon. The total sum expended during the year was close on £7000; there are at the present time 549 brethren who occupy the position of pastors, missionaries, or evangelists. The report just issued contains a valuable article by the President showing, "What we aim at in the Pastor's College," and is worthy of a careful perusal by all members of the denomination. The labours also of the College evangelists have been largely appreciated and blessed by God. In some form or other men from the College are now found labouring in almost every part of the world.

The Conference re-assembled on Tuesday morning, when the President delivered his much-looked-for address. Preceded by an hour's prayer, marked by intense fervour and directness, the words uttered on the present occasion were characterised by all their accustomed force and fire, and seemed to penetrate every heart. Taking as a theme the great responsibility of the Christian ministry, especially as represented by Paul in the capacity of a steward (1 Cor. iv. 1, 2), the "requirement" of faithfulness was incisively dwelt upon. By men-pleasing, by indolence, by speculating with the Master's goods, by conniving at evil, by speaking slightingly of his Lord, or neglecting any of his family—in these and many other aspects was the unfaithful and unworthy steward viridly depicted. On the other hand, said Mr. Spurgeon, nothing would be a greater stimulus to faithfulness than a constant sense of the imminence of the Saviour's approach. Let God's workers never forget the tremendous doom awaiting the unfaithful servant as revealed at the end (Luke xii.).

In the evening, instead of the usual soiree at the Stockwell Orphanage, it was deemed most profitable to hold a devotional meeting, having as its object "the advancement of the spiritual life." Pointing to the pulpit at his back the beloved President told the well-known story of his conversion to God while listening to a Gospel sermon from a Primitive Methodist preacher. He had found it one of the greatest helps toward advancement in grace to look back to that memorable day, and would have all ministers keep well in view the time of their espousals to Christ. A most stirring address was given by Pastor A. G. BROWN from the words of our Saviour, "I am the resurrection and the life," dwelling mainly on the doctrine as being a present experience in the consciousnes of each believer, and as furnishing a stimulus to carry the Gospel to the vilest. Let no one suppose there was a besetting sin that could not be conquered. He once went into a wretched hovel in the East-end, and spoke of Jesus' power to save. Some time afterwards he was informed by the parent that himself and whole family were brought to the Saviour through that passing word. "God is able."

Pastor MACKAY, of Peckham, warned his brethren against professionalism in the ministry, urging as an antidote a deep sense of the greatness of the work, the keeping of the heart full of the Word of God, and the maintenance of fellowship with Christ. Pastor W. WILLIAMS, of Lambeth, said our essential usefulness would be largely promoted by our likeness to Christ, to attain which, every means must be used. His definition of consecration would be that of the Holy Ghost taking possession of every faculty and educating our entire manhood.

Wednesday morning was another fruitful season. The first hour was spent in prayer; then the "old man eloquent," Mr. George Rogers, now in his eighty-eighth year, addressed the members of the Conference on the power of the Gospel. He had lived upon it and now felt he could die upon it. It was idle to deny that a wide departure from the faith had taken place of late years, and that ministers had become less evangelical and more intellectual. He urged preaching sermons rather than reading them, for the Holy Spirit was our helper, and loved to be trusted as such by the preacher.

Agreeing with all that Mr. Rogers had said, a confirmatory word was given by Mr. A. H. BAYNES, Secretary of the Baptist Missionary Society, who gave one or two instances of the power of the Gospel as seen in India. "I have walked on iron spikes and travelled far away to bathe in sacred waters in hope of finding peace for my troubled conscience," said a poor old native Indian, "but never obtained rest until I heard one of your missionaries speak of Jesus; then I found rest for my soul, and praise Him continually." Following this was an excellent paper by Pastor ROBERTS, of Ashford, on "Wholeheartedness in our Ministry." When a lad he attended a Bible-class, conducted by a lady, but her efforts were fruitless. Attending some meetings, however, at Lord Radstock's she gained such a blessing as led her to whole-hearted consecration to God. The result was soon manifest, and seven members of the class were brought to Christ. Pastor FRANK WHITE gave an admirable address on "The Anointing of the Holy Spirit," and showed what is implied in "fitness for the Master's use."

The subscribers' meeting was held in the evening, presided over by Mr. W. G. SPICER. Mr. SPURGEON described the origin and design of the College, and said that 150 new churches had been formed during its existence. When at Mentone a gentleman called on him in great distress and anguish, about his soul. The following year he called again, saying he had found perfect peace through hearing the old Gospel preached by one of the students. Pastor MAPLESTON gave a brief account of his work among the Telegoos, hundreds of whom had turned to God. Most blessed did he find the work to be.

Pastors WAINWRIGHT, of Manchester, and MCKINNEY, of the United States, both spoke of what God had done through them in the preaching of Christ crucified. Rev. H. LOVELL, of Bromley, told of a Tabernacle colporteur labouring near by who gathered a congregation by speaking in a cottage, and has built a chapel. Rev. W. STOTT, of St. John's-wood, said that the mission services conducted by Messrs. Fullerton and Smith at his chapel had resulted in hundreds of conversions. The supper that followed was a grand success, no less a sum than £2500 being contributed for the purposes of the College.

Thursday morning's sitting was one of deepest interest and blessing. After a few earnest prayers, Pastor JAMES SPURGEON delivered a most helpful address from Isa. lxiii. 9. Pastor EWING read a paper on "Enthusiasm in our Ministry," to be promoted and sustained by a vivid realisation of the character of the Master, the nature of the work, the shortness of our life, and the stirring times in which we live. Pastor HAYES sought to increase the zeal for missions. Labouring in the Congo he appealed for help in saving the perishing millions, and asked, "Why should they perish, when we have it in our power to enlighten them?" "Life Discipline for the Ministry" was the subject of a valuable paper by Pastor HACKNEY, of Oxford, the keynote being that the true minister was disciplined by pain. Mr. Spurgeon observed, at the close, that the greatest calamity which could happen to him would be that of being healed in answer to the kind prayers of the faith healers. He had no doubt that many were healed by faith, and many more might be if they chose; but he held that it often took greater faith to endure pain than to remove it.

The College public meeting took place in the evening, when a large concourse of people assembled in the Tabernacle, and the proceedings were of a most enthusiastic character. The speakers were the Vice-President, Pastors A. G. Brown, E. G. Gange, J. Wilson, R. Mapleston, W. McKinney, and Mr. Harmer, evangelist.

Friday morning witnessed as usual the season of thanksgiving and prayer, a sermon by the beloved President, the commemoration of the Lord's Supper, and the farewell. Of the sermon it need only be said that it was a most fitting termination of a Conference which, as to the conscious presence of the Lord, the manifest love of the brethren, and evident smile and approval of the Master, has never been surpassed, and, we think, never equalled.

It should perhaps be added that Rev. C. Williams, president of the Baptist Union, was also present on Friday morning, and delivered a brief address. I. B.

VIVISECTION and THE JUBILEE.

ASSUREDLY, if a "consolation prize" were offered for the worst and lowest on the list of suggestions for celebrating the Queen's Jubillee year, that distinction, says The Illustrated London News, would be awarded by impartial judges to certain persons who want to found a vivisection laboratory in honour of the occasion. The late Sir Erasmus Wilson bequeathed all his property to revert on the death of his wife to the Royal College of Surgeons. That legacy is now received by the College, and is found to amount to £200,000. The vivisectionists pine to get hold of this sum, to found an "Institution for Physiological Research." Dr. George Hoggan used often to hear a vivisection master say, "Take another dog, or begin on the other side!" Dogs are cheap, and rabbits are not costly, but the ovens for baking them, and the refrigerators for freezing them to rigidity, and the engines to keep up their respiration when it is about to fail under torture, and the curare that paralyses movement while leaving sensation, and the elaborated frameworks, and troughs, and muzzles, and cages, and all the other apparatus of agony, do run into money. Besides, "Research" asks its daily bread, and cruelty must be fed. So the practitioners of this noble art have made their appeal for the Erasmus Wilson bequest to be devoted to their benefit, in honour of the present moment, "when an endeavour is being made to strengthen the empire by the consolidation of the colonies."

Her Majesty, who is a great dog lover, will, undoubtedly, hear with disgust of any attempt, however distant, to associate her reign specially with "the endowment of Physiological Research." Public opionion, the vivisectionists admit, is against them. "There is little prospect," they say, "of the Government establishing such an institution, or of its being founded by public subscription." Every tender-hearted woman will hope that "there is little prospect of such an institution" being established in our midst by any means. Happily, we have never yet had a woman vivisector.

HOPE LODGE, BALLARAT.—This Home, for the help of men who have fallen through strong drink, has gradually grown, until now there is accommodation for twenty-one inmates. Altogether fifty-eight men have been received, no person of intemperate habits who has applied for admission having been refused. The work was initiated, and is still carried on, by Rev. W. L. Morton, as a work of faith in God. The results have been very encouraging.

REFUGE FOR FALLEN AND FRIENDLESS FEMALES.—Much good work, both of rescue and of reclamation, has been done in the Greenwich Home during the past year. Altogether eighty-five women were admitted, of whom forty-four were fallen, and the results of the training there given were very satisfactory. The Institution is essentially a temporary Home, its design being to afford shelter at all times to those needing its aid, and to make the best provision possible for restoring or raising them to a virtuous life, and a respectable position. The Institution, which has now been in existence upwards of thirty years, has during that time been the means of untold temporal and spiritual blessing to nearly four thousand poor women and girls. The Home is at 14, Prior-street, Greenwich, and the hon. sec. is Mr. W. O'Neill.

Spring Anniversaries.

Young Women in London.

Once a year the great hall in the Strand furnishes a vast array of young women—a goodly sight to see. The Y.W.C.A. is growing so rapidly that Exeter Hall ought soon to be inadequate for its annual meeting; last week it sufficed, though there did not seem to be many vacant seats. Whatever lack of accomplishments these young persons may have, they certainly can sing; it was quite inspiring to hear the burst of sacred melody that went up from three thousand fresh and tuneful throats.

An increase of 1100 members during the year was not a bad keynote for Mr. Secretary Paton to strike. There are now, he said, 129 branches in London and suburbs, with a total membership of 13,500—surely a good nucleus for the evangelisation of the young women of the Metropolis. On the point of finance, Mr. Paton's statement was not so gratifying. He had to report a deficit for the year of over £1260; of this, however, the half had been met before the meeting. Many interesting details were given as to advances made during the past twelve months, and progress at the different branches. Special note was taken of the acquisition of Morley Hall in Regent-street, and of the development of the Travellers' Aid, Park Visitation, Factory Helpers', and other departments. A warm tribute was paid to the memory of the late Mr. Samuel Morley, whose benefactions so largely benefited the work of the Association. The provincial branches had sent a good report, as also had the foreign limbs of the flourishing tree; so that altogether it was a roseate view which Mr. Paton presented to his interested hearers—barring, of course, the little deficit

The Chairman, Mr. T. A. Denny, was somewhat less effervescent than his wont. He seemed to have deeply engraven on his heart the condition of so many young women in our great city, and the temptations that encompass them on every side. Most important was the counsel he gave the crowd of these young friends before him, on questions of dress, deportment, marriage, &c., equally so was his exhortation not to leave all the Christian work of the Association to be done by the committee.

In the early part of the evening proceedings a number of prizes were distributed by the Countess of Seafield to those who had excelled in a Scripture competition, these prizes being the gifts of her ladyship and the Countess of Rosslyn. The hearty thanks of the assembly, moved by Sir Fowell Buxton, and seconded by Sir Robert Phayre, were accorded to these honourable ladies for the kind encouragement thus given to the study of the sacred Word.

Rev. Dr. Kitto, of St. Martin's-in-the-Fields, in addressing his fair audience, scouted the prevalent superstition that it is a religious duty to eschew the beautiful, and to wear a gloomy, melancholy face. God means us to express by an outward brightness the life of joy and peace within. The homely virtues of self-respect, humility, and strict integrity were earnestly pressed home by the reverend speaker, and his friendly words evoked a warm response. Professor Elmslie holds his ground as one of the most cultured, most original, and most interesting platform speakers of the time. For the benefit and encouragement of his working sisters he drew a graphic and pleasant picture of Dorcas, as one worthy to be imitated by Christian women of to-day. We give a condensed note of his words on a succeeding page.

Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., said he deemed it a very sad thing for our country that these Associations should be so greatly needed. Their necessity arises out of the artificial life we live. Our young women are too much huddled together, away from the sweets of pure, domestic life. We have reversed the natural order of things, leaving the healthgiving air, and surroundings of the country, and thronging into the towns that are growing larger, more unmanageable, and more wicked. Mr. Smith is extremely anxious that the overplus of young life in this overcrowded island should be transferred to the silent spaces of Canada and the colonies. Could not the Y.W.C. Association add to its operations an emigration branch, sending out to those roomy lands Christian young women to form happy Christian homes? He said he had helped to emigrate a good many himself, and it was a curious thing that they always got married within twelve months; even widows forty years old. He fervently hoped some bridge would be built by which many could pass out of our factories and work-rooms, and be put into happier circumstances. He oeffred some very sound advice on the advantages of being trained in the domestic arts, if they ever hoped to preside over homes of their own. His idea of redressing the balance of the sexes, as between this and other lands, is a good one; the thing is to carry it into effect.

ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

All the Y.W.C.A. secretaries and workers were invited to their new head offices (Morley Halls, 316, Regent-street) for a thanksgiving meeting and Conference, on the 19th and 20th inst. The response was very cordial; even at the devotional hour, presided over by Miss Nugent and Miss Bell, which opened the Conference, an overflow meeting had to be provided for.

Mrs. Abel Smith presided at the noon meeting, when deeply interesting accounts were given of the progress of the work of the Association in England, London, Scotland, Ireland, and in the colonies, by Miss Macleod, Miss Denny, Mrs. Campbell White, Mrs. Tottenham, and Miss Benyon. Mrs. Graves then read a paper by Mrs. Lefroy, on "Lessons from Twenty-three Years' Experience of Work." These records of what God hath wrought during the past year call for earnest praise, and are strong encouragements to fresh efforts amongst our young women. An interesting paper on Thrift, by Mrs. Jebb, was afterwards read by Miss Morley.

At three o'clock the chair was taken by the Dowager Countess of Aberdeen, when the special difficulties of work amongst our "Rural Population" were ably dealt with by Mrs. Gordon, Miss Garratt, Hon. E. Kinnaird, and Miss M. Davidson; and its immense importance was dwelt on, as our large cities are fed from the country districts. The valuable work accomplished by the "Travellers' Aid" department was sketched by Miss Beauchamp, and the cause of "Strangers and Foreigners" was pleaded by Mrs. Dawson.

From the busy details of outward service the workers were summoned to a "quiet hour" of waiting on God, when Mrs. Armstrong showed that the power for true "witnessing" by God's chosen was to "know his will, and see that Just One, and hear the voice of his mouth," and that could only be possible in a heart surrendered and stilled.

At 8 o'clock the three halls were filled with sympathising friends of the work, for a conversazione, which was followed by a thanksgiving meeting, under the presidency of Mr. Geo. Williams, whose heart seems equally warm towards the Y.W.C.A. as towards the Y.M.C.A. Mr. E. J. Kennedy, Exeter Hall, passed on to the sister society some suggestions on social evenings, and other developments of Y.M.C.A. work. Rev. G. Baskerville urged the paramount importance of spiritual teaching for our young women. Rev. Armstrong Hall spoke of the need of keeping pace with the times, which are moving rapidly, on the lines of accumulated Christian experience, Biblical criticism, evangelistic methods, and religious inquiry. Mr. G. L. Dashwood challenged the secretaries to make the four quarter days (as being marked and easily remembered) special seasons of united prayer throughout the whole Association.

The following day at 10.30 the Conference reopened with a meeting conducted by Mrs. Gordon, who gave some strengthening counsel to the workers. Lady Beauchamp took the chair at 11.30, when Miss Bagett, brought forward the practical bearing of special mission services on the regular work of the branches. Miss T. L. Trotter followed this up with useful hints as to the training of members in the work of winning souls. Miss A. Braithwaite pressed the claims of Christ and of a world lying in the wicked one, on heart and conscience. Miss Faulkner enforced this appeal; pleading for the emancipation of devoted young Christians from the frivolous monotony of business, for the high and holy service of a missionary's life. The spirit of conviction which had been gathering throughout the meeting then broke into deep confession and earnest prayer.

At the afternoon meeting Lady Kinnaird's place in the chair was filled by Mrs. Campbell White. The "Dangers and Difficulties of Town Life" for our young women were forcibly dwelt upon by Miss Coles, and terrible revelations of temptation and ruin amongst our "Business employées" were made by Mrs. Mirlees, while Miss Bradford showed how to reach and help them. The subjects of "Servants' Homes" and "Lending Libraries" were taken up by Mrs. F. A. Bevan and Miss Denny. The crying needs of factory girls and mill hands, pictured by Miss E. Robarts and Miss Dyson, must deeply have stirred all hearts to sympathy and prayer.

At six o'clock the last meeting at Morley Halls was led by Mrs. Legg, who pointed out that the only entrance to the experience of full rest and satisfaction was that of full surrender.

Young Men at Exeter Hall.

Following immediately the gathering of our Young Women came that of the Young Men's Christian Association, fitly presided over by Mr. George Williams. The report was itself an inspiration. As Mr. Kennedy, the secretary, passed from point to point, the cumulative evidence of the value of the work was such as to create a deep feeling of thankfulness in every heart. With a total membership at Exeter Hall of close upon 1500, a third of these having been enrolled last year, there has been a total attendance at Bible-classes and evangelistic meetings numbering over 71,000. In connection with these, Christian work of a distinctly aggressive character is actively carried on. Many of the most earnest of the young men are engaged in outdoor preaching. A mission hall in Stanhope-street, with various evangelistic agencies, such as visitation from house to house and the regular preaching of the Gospel, is also carried on from this centre, and in connection with each section of the work great blessing is reported. As to the educational work, 61 classes are in full working, and a pretty good proof of the value of the teaching given is afforded by the fact that the primary place in the open competition has been taken twice by members of the Civil Service classes, and a large number of appointments have been secured. Through the labours of the reception committee, every member of which pledges himself to attend one meeting a week, upwards of one thousand young men have been reached. Reference was made to missions conducted during the year, and especially to that by Dr. Guinness, which was signally blessed in the conversion of 150 men in one week.

The Chairman spoke of the wonderful way in which this movement for the benefit of young men has grown. During the Queen's reign these Associations first came into existence, and now there are in London 65, an increase of ten during last year; in the United Kingdom there are 570 Associations with a membership of more than 55,000, and altogether throughout the world there are 3347, the total number of members and associates being 230,000. It is a grand thing, said Mr. Williams, that these Associations have sent forth so many to the mission field. From one in Glasgow six members have gone out as missionaries, and we believe that God has raised up this agency to gather out of the world hundreds and thousands of young men to go forth and teach the unsearchable riches of Christ. Germany has also entered upon this work, and from Elberfeld forty members have gone abroad; altogether more than 200 have gone forth from different Associations in that land.

Ven. Archdeacon Lefroy, D.D., of Liverpool, followed with an address on "Great Cities and Great Sins." If great cities produce great sins, they also produce great saints; among these he mentioned Mr. Samuel Morley, Earl Cairns, George Moore, and Lord Shaftesbury. The "great sins" to which special reference was made, were gambling, drunkenness, and impurity. The dangers connected with each were well portrayed, and a faithful voice of warning was raised. Rev. W. S. Swanson, of China, spoke of "The Missionary Cause." He said he trembled for the Church, as for the country that is putting this cause in the background, and only nibbling at it. He spoke of China as a grand missionary field; of the wonderful progress Christianity had made there, and denounced in stern language the wrong inflicted in regard to the opium traffic. Rev. Newman Hall gave the concluding address on "Industry and Godliness," showing the close connection between the two: that godliness is something more than religiousness, and that a godly man must necessarily be an industrious man—in his daily duty as in the reading of the Scriptures, in prayer, and in attendance on the means of grace. Godliness also, he pointed out, in no way hinders that which tends to the true happiness and well-being of man.

Some of the sightless friends from the Royal Normal School for the Blind charmed all ears, and touched all hearts, by their exquisite and pathetic song.

Two Temperance Meetings.

The pronouncements on the great subject of temperance delivered at two meetings held on Monday of last week were of a refreshing and encouraging character. At both pointed reference was made to the fact that a very great advance has been made in regard to the hygiene of the subject. Some years ago, it was remarked, it was thought that health could scarcely be maintained without the aid of alcohol; now it is known that alcohol not only contributes nothing to the maintenance of health, but that its use tends distinctly to the deterioration of health. Hence there is a marked advance in the general understanding of the real character of this mischievous agent, that still, however, is allowed, unchecked by the law, to work its evil spells amongst the people. But there are some who think more of the true well-being of the people than, apparently, do our own legislators, and who are earnestly at work counteracting the manifold evils produced by multiplied temptation. Amongst these, at its fifth annual meeting, gave evidence of considerable life and energy, as well as a devoted spirit in regard to the work it has undertaken amongst the poor women of East London. The report, read by Mrs. Paddon, insisted strongly on the need for such an effort to raise the tone of the home life of thousands of our countrymen, blighted as it is by strong drink. There has been an increase during the year of sixty-two members, and the young ladies' branch now numbers sixty.

THE EAST LONDON WOMEN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION,

Lady Hope, who presided, though deploring that the evils caused by strong drink meet us at every turn, said there are nevertheless many encouraging facts presented to the student of temperance statistics. She very pleasantly described a temperance refreshment room in which she is especially interested. Here 400 men sit down to dinner every day, every attention being paid to their comfort and to make the place attractive. The manager had just intimated that he should like to see palm-trees in the centre of the room, and no doubt these will be provided. The men often express their thankfulness that such a place has been opened for them, and it pays, as, Lady Hope added, any work of the kind can be made to do, if the same care is given to make others comfortable as would be given in our own homes. She also expressed an earnest wish that the women of the working classes would give more consideration to this question, which so intimately affects their own happiness. Honest and respectable women will turn and twist in many ways to make both ends meet, but somehow they do not see how much better off they would be if total abstinence from strong drink were the rule of their households.

Dr. Carpenter, of Croydon, in an address on "Woman's Work," in her home as wife and mother, said it might be accepted as the proved conclusion of many years' experience that at no period of her life is woman really helped by taking alcohol. Relief from pain might sometimes be obtained, but this at great cost in the future. Even in old age the effect is to deaden the faculties and to shut out the sight of the Promised Land and the glories of the future life. In regard to the choice of occupations for their children, he strongly urged all to do all they can to prevent them becoming attendants in public-houses and refreshment rooms where strong drink is sold; the number of deaths amongst the attendants at such places is awful. He gladly recorded his opinion that the working classes are awaking to the disadvantages of strong drink and that better times are coming for the people of England.

Mrs. Lamb, of Peckham, earnestly urged all to take the pledge who had not already joined the temperance ranks. As showing the practical nature of the work, she told how a friend having given her a sovereign to help it forward, one hundred of the poorest women in the neighbourhood were invited to a tea. As a result thirty-four signed the pledge and at least one was brought to Christ. That sovereign, which had given an evening's happiness, permanently brightened many homes and brought at least one sinner to the Saviour, was well invested.

Lady Lymington, who has now accepted the position of president of the Union, Mrs. Balgarnie, and Mrs. Thomas Richardson also spoke. We have, however, said enough of this interesting meeting to show how earnest is the spirit in which the ladies of the East-end of London are going forth to help their suffering sisters.

CITY OF LONDON TOTAL ABSTAINERS' UNION.

Mr. George Williams presided at the ninth annual meeting of this body, held at 186 Aldersgate-street. The abstainer, he said, is distinctly a gainer in every way. Amongst other things noted was the fact that the expenditure on strong drink now is twenty millions less than it was ten years ago. The Secretary, Mr. F. Gibbon Toller, read the Report, giving particulars of the thirty meetings held during the past year, many of them in City warehouses, and attended by large numbers of young men and others.

Mr. John Hilton said that the experience of the managing committee of the Temperance Hospital shows that the value of alcohol as a medicine has been immensely overrated. Arguing on the line of the power of influence, he showed how much nobler it is to have influenced one for good than for evil. And this view he commended to those who argue that because alcohol does not hurt them there is no reason why they should give up its use. Rev. G. W. McCree, in a humorous speech, referred to several reasons sometimes heard for taking wine, &c. Amongst these was that it introduced to good company. Strong drink, he replied, will spoil the best company in the world. The conversation over wine is always of a lower character than the conversation where wine is not. Wine parts friends and severs families as nothing else does. He showed that mind is superior to muscle, that muscle is ever the servant of mind; and then, speaking from a forty years' knowledge of London life, in almost every phase, said, "If the theatre is bad, drink makes it worse; if the song is bad, drink makes it worse; if the company is bad, drink makes it worse."

Rev. Newman Hall spoke of an experience of forty-six years as a temperance worker. He remembered a man, evidently a victim of drink, coming to him many years ago, after a prayer-meeting. He was an educated man, but everything was gone through the drink, and he did not know, he said, why he had come there. By God's grace, he promised to give up the drink and signed the pledge. Three years ago, after a meeting which Mr. Hall addressed in New York, this man came up to him. He is now occupying an influential position, and has a comfortable home. Strong drink, he affirmed, increases the force of temptation, and decreases the force of the moral power to resist, and therefore it is a danger to be avoided by all sensible persons. Every Saturday and Sunday, upwards of £70,000 is spent in strong drink, mostly by the working classes, and surely this is a fact which deserves the attention of all thinking people who desire the welfare of their country.

Strangers' Home, Limehouse.

It is difficult to exaggerate the value of the services which this institution renders in affording assistance to Asiatic and African seamen. Besides relieving the destitute, excellent provision is made for boarders, and the officials exercise a watchful interest over the blacks when paid off from their vessels, preventing them from falling a prey to the crimps and landsharks of London. Particular attention is paid to the spiritual welfare of the inmates. On leaving the institution every man is presented with a New Testament in his own tongue.

During 1886 there were 395 boarders, of whom 140 were unemployed and in a homeless condition, when admitted. Whenever it is possible, employment is procured for the destitute. It is a noteworthy fact that, while the Indian Office contributes £200 and several of our Crown Colonies about £100 each annually to the funds, comparatively little is received from our wealthy merchants and shipowners, and others connected with the trade of the East.

The annual meeting of the subscribers and friends was held on Wednesday afternoon of last week, under the presidency of Col. H. Yule, C.B., an old friend of the Home. Surgeon-General Francis described the institution as a haven of refuge and a large civilising and Christianising centre, and commended it to the support and liberality of the public. Mr. J. J. Guydar pointed out that the institution saved many destitute blacks from becoming a burden upon the people of this country. Dr. Maxwell, speaking from his experience in China as a medical missionary, denied the assertion that Asiatics are ungrateful for kindnesses shown them. It is through kind actions and gentle words that the blacks are led to recognise our Christianity. Major-General Paske characterised the Home as a link in the chain which binds the Mother Country to the East. Mr. Nowrojee Dadabhoy Allbless, of Caius College, Cambridge, and the hon. secretary, Mr. Ferguson, also spoke.

Zenana Work.

Some very interesting information was laid before the large company assembled in Morley Hall, 316, Regent-street, on Thursday afternoon last, at the annual meeting of the Indian Female Normal School and Instruction Society. The Society embraces two departments of Christian labour—medical missions and schools—which are full of hope and promise as regards the future of India. As the chairman, Sir Thomas Fowell Buxton, observed, the sympathy and tenderness which beam like a light through the reports of the ladies who carry on this work must have a great influence upon the people. An abstract of the Report was read by Rev. A. H. Lash. The principal feature was a comparison of the figures of last year with those of 1881, showing very considerable progress in every branch of work.

The Chairman, having expressed the hope that the era of indifference with which India was so long regarded in this country is now giving place to a true and loving interest and sympathy, Rev. John Fordyce gave an interesting sketch on "Female Education in India during the last Fifty Years." Seven things, he said, are now in operation, which had not been commenced fifty years ago. These are Normal Schools, Zenana Missions, Government Aid, University Degrees for Women, Medical Missions, Woman's public advocacy of the cause of their suffering sisters, and, lastly, a desire among higher and middle class ladies to become believers in Jesus Christ. All this should deepen humility and awaken thankfulness.

Rev. H. M. Hackett sketched the progress of medical missions in the last fifty years, and was followed by Mrs. Sorabji, who spoke on "Bible Teaching and Moral Training in Schools." In touching language she expressed her thankfulness that women's hearts have been moved with sympathy for their sisters in India, and the conviction that now they will not stand still. Not a millionth part of what is needed has yet been attempted. If only, she said, people could see the condition of her country their hearts would ache. If the women are brought under the terrible curse of growing atheism, India will be gone for ever. She thanked God, therefore, for Christian work amongst the women and children of her country. It is the testimony of Mohammedans, Hindoos, and Parsees, that Christian morality as taught in the Bible is the best in the world. She spoke of her own school, which is opened every day with prayer and Bible reading. Even Jewish parents are glad to send their children to learn. Many of these little ones answer questions on the Gospels readily, and speak of Jesus as "Our Lord." Many Parsees and others read the Bible regularly, though as yet secretly.

Widows' Friend Society.

For seventy-eight years this Society has been carrying out the command given in Scripture to visit and help the widow and the fatherless in their affliction. As was pointed out by Miss Macpherson at the annual meeting at the Mansion House, on Friday afternoon, the income, instead of being as it was last year, only £220, should be £2020. A very satisfactory and interesting report of last year's work was presented by the secretary, Mr. M. Kenchington. The number of cases dealt with by the committee were 104, in many of which the widows were placed in the position of earning a living for themselves and their families. In taking the periodical payments to these pensioners several members of the committee have testified to the spiritual good they themselves have received by seeing the faith, gratitude for small mercies, and patience under suffering, exhibited by these aged believers.

The claims of the Society were ably advocated by a number of speakers, all of whom touched on the truly Christ-like service which the Society is accomplishing.

Theatrical Mission.

Exeter (Lower) Hall was crowded, on Saturday evening, at the annual meeting of this Theatrical Mission, to whose interest Mr. and Mrs. Courthope Todd are devoting their energies. There is every reason to thank God for the achievements of the past, and to take courage for the efforts of the future. There are at present 6000 persons connected with theatres under visitation. The Queen has evinced much interest in this Christian enterprise. Mr. Todd stated, amid loud applause, that Her Majesty, not content with printed matter, had specially sent Sir Henry Ponsonby to inquire fully about the work, and had expressed her willingness to receive from the children of the Mission a Jubilee offering.

Mr. George Williams, who presided, rejoiced at the wonderful work Mr. Todd is carrying on, and expressed the hope that the Mission would continue to grow until it had the whole theatrical profession under its influence. Mrs. Evered Poole gave a most impressive address, the topic of which was "The King's Business." She referred to the great feature of the Mission—personal dealing—and spoke of the healthy influence it exerted over the theatrical profession. She regarded with great importance the letter writing, and appealed to the ladies present to give their services to that department of the work. Major Poole, Rev. Mr. Cumberlige, and Mr. Paynter also addressed the meeting.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Rev. E. P. Hammond, assisted by Rev. Mr. Matham as a Gospel singer, has been evangelising at Paterson, New Jersey.

Mr. John Harris, of the Evangelistic Village Mission, is now moving about through Essex and Herts, in charge of the Village Mission Bible carriage.

Rev. A. H. Kirkland is doing a good work at the Adelphi Theatre, Chicago, a disreputable resort which he has made a Bethel to many souls. His wife is an effective helper.

Paris.—The friends of the Y.M.C.A. recently welcomed M. Van der Beken, on his return from the United States, where he has been studying the Y.M.C.A. organisation. M. Van der Beken related much that he had seen, and it is hoped that new life will be imparted to the Association.

Mr. G. King has conducted a week's Mission in an iron chapel at Chobham, Surrey. The first service was on Good Friday evening. He gave an account of his conversion to well-filled chapels at Birley, West-end, and, on Easter Sunday, an earnest address in a barn to over one hundred gipsies and villagers, who were very interested.

Cardiff.—Mr. Charles Inglis held evangelistic services at the Y.M.C.A., from Sunday, April 10 to 16, also afternoon Bible-readings. Prayer has indeed been answered, God's people having been much blessed and built up at the afternoon meetings, and souls won to Christ under the faithful preaching of our brother in the evening. G. H.

Mr. Spiers at St. John's Wood.—Mr. Josiah Spiers has recently held a very successful mission at Abbey-road Baptist Chapel. Mr. Spiers succeeded not only in securing the attention of his audiences, but in deeply impressing young hearts. An inquiry meeting was held after each service, to which a large number remained. During the mission forty professed conversion.

Miss Jackson has concluded a six weeks' Gospel Temperance Mission in the Lincolnshire Fens. She has spoken at Spalding, Donington, Billingborough, and other places. Many souls have received blessing, and, without exception, those who have professed to put on Christ have also put on the blue and white, having renounced not only drink but the use of tobacco.

Rev. B. Fay Mills laboured for seventeen days with Dr. Cuyler's people, Brooklyn, a Baptist church and a Congregational joining. Several hundred cards were signed, on which was printed "I desire to lead a Christian life," most of whom, it is hoped, decided, as well as desired, to follow Christ. Mr. Mills has left an excellent impression, and is now at work at Andover among Academy students.

Soldiers in Woolwich.—God has given much blessing to the men of this garrison, through the labours of Mr. John Climie, of Scotland, who has recently held a twelve days' mission. The men came in increasing numbers, and night after night we had the joy of seeing them leaving the Home with praising hearts, having had a personal interview with their Saviour and Lord. The blessing has been chiefly among the non-commissioned officers, and their influence must tell on their comrades. Many of the soldiers' wives have also sought and found the Lord, and are now resting on his gloriously finished work.

Margaret Dent.

Revival in Sedalia, U.S.—The St. Louis Evangelist gives an account of a wonderful revival in this place. Four churches were united in the work, which was commenced the first week in January, Major J. H. Cole, of Adrian, Michigan, being the evangelist. From the first the influence and power of the Holy Spirit was very manifest. Three meetings were held daily for six weeks, and the minister and congregation of every evangelical church in the city soon joined heartily in the work. This union of Christians was a marked feature throughout. Impenitent men saw and felt also that Christians prayed as if they expected that God would hear and answer them, and thus opposition was disarmed, and all classes of men became approachable. "As the fruits of this precious work of God's grace 2000 souls have been registered as converted to God."

United Christian Mission.—A Gospel van has been opened in Goole for the spread of the Gospel and the sale of Bibles and other religious temperance books. The van will travel through England, Wales, Scotland, and Ireland. This Mission, which is still young, has over thirty stations, from which reports are sent almost weekly of souls being saved.

Messrs. Pentecost and Stebbins.—These friends have had a busy time among the Churches in the town of Cleveland, Ohio. Special correspondents of the New York Independent state that, in spite of local difficulties, the meetings, extending over four weeks, have been attended by immense audiences, and the spiritual fruit has been considerable. During the fourth week Mr. Sankey joined the evangelists, and gave his powerful aid, both in speech and song.

Revival in Louisville, Ky.—Says a correspondent of the New York Evangelist, writing on March 24:—"I wrote you several weeks ago about some remarkable conversions of infidels, drunkards, and gamblers, in this place. Since that time the work has been increasing in power and influence. At one time religious services were held in seventeen different places. The churches finding that sinners were ready to listen to the truth, have opened their doors and invited everyone that thirsted 'to come to the waters.' Missions have been held at four or five places, and preaching, prayers, and exhortations are heard every night. It has been found possible to get the most wicked and degraded class to attend. The men noted for dissipation, wickedness, and infidelity, that I mentioned as having been converted, have taken a warm interest in the meetings, and in a modest, sensible, and feeling manner have been eloquent witnesses for Christ. They have all taken an active part in this movement. There have been over six hundred accessions to the churches, and the sheaves are still being gathered."

Mr. William Forbes (71, Windsor-road, Holloway, N.) will be glad to hear from ministers and others, in or near London, who may be willing to grant the use of chapels or halls for a weekly, week night, evangelistic service.

MEDICAL MISSION, AGRA.—Letters received from Mr. and Mrs. Wilson give very interesting particulars of medical mission work in this city. Mrs. Wilson sends a photograph of the Dispensary for Women and Children, conducted by herself, where, during last year, she treated over 10,000 new cases, the total attendances being more than 22,000. She treats all these without a medical assistant, and, with the help of a native Bible woman, tells them the "Old, old story." Mr. Wilson treats from fifty to a hundred, or more, men, women, and children, daily reading to them during a portion of the time from the New Testament, and telling them of Jesus and his love.

THE MISSION SHIPS.—Mr. Henry Cook receives constant testimony to the appreciation which is felt for his efforts amongst fishermen by the numerous requests for his vessels to visit Plymouth and other seaports. The Annie, having become unfit for cruising, has been sold for £225, which sum goes towards the £550 which the new ship, the Herald of Mercy, will cost. This vessel will, it is hoped, be launched on May 9, and be formally named by the Marchioness of Ailsa at the dedication service. The Mystery is now at Cherbourg, and is being used in gathering large numbers of French sailors, fishermen, soldiers, and others to hear the word of God, as well as English, Scandinavian, and other seamen. Bibles, Gospel books, small bags, comforters and cuffs, are always much needed. Mr. Cook's address is Seamen's Mission, Gosport, Hants.

MAIN MISSION, TEMBULAND.—In South Africa, as in many other places, the great enemy to the spread of Christianity is strong drink. The report just issued states that it has been necessary during the year to suspend nine church members and two deacons on this account. There have nevertheless been more than fifty additions to church membership, and there have been twenty-eight conversions direct from heathenism. The schools—the great hope for the future—are progressing very satisfactorily; the Congregational Temperance Association and Bands of Hope have been organised with a view of inculcating the principles of total abstinence. A Woman's Christian Association obtained also a membership of eighty-seven in a short time, and the Medical Mission department is exercising a great influence for good. The address of Mr. D. Doig Young, the missionary, is Main, viâ Tsomo, South Africa.

THIRD EDITION.
With Chromo-Lithographic Views of the Isle of Patmos and the Sea of Galilee.
Cloth, Bevelled Boards, 3s. 6d.

"Another acceptable volume, by an author whose spiritual attainments, as well as mental powers, are fitting qualifications for an appreciative review of John's character and life. "John whom Jesus loved," by his latest biographer, will furnish a rich spiritual treat to all lovers of their Lord, in every section of His Church. To young men budding for the ministry, this monograph of John should become a classic volume."—Christian Age.

Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.; Cheap Edition, Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth limp, 1s. 6d.

"This very handsome volume on a subject of perpetual importance will no doubt be welcomed, especially by those who are acquainted with Dr. Culross's other excellent works. Dr. Culross has here pre-eminently exhibited his usual excellencies as a religious writer. Clear in style, and eloquent in argument, striking in illustration, never wordy or tedious, never flat or cold, but always exhibiting great Christian affection, with an obvious sense of the fidelity his subject so solemnly demands. We are sure this work will be useful wherever it is read; and we hope it will have a very wide circulation."
Baptist Messenger.

"THY FIRST LOVE."

CHRIST'S MESSAGE TO THE CHURCH AT EPHESUS.
With Chromo-Lithographic Frontispiece. Cloth, Bevelled Boards, 2s. 6d.

"We have read this book with avidity and delight. There clings to it a heavenly aroma, a grateful savour of Jesus which bespeaks intimate communion with Himself. This even more than the masterly method in which the writer manipulates his theme, and the felicitous diction he employs, constitutes the charm of the book. The many delighted readers of his kindred treatise on the Laodicean Epistle, will need no stimulus to procure the book. The Church of God is laid under increased obligation to the pious Author for this substantial contribution to sacred literature, containing as it does so much seasonable truth."

ZENANA BIBLE AND MEDICAL MISSION

(INDIAN FEMALE NORMAL SCHOOL AND INSTRUCTION SOCIETY),

In co-operation with the Church Missionary and other Protestant Missionary Societies in India. Established 1852.

JUBILEE FUND FOR CHRISTIAN MEDICAL WORK AMONG THE WOMEN OF INDIA.

The Queen's Testimony.

Her Majesty said to one of our medical lady missionaries, who had the honour of an interview in 1881, "We should wish it generally known that we sympathize with every effort made to relieve the suffering state of the women of India."

In addition to its Evangelistic and Educational work, the Society has a Hospital and Dispensary for Women at Lucknow, where their Medical Missionary, Dr. Alice Marston, is at work.

In 1886, she reports:—

2,943 new cases.
100 patients in the Hospital.
131 patients treated in their own houses.
6,920 total attendances at Hospital and Dispensary.

The Committee desire to commemorate the Queen's Jubilee by inaugurating a Jubilee Fund for extending their medical missionary work. They have now three thoroughly qualified medical ladies, two already in India and one on the point of proceeding there. They have three other ladies, students at the London School of Medicine for Women, who will soon have completed their four years' course and be ready to proceed to India.

The Committee APPEAL for FUNDS to enable them to extend their work, and establish Hospitals for Women at Benares, Jeypore, Patna, and Fyzabad.

Contributions will be thankfully received by the Hon. A. F. Kinnaird, Sub-Treasurer, at the Society's Office 2, Adelphi-terrace, London, W.C. Bankers—Ransom, Bouverie & Co., 1, Pall-mall East, S.W.

The Book World.

The Vision Stream, or the Song of Man. By A. W. Buchan. Houlston & Sons. If Universalism finds no more gifted versifier than the author of this book, admirers of Philip James Bailey will not have much cause to fear for that poet's laurels.

In A Woman's Dower, by Austin Clare (2s. 6d. Roper & Drowley, 29, Ludgate-hill) we have the story of two sisters—one who resisted temptation, and wore the white flower of a blameless life, the other who yielded, and suffered sore. The tale may be as a danger flag to the thoughtless.

Meditations on the Bible. By S. T. Spear, D.D. Funk & Wagnalls. A series of papers which originally appeared in the New York Independent, now, with slight alterations, published in the form of a volume. Devout, Scriptural, and evangelical, the book will be found full of consolation to the bereaved, of encouragement to the tried and depressed, and indeed of spiritual help for all.

The High Estate of Service. David Douglas, Edinburgh. A book for the times, intended for a class of the community too little considered and encouraged in their difficult sphere. Every servant should possess a copy of this eminently wise and useful treatise. We would urge every mistress to read it, and place it in the hands of her domestics; by so doing she will consult both her own interests and theirs. The author treats of the dignity of service; of economy; love; special duties in relation to children; personal responsibility; and the Home Mission—and does it with great effect.

The Gospel according to St. Luke. By Thos. M. Lindsay, D.D. Vol. i. 2s. T. & T. Clark. A further instalment of the handbooks for Bible-classes and private students, edited by Drs. Marcus Dods and Alex. Whyte. The introduction, notes, and maps are all that can be desired for the purpose aimed at. In addition to valuable original expositions, the notes contain the pith and marrow of some of our best commentaries, the whole forming a multum in parvo of real merit. Chapters i.—xii. are included in this first volume. Dr. Lindsay's remarks on the characteristics of Luke's Gospel, together with his analysis, will be found specially suggestive and helpful.

Victoria R. I.: Her Life and Reign. By Dr. Macaulay. 10s. 6d. Religious Tract Society. Dr. Macaulay has given us the most royal of all the literary memorials of this Victorian year of Jubilee. His practised pen furnishes not only a clear and graphic outline of our good Queen's life, but sketches of the leading actors on the historical stage of the Empire during her reign. To this is added a deeply instructive and encouraging résumé of the marvellous advances made, in the same period, in arts, science, and religious and philanthropic effort. There is an abundance of good illustration, and the publishers have helped to make the volume beautiful enough to appear on any table.

Spiritual Life in its Advancing Stages. By Rev. G. Robert Wynne, M.A. Second Edition. Elliot Stock. This singularly instructive book is written primarily for inexperienced Christians, but it contains teaching which will be welcomed by experienced believers. It points out dangers which lie in the way, and strengthens for difficulties to be faced in the journey Zionward. Christ-likeness is the goal to which the author would have his readers press forward. He rightly thinks that one of the most forcible arguments in defence of the faith is the exhibition of Christian character such as the Gospels describe. His aim gives colour and strength to a devotional manual of more than ordinary excellence.

Self-Will and God's Will; or, How to Discern what is God's Will in the Perplexing Questions of Life. By Otto Funcke. 2s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. This is a translation of a masterly little treatise by a German divine. It is written in a bright and vigorous style, and has the merit of discussing a most important question in a fresh and weighty manner. After showing the folly and sinfulness of self-willedness, the author proceeds to point out how God's will may be ascertained, and the benefits which come to the believer through close communion with God. The book is evidently the work of a man who knows human nature. He probes deep, but he wounds only to heal. He will teach his readers the happiness of a life ruled by submission to the Divine will; and that is a lesson worth learning.

The Weekly Pulpit. Vol. i. Elliot Stock. This is one more addition to the already long list of aids for preachers. It vindicates a right to existence, and should prove helpful, if judiciously used. The outlines are good, the homiletical notes suggestive, and the illustrations light-bringing. A carefully compiled index to the texts treated adds to value of the volume.

Introduction to the Catholic Epistles. By Paton J. Gloag, D.D. 10s. 6d. T. & T. Clark, Edinburgh. The valuable series known as "Clark's Theological Library" has attained such a reputation, that for a book to be published under its auspices is in itself a guarantee of merit. The present volume fully establishes its claim to rank with the noble array of its predecessors. The work is not a "Commentary;" it does not profess to treat of the Catholic Epistles, critically or exegetically, but simply to introduce the reader to familiar acquaintance with their authorship, design, and general characteristics. This is done with a clearness and thoroughness which impart vivacity and interest of more than ordinary degree, to the study of the subject treated on. The author remarks: "It is especially necessary that we should come to the study of these epistles in a religious spirit; the Word of God can only be truly understood by the spiritual mind." The reader will find the book throughout to be an exemplification of this important principle. A specially valuable portion of the work is that which deals with the Eschatology which is so marked a peculiarity in Peter's writings; the difficult questions involved in his reference to the spirits in prison, and the preaching to the dead, being treated with great care, and reverent reserve. In the same way the references of Jude to the burial of Moses, and to the prophecy of Enoch, are discussed in a spirit and manner eminently helpful and commendable. Intended to form a companion volume to the "Introduction to the Pauline Epistles," published some few years ago by the same author, Dr. Gloag's latest contribution to our theological literature entitles him to a foremost place among those who, while seeking to enlighten the mind by the fullest consideration of difficulties, are, at the same time, helpers of our faith.

Three steel portraits of Her Majesty the Queen, representing her childhood, maidenhood, and womanhood, are published by Messrs. Charles & Co., Salisbury-court, E.C. (1s.). The two earlier portraits are gems, but much cannot be said of the third.

Three Jubilees. Partridge & Co. 6d. per dozen. In this brochure Mr. J. Jackson briefly tells, in a bright and interesting way, the stories of the Victorian, the Jewish, and the Gospel Jubilees. There is a portrait of Her Majesty, and the whole makes a good Gospel tract.

The Papacy of Modern Times. We learn that this timely volume, which we noticed in our last issue, can still be had, by the kindness of friends, at the reduced price—Single copies, post paid, 2s. 4½d.; ten copies, carraige paid, 15s. This arrangement is for a limited period, and application should be sent to the Secretary of the Scottish Protestant Alliance Religious Institute Rooms, Glasgow.

Our Indian Sisters. 3d. 2, Adelphi-terrace. This little book gives some account of the sufferings of the women of India in times of illness, as well as a description of hospital work in Lucknow and elsewhere. The great need for medical missions to these suffering ones, who for so long have been the victims of superstition and cruel neglect, is thus again shown, and the gratitude with which the patients repay the care and attention bestowed upon them forms another incentive to Christian effort on their behalf.

Selections from the Second Book of Kings. Annotated and prepared for Educational and Home Use. By Rev. H. M. Clifford, M.A. 1s. Henry Frowde. One of a series of Bible manuals worthy of high commendation. The text and notes upon it, together with the variations of the R.V., are placed in parallel columns, while a valuable appendix gives the names of all persons and places referred to, and their meanings, as well as other helpful matter. As a guide to the study of the Kings it is invaluable for Bible-class use; and, indeed, for all Bible readers.

A Review and Descriptive Catalogue of Urdu Christian Literature. By Rev. H. U. Weitbrecht. Religious Tract Society. This book is the outcome of a suggestion made at the Calcutta Decennial Conference of 1882-3, that a descriptive catalogue of Christian literature should be compiled. As a result, we have here much information concerning the languages of the Panjab, and the Urdu language and literature, which, together with a catalogue of the books for Christians circulating in India, will be a great help to missionaries and others labouring in that land.

Buddha and Christ; or, The Light of Asia, and the Light of the World. By Louis Liesching. 3d. To be had from A. B., 4, Crown-hill, Norwood, S.W. A very instructive pamphlet, which we heartily commend. The writer can speak with authority. He has spent many years in Ceylon, and has read much of the literature that bears on his subject. He knows it, therefore, in its practical and also in its theoretical side. This lecture was first delivered at the National Club. We hope it will have a far larger audience among the general Christian public.

LAMBETH.—The twenty-seventh report of the Bible and Domestic Female Mission states that the mothers' meeting and men's Bible class continue to be well attended, several men members having joined during the year, and much spiritual blessing realised. The missionaries continue their work with unabated zeal in the wide and densely crowded area over which their work extends, and more help is urgently wanted. Mr. G. Thatcher, 36, Binfield-road, Clapham-road, is the hon. sec.

BELIEVERS' MEETINGS, LIVERPOOL.—Dr. Harrison, of St. Silas's, Liverpool, has a series of services in his church every year for believers. This year, on April 19, 20, and 21, Rev. T. J. Madden, Vicar of St. Mark's, Barrow-in-Furness, has been giving a course of Bible readings at three o'clock each day and special addresses each evening on the "Spiritual Life." Mr. Madden's simplicity of style and clearness of exposition made his teaching very popular. Dr. Harrison purposes continuing the Bible readings on Wednesday afternoons.

TRACTS WANTED.—Dear Sir,—With the advent of spring we receive a host of applications for tracts, and these applications arrive at a time when our stocks and funds are low. Hence it will be a special favour if your readers will send us tracts, hymn-sheets, Gospel booklets, magazines, and books for our preachers' library, or the means to purchase them. From the fact that our members visited 794 special gatherings (races, fairs, &c.) last year, and that our operations extended to 797 towns and villages, your readers will see that no Society has more magnificent opportunities of distributing Gospel truth than this.—Yours faithfully,

Gawin Kirkham, Secretary.

Open-Air Mission, 14, Duke-street, Adelphi, W.C.

HIGHLANDERS IN LONDON.—During the past year a series of Gaelic services have been held quarterly in Crown-court Church, Covent Garden, conducted by ministers both of the Established and Free Church of Scotland, who came specially to London for this purpose. On each occasion a large congregation attended. These services have been instituted at the request and by the co-operation of Highlanders in London, with the view of ascertaining whether services in their native language would be appreciated by, and conducive to, the spiritual and temporal welfare of the Gaelic-speaking residents of London. It is hoped to hold the services oftener than quarterly, according to circumstances.

GIBRALTAR SOLDIERS' MISSION HOME.—Mrs. E. Todd Osborne, writing concerning this Home, says it is the only place on the Rock, except the Institute, where soldiers can get temperance refreshment, though there are sixty-three drinking houses, not including the military canteens. The Sunday evening services are very crowded, many soldiers having sometimes to sit outside the door. The landlord of the premises having offered to sell the leasehold for £1,500, an effort is now being made to obtain this sum, together with a further sum of £300 for necessary alterations and furnishing. Miss Archibald is visiting the Spanish towns and villages near Gibraltar, and the people gladly welcome the Gospels and portions of Scripture she takes to them. Communications should be addressed to Mrs. Osborne, Rysland, Newton Mearns, N.B.

☞ To prevent delay in the execution of orders, it is specially requested by the Publishers that all business letters may be directed to the firm (Morgan & Scott). Also that personal letters for either partner may be so marked.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Rev. Dr. A. T. Pierson, of Philadelphia.

There is a silver lining to every cloud, and it is gratifying to learn that the missionary anniversary services recently held throughout Ireland by our Wesleyan Methodist brethren have been more than usually successful. Reports of increased liberality come from all quarters, and in the midst of general depression and deep uncertainty with regard to the political future the spirit of Christian generosity has abounded. The subscriptions are in excess of any previous year, and, as is only natural, a note of thanksgiving and of triumphant faith has been sounded.

We hope the discussion last week in the House of Commons on Mr. Samuel Smith's motion as to publishing objectionable details of trials in Court will produce all the good results that are anticipated from it; and that conductors of our daily journals will in future pay some regard to the conservation of public morals, even at the risk of smaller money returns. We recognise the difficulty of repressing reports, without defeating the ends which their publication ought to serve. Mr. Finlay's suggestion that Judges should be empowered, in certain cases, to forbid publication, seems a feasible one, though this power might even be abused so as to screen rich offenders.

Our judges and magistrates have a sufficiently difficult task to perform in the meting out of sentences, without being hampered or harassed by over criticism. Yet there seems ground for the complaint made by Mr. William Tallack, in a letter to The Times, respecting the disproportionate punishments given for offences against property as compared with those given for attacks upon the person. After citing several cases where very trifling thefts have been visited with punishments of intense severity, Mr. Tallack says:—

> Crimes against the person are, in general, so inadequately visited by the law, and minor offences against property are so very disproportionately punished, that a double premium upon violence is held out. It is utterly unjust and inexpedient that even an aggregate of from five to ten thefts of watercresses or herrings should be ranked on an equality of ill-desert with a single atrocious act of brutality, such as wounding a policeman, kicking a wife, maiming a child, or even treating a dumb animal with wilful cruelty. It is fair to our judges to state that they are increasingly careful in this respect. The worst sentences are usually pronounced from the subordinate tribunals of the Sessions.

Methods of punishment that tend to increase rather than to prevent crime stand self-condemned, and there is surely a crying need for the codification and harmonising

A correspondent of The Christian Leader, referring to the growth of socialistic ideas and theories in Scotland, remarks on the almost complete absence, in the advocacy of the movement, of all reference to drinking customs and the consequent poverty. Working-men may rest assured that those who seek to excite their discontent, without plainly pointing out the ways in which they can help themselves, are not true friends.

Some months ago we referred to a statement made by Miss Anstey, of the Colar Mission, that ladies employed in connection with the Countess of Dufferin's Medical Fund, in India, were prohibited, on pain of dismissal, from teaching the Christian faith to those under their care. Mr. W. Redmond, of Malvalli, Mysore District, forwards to us copies of documents he has received from Major Cooper, A.D.C., to His Excellency the Governor-General, and Honorary Secretary to the Fund. In a letter, this gentleman says:—

> Ladies employed by the National Association are, as far as religious subjects are concerned, placed in exactly the same position as every official in India. No Government official is bound to silence on religious matters on pain of instant dismissal; nor, on the other hand, is he allowed to use his office for the purpose of proselytism. Lady doctors, employed by the Association, are appointed on the same understanding. But it is unfair to cast upon them the stigma of irreligion, because of the unsectarian character of their work. They are not allowed to interfere with the beliefs of the persons into whose houses they are admitted; but no good, that can be done by example is denied them; and, if charity, purity, and self-denial are Christian virtues, they can, in the practice of them, and in the blameless character of their lives, do much to exalt the Christian religion in this country.

The language employed by this official is very guarded and not altogether clear. It seems, however, to mean that to preach the Gospel of Jesus Christ to a Hindoo or a Mohammedan would be considered sectarianism and proselytism, and is, therefore, forbidden. This virtually admits the whole charge made, and it is well that the Christian public in this country, who may be asked to subscribe to the fund, should know exactly on what footing it stands with respect to this matter.

Medical relief, pure and simple, is a very excellent thing; we have no quarrel with the Association established to supply it, quite the contrary. At the same time, we scarcely think any earnest Christian ladies would care to work in fetters that would tie them hand and foot, and prevent them from teaching anything contrary to "the beliefs of the persons into whose houses they are admitted."

Too sudden changes in matters affecting public convenience are, perhaps, not desirable; but we scarcely see why the House of Commons should not have readily agreed to Dr. Clark's proposal with reference to the Sabbath delivery of letters in the provinces. Under his plan the change from delivery to non-delivery would not have been enforced in a district, if a considerable majority of the people objected. After the deliberate sifting of the whole subject, in its pros and cons, by a select Committee of the House, we hope that ere long our country friends will claim and enjoy the same freedom from epistolary intrusion, on the Day of Rest, that we have

Mr. Hind-Smith has lately returned from a month's tour throughout Ireland, in company with Mr. R. McCann, the travelling secretary for that island of the Y.M.C.A. Mr. Smith reports very gratifying progress, north and south, in the extension of Y.M.C.A. work; a thing for which we feel profoundly thankful in these times, when the Irish news is mainly of a less agreeable kind. He speaks, it is true, of a reign of social terror existing in certain districts, but there seems to be perfect freedom for engaging in all sorts of Christian work.

One gratifying matter mentioned to us, in a conversation with Mr. Smith, is the frequent trace that he found in all parts of the country, of the results of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's labours in Ireland, and also of the great revival of 1859. Mr. McCann, to whom we have referred, is himself one fruit of the work of the American evangelists, and he is now devoting an energetic life to the spread of the Gospel among young men. In our next issue we hope to give some interesting notes of Messrs. Smith and McCann's tour.

We are glad to notice in The Echo a protest against the growing habit on the part of the police of allowing crowds to assemble in front of sporting centres in London thoroughfares, to the great inconvenience of the pedestrian public. It may seem a small matter, but it is a straw that serves to show how the official breeze blows, in the direction of winking at the betting mania. Our contemporary remarks that if it were a Socialistic crowd instead of a gambling one, it would speedily be dispersed. So it would if it were an open-air preaching service.

If our Saviour were in the flesh now, He would find frequent occasion to repeat the scathing rebuke given to the formalists of his day about laying stress on "tithing anise, mint, and cummin," to the neglect of the weightier matters of the law. We read in the papers of a country curate who insisted on a young lady candidate for confirmation wearing a particular kind of cap, though she strongly objected to it. The result was that she and her mother went away in high dudgeon. Such quarrels about a matter of infinitesimal import bring the sacred cause of religion into contempt.

At the anniversary of the Young Women's Christian Association in Exeter Hall last week, one of the speakers said it was the most business-like meeting of the kind he had ever attended. There was a well-arranged time-bill, and he had been carefully instructed beforehand how to direct his remarks. We wish the same could be said of all the meetings now in full swing. One fatal mistake that secretaries or committees appear to be unable to avoid is that of cramming too much into the couple of hours or less during which the meeting is supposed to continue. A chairman's speech, a detailed report of the year's work, three set addresses, besides a musical programme, not to speak of the superfluous votes of thanks—it is more than the ordinary mind can take in with advantage and profit. Where speakers are not strictly tied to time, there is the added probability that the earlier ones will entrench on the time of their successors, causing disappointment, and waste of energy in the preparation of that which cannot be spoken. Far better send the people away hungry, than gorge them to repletion, with many baskets of

There are happily evidences on every hand that Christian ministers are coming to see that recent attempts to elevate men apart from direct spiritual influences are miserably abortive. The experiment of changing man's taste bý ministering to his lower nature has had its trial, and has utterly failed to make the people right or righteous. At Walsall, Rev. C. A. Berry recently said :—

> It needs to be doubly accentuated that the Gospel seeks above all things to get at individual men, to convert and spiritualise them, and to fill the world with new-made souls.

A grand hope will dawn upon the age when all ministers come to see, and faithfully act out the conviction, that the root mischief of present alarm and foreboding is the evil spirit in man, for which there is but one remedy.

The May Meetings come opportunely. They will bring Christians into another atmosphere than that of heated political acrimony, and help us all to rise into the heights of that fellowship with the Lord where we shall judge of things in his light. In foreign mission work, whatever glaring defects are mourned, the fact is patent that during the last few years the theme of the Church's obligation to the heathen world has risen to an ascendency of appeal it has probably not had since apostolic days. It is too true that those who lag behind are numerous, but the Spirit is mightily working on a growing number, and clearly in the East the tremendous power of Buddhism is giving way. Above all things we hope that the duty of prayer for honoured missionary brethren and sisters in the field will be laid on the consciences of those who gather in these spring assemblies.

Mr. Grattan Guinness re-delivered his address on "Romanism and the Reformation" in the Pavilion and Town Halls of Brighton and Hove last week. Earnest Protestants will be glad to hear that the mission was a thorough success. If any town needs such a testimony against the Papacy, it is this gay southern watering-place, where Ritualism, which is Romanism in everything but name, has its stronghold. Mr. Grattan Guinness purposes to visit a number of our southern Ritualistic towns.

Between 3400 and 3500 readers of The Sunday at Home have sent to the conductors of that magazine lists of "the best hundred English hymns;" the result of the competition published in the May issue is eminently satisfactory. We may mention the first six on the list—which is altogether a truly splendid one :—

1. Rock of Ages, cleft for me.
2. Abide with me, fast falls the eventide.
3. Jesu, Lover of my soul.
4. Just as I am, without one plea.
5. How sweet the name of Jesus sounds.
6. My God, my Father, while I stray.

In commenting on the results of the competition the Editor says :—

> It is especially gratifying to note the clearness and joyousness with which the great verities of evangelical truth are set forth in these varying yet kindred strains. It is this which above all makes a hymn acceptable, that it is full of CHRIST.

Of the hundred chosen, Isaac Watts and Charles Wesley each furnish seven, and William Cowper and Horatius Bonar five

"Dr. Oscar Lenz," says The Times, "has a great deal to say about the British missionaries in Africa, but not much that is favourable." So much the worse for the veracity of Dr. Lenz, as facts continually recorded bear witness. The Professor adds, that the only truly successful missionaries are the Jesuits, and thinks it a pity the Protestant missionaries do not take pattern by them. Dr. R. Wardlaw Thompson, Foreign Secretary L.M.S., generously acknowledges the simple self-sacrificing life of many Jesuit missionaries in Africa, but adds :—

> Yet I think the world has already seen enough of the results of Protestant and Catholic labours among the heathen to compare the two; and I for one have not yet had cause to doubt the wisdom of Protestant methods, or the results of Protestant work.

Nor we. It is too late in the sweep of time to discuss a question only too fully answered long ago.

The Berlin correspondent of The Times says that the keynote of Prince Bismarck's recent speech in defence of the Ecclesiastical Laws Amendment Bill was "reconciliation to Rome at every cost consistent with the honour and security of the State." The past millennium, if it has proved anything, has proved that reconciliation to Rome means submission to Rome, and that at the cost of everything consistent with the honour and security of the State.

"It is in vain to talk of the beneficial rivalry of sects. This only shows that we are so much accustomed to our divisions that we are beginning to see beauty in that which constitutes our deformity and disgrace." So said that true minister of Christ, Dr. Harris, fifty years ago. We have made progress since then in the error which he deplored, and these fifty years have proved how deplorable it is, and how truly he foresaw its consequences. We hope a large proportion of our readers have read Dr. Harris's invaluable discourse. It is a real sorrow to us to think that any may have missed it.

Since making the above quotation we have read in the leading article of The Methodist Times of last week the following corroboration of Dr. Harris's pregnant words :—

> We entirely agree with Dr. Paton in the conviction that the present disunion of Christendom is the main hindrance to the progress of the Gospel. It is almost impossible to condemn too severely the bigotry and sectarianism which perpetuate unnatural divisions, and the undisciplined self-will which is incessantly multiplying new divisions. We admit that Protestant Churches have not been sufficiently alive to the scandal and weakness occasioned by the existence of innumerable sects. Too many of us have even gone so far as to glory in our shame.

The article closes with this simple but profoundly true remark :—"Visible unity will grow out of a realised spiritual unity. It cannot come in any other way." No, it cannot. No mechanical method, nothing but the fire of God's love in Christ, can by any possibility fuse us into one.

Nor can even that Divine fire fuse together the carnal and the spiritual. "For these are contrary the one to the other." The way, therefore, to unity is for each to cast out from itself the carnal and retain and increase the spiritual. Too often we are exercised by the mote in our brother's eye, more than by the beam in our own. Christ's way is for us to cast out the beam in our own eye first, that we may see clearly to cast out the mote from our brother's eye.

There are schemes and schemes afloat during this Jubilee year of grace. But not many among them sound such a note of deliverance to the oppressed, and rescue to the suffering, as that which Dr. Barnardo has shaped in his great East-end workshop, and which he is now presenting for the support of benevolent Christians everywhere. His Homes have now attained their majority, having been established twenty-one years, and during that period more than ten thousand girls and boys have been saved from ruin, educated, and brought up in useful and Christian paths.

A movement is on foot, backed up by some well-known philanthropists, for improving the position of our working-women. At a preliminary conference, held last week, it was resolved to collect and tabulate the available facts as to the conditions under which they toil, in most cases for a scanty subsistence; these facts will be presented and discussed at a public conference, about the time of the approaching Jubilee. The problem is a vast and complicated one, but that is no reason why we should not do all that is possible towards its solution. Any of our readers who can supply facts with respect to the lives and difficulties of our hard-working sisters, are earnestly desired to communicate with Mr. W. Hill, 6, Craven street, Strand, W.C.

One or two Roman Catholic organs have expressed doubts with regard to the sincerity of Prince Bismarck in his recent fulsomely expressed admiration for the Pope. The little uneasiness is perhaps pardonable, notwithstanding all the costly presents and flattering words, seeing that at no more distant date than 1875 the German Chancellor said, "The Pope is an enemy of the Gospel, he is therefore the enemy of Prussia and Germany;" and in another address, "The Holy See is a dangerous foreign power, which exerts a baneful influence upon our interior policy."

We are not aware that Rome has changed since 1875, and apparently the Prussian Protestants do not believe that Popery is less dangerous to either the individual or the State than it was when Bismarck had the courage of his opinions twelve years ago. One of the leading German papers, after asking, "What is in store for us?" says with reference to the proposal of the Upper House to set aside portions of the Falk laws :—

> We wonder what could possess Prince Bismarck that he should throw the doors of Prussia open once more to the convent nuisance. It is bad enough if we have this parasite plant all about us in the countries by which we are surrounded. All along the German frontier, in Limberg, Luxemburg, and Belgium, a whole cordon of monastic establishments has been put up ever since 1873, and they, one and all, are waiting to pounce upon us as an easy prey, so soon as our land shall have been opened again. And fancy calling this black invasion a restoration of peace among creeds.

There are now no less than twenty-seven thousand converts from among the heathen employed as evangelists to their fellow-country people, in addition to the numbers employed in teaching the Scriptures in schools and elsewhere, and two thousand five hundred of these "brands from the burning" have been ordained as ministers of the Gospel. Surely there is much encouragement to be found in these plain facts, and much cause for thankfulness to Him who has promised the kingdom to his little flock.

"THE REGIONS BEYOND."

We referred briefly in a recent issue to the special annual number of this magazine, in which from time to time deeply interesting reports of missionary work in different parts of the world appear. We have often had occasion to speak of the good tidings from far-off lands which find their way to that well-known centre of evangelistic effort, both home and foreign, Harley House. Of the extent of the work here carried on, some idea may be gained from the statement that out of the hundreds of candidates for the foreign missionary field examined within the last two years, eighty men and twenty-six women were received for training. These represented no less than a dozen European nationalities, besides a Dinka from Central Africa; and out of this number eighty-nine have already been sent out to various parts of the world to preach the Gospel. Prominent amongst the several medical missionaries, who by a long course of training have qualified for the many spheres where medicine forms so invaluable an adjunct to the proper work of a mission, occur the names of Dr. and Mrs. Alexandrian, of whose mission at Constantinople we have already given some particulars, of the Messrs. Habeeb Hanna and Jabboor, of Beyrout, and Dr. Casparian, of Van, Armenia. For various reasons this branch of preparatory study will be discontinued in the future, and the attention of students will be wholly devoted to qualifying for the work of evangelisation.

It will interest many to know that forty missionaries from the Institute are now scattered over the provinces of China, and some of them have itinerated also pretty extensively in its great outlying territories, especially Mongolia and Thibet, and one or two also in Upper Burmah. Mr. Parker has penetrated further than most into Central Asia, and purposes to labour beyond the Thibetian border, while Mr. Cameron has traversed the Empire in every direction, done more itinerant evangelisation, and effected a wider distribution of the Scriptures than probably any other single missionary.

We cannot do better now than give some account of the work of these brethren and sisters as recorded by themselves, grouping their narratives under the headings of the several countries thus represented:—

CHINA.

"I was struck," says Mr. Beynon, "with the flatness of the country—one broad, open expanse, continually dying away on the horizon; all the land under cultivation—no hedges, no green, excepting a tree here and there. Noticing the great number of graves on the vast plain, I realised as never before how many in this land pass away without ever hearing of a Saviour. Hundreds of villages we must have seen in those four days, and not a single witness for Jesus Christ in any of them! I felt at times that I could only weep. Surely there are better and brighter days for China."

Of the people and the work other missionaries give very interesting accounts. Mr. Sturman, who last year itinerated considerably in Mongolia, writes:—

"Almost every man, woman, and child one meets is saying prayers. One is struck with one thing, and that is, these people are thoroughly in earnest about what they are doing. The religion is all alive here, and I think it will be a stern fight; but we know 'his arm is not shortened that it cannot save.' No! his grace is still mighty, and will get glorious conquests in Mongolia yet.

"One young priest came several times to see us. He knew a little Chinese, and could also read the Mongolian. The last evening we were there he asked us when we were coming back, and pressed us to be sure and bring Thibetian Scriptures with us. I asked him, 'If we come here to live will you teach us Mongolian?' He seemed quite pleased at the idea, and said he would be very pleased to do it.' This looks like an open door to me, and I feel some one should enter and take possession in the name of God. He was at the inn early the morning we left to see us off, when we gave him a copy of the New Testament, which he promised to read."

Mr. D. Thompson, who has been in China since 1881, and who is stationed in the province of Cheh-kiang, describing a visit, says:—

"At Chang-shun we spent nearly three days, and I should think the whole city came to see us—500 women came at the very least, and were spoken to by my dear wife, or by myself when she got too tired to keep on longer. We observed the Lord's Supper there, nine joining in the feast. We have quite a large number of inquirers there, and hope soon to baptize a few. The Lord give wisdom and grace!"

(To be concluded.)

REVIVAL IN FINLAND.

The following is extracted from a letter from Rev. E. Jansson, a Baptist missionary in Finland. It is dated Wasa, Petalax, Finland, February 12:—

The Lord has been blessing us here this winter: we have had revivals in several places, and expect more. Eighteen persons were baptized in a country village here last Sunday, and from another village, where there has also been a revival, fifteen come to be baptized shortly.

I have just returned from a long journey, during which I travelled (by horse) over six hundred miles, to Kuojno, not far from the border of Russia. I had not visited this place since last July, and so I stopped a fortnight. The Lord has commenced a glorious work there. Many persons were converted during my recent visit. One of them was a very esteemed and noble lady; in one sense she was like Lydia the purple seller, "whose heart the Lord opened, that she attended unto the things which were spoken by Paul." In another sense she was a true picture of the woman of Samaria, who "left her waterpot and went her way into the city." For this woman went to her friends and neighbours around the city, to tell of the great things which the Lord had shown her; indeed, she stirred up the whole city. Infidels were converted, and the rite of baptism was performed in the presence of a large number of people.

This revival was mostly among the higher class, or the people of education, the others not being able to understand the Swedish language. The Governor's son was greatly moved by the Spirit of God, and he was present at almost every meeting. A church was organised there, and I hope to baptize many more there during my next visit in the summer. If I could have spoken the Finnish language, I believe half the people of that city would have been converted.

The devil is at work here, as everywhere else. I have again been threatened, and expect I shall have to answer before the high priests at the so-called Domchapter, in the city of Abo, for preaching the Gospel. It is very difficult here to get the people to believe in God. I thought the truth would have made more impression on them than it has, at least here in Petalax.

A short time before Christmas some one commenced saying:—"Jansson has stolen some money in America, and now he has been found out, and the sentence is already passed; and as it would cost too much to take him to America and punish him, the sentence is to be carried out here. The sentence says that he is to be hanged outside his chapel door on New Year's morning." I did not think that anyone with common sense would pay any attention to this. But what happened? I have scarcely ever seen so many people at our chapel as there were on New Year's morning, and many of them were people I should not have expected to see. But instead of being hanged, the Lord gave me especial grace that morning to bear witness for Him; and after the service was over I baptized two persons. The Spirit of the Lord moved on the people. Pray that God may bless the glorious work started in this desert land.

For the Young.

CHILDREN'S MEETINGS IN NEW YORK.

BY REV. E. PAYSON HAMMOND.

Dear Young Friends,—I have been holding meetings in New York City for seven weeks, and have seen many children and young people coming to Christ. I have received many letters from them, some of which have been read in the meetings, and have interested the people.

Here is one from a boy. I wonder if you, my young friend, could write such a letter. Could you give the same reasons for believing you are a Christian?

"I will let you know why I think I am a Christian. (1) I love to pray; (2) I hate all wrong ways; (3) I feel happy all the time; (4) I feel I could not get along a single day without God's help; (5) I love to get other boys to love the Saviour who has done so much for me. I wish you would pray for my father. I tried to get him to love the Saviour, but he did not care. I pray for him night and morning all the time. I have trials and temptations, but I take them to the Lord in prayer. I have a bad temper; I wish you would pray for me too.—E. L."

Here is a letter from a young girl, which, I think, will interest you. It shows you the great change children experience when they believe in the Lord Jesus Christ. You can feel that same change if you will come to Jesus, and trust in Him. Do not put it off. The longer you delay the harder it will be for you to give up your sins and trust in Christ.

"I thank you very much for talking to us about Jesus, and telling us how much He has done for us. Before I became a Christian I used to keep away from my Christian friends, because I was afraid they would say something to me about loving Jesus; and I did not want them to say anything to me about Jesus. I used to laugh, and say I did not want to love Jesus. One time I got into some trouble, and although Satan was very ready to get me to do the mischief, he left me to get out of it the best way I could. Then one of my Christian friends came to me and talked about Jesus to me, and I began to love Him and pray to Him, and He helped me out of my trouble. Now I love Him more and more every day. I didn't like to go to prayer-meetings before I became a Christian. Now I like to go. I did not like to read the Bible, and now I do. The very thing I disliked the most before I became a Christian I love the very best now: and that is to talk about Jesus."

Many children in this country have read a book of mine, called "Jesus, the Lamb of God" (published by Morgan & Scott) and have been led by it to trust in Him alone for salvation. The last chapter is for little Christians.

I think if you could look in upon some of the young people's meetings here in New York, and see how happy they are now that they have become Christians it would lead you to become one also.

BELIEVERS' MEETING, NIAGARA, ONT.—The eleventh annual meeting for Bible study will be held here July 19—28. Circulars can be had from the secretary, Rev. W. J. Erdman, 193, West Springfield-street, Boston, Mass., U.S.A.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sunday, May 1, Rom. viii. 1—13; Monday, May 2, Rom. viii. 14—27; Tuesday, May 3, Rom. viii. 28—39; Wednesday, May 4, Rom. x. 1—11; Thursday, May 5, Rom. x. 12—21; Friday, May 6, Rom. xi. 1—12; Saturday, May 7, Rom. xi. 13—24.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, MAY 1.—PSALM LXXXV.

The subject of this Psalm seems to be the return from the Babylonish captivity (whether written prophetically before, or historically after the event, matters not), but the Spirit of God uses the deliverance from captivity as typical of the salvation of God, and this is the sense in which it is most profitable for us to consider it.

1.—Thou hast brought back the captivity of Jacob.—The deliverance which God has wrought for Israel is expressed in terms which describe (in verses 1, 2, 3) the salvation wrought by Christ, including favour, or grace, ver. 1; forgiveness, ver. 2; judicial wrath satisfied, ver. 3; in other words, justification.

4.—Turn us, O God of our salvation.—The work wrought for (justification) must be accompanied by the work wrought in (sanctification). Not only must the captivity be turned, but the captives themselves must be turned or converted. —Cause thine anger toward us to cease.—The word for "anger" here is not the strong word expressive of wrath used in the previous verse, but rather "vexation" or "provocation." It is often rendered "grief," and we know (Eph. iv. 30) that the Spirit may be grieved even in those who are justified, though all judicial anger be at an end.

6.—Wilt Thou not revive us again, &c.—The Hebrew is literally, "Wilt not Thou (emphatic) return, revive us, and thy people shall rejoice in Thee." The Douay Bible, following the Vulgate and LXX., renders it, "Thou wilt turn and bring us to life."

9.—That glory may dwell in our land.—"The Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us,... and we beheld his glory," &c. (John i. 14).

13.—Righteousness shall go before Him; and shall set us in the way of his steps.—"Lit., 'and shall make his steps a way.'"—S.C. Compare 1 Pet. ii. 21.

MONDAY, MAY 2.—PSALM LXXXVI.

2.—Preserve my soul, for I am holy.—"The Hebrew word is equivalent to 'saint' in New Testament. It simply expresses the Psalmist's conviction that he is one of God's people, a child of grace."—S. C.

5.—For Thou, Lord, art good, and ready to forgive.—The symmetrical construction of this Psalm is very marked. The fifth, tenth, and fifteenth verses are a threefold assertion of God's character in very similar language, thus dividing the Psalm into three equal parts of five verses each, followed by a concluding prayer of two verses. As verse 5 records God's goodness and pardoning mercy; verse 10, his greatness and wonder-working power; verse 15, his compassion and long-suffering; we seem to have in anticipation what corresponds to the subsequent revelation of Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, and with this agrees the subject of each group of five verses. The first contains a cry for salvation, the second a prayer for help, the third for teaching and a united heart.

16.—Save the son of thine handmaid.—If the Psalm be applied to Christ these words would point to Luke i. 38; but if otherwise, the Psalmist "calls himself such as having been born into the relation of a servant; it is a relationship that has come to him by birth."—Delitzsch. In this case Gal. iv. 26 R.V. might be quoted, "The Jerusalem that is above is free, which is our mother."

17.—Show me a token for good.—Some special mark of favour, by which he may be assured that God is his God, and has "holpen" him and "comforted" him.

TUESDAY, MAY 3.—PSALM LXXXVII.

1.—His foundation is in the holy mountains.—"Not on the sand of carnal policy, nor in the morass of human kingdoms, has the Lord founded his Church, but on his own power and Godhead."—C. H. Spurgeon.

2.—The Lord loveth the gates of Zion.—It is impossible to overlook the connection between Zion, the place of "the tabernacle of David," where his peculiar worship was carried on (typi- Jesus) and that of which it was a type—the Zion referred to in Heb. xii. 22—the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem. Exclusive literalism, which refuses to see in the words "Zion," "Jerusalem," anything but the literal city, cannot hope to understand such a Psalm as this.

4.—I will make mention of Rahab and Babylon to them that know me.—Or, rather (as in R.V.), "as among them that know me." "That is, God will bring about the conversion of the oldest and most bitter enemies of Israel, and count them among his own people, who know Him and are known of Him. Of each converted individual descendant, though he be of the accursed Ham, God will say, 'This man was born in Zion.'"—S.C.

7.—As well the singers, &c.—"The words may be rendered, 'And singers with dancers (will say), All my springs are in Thee.' It seems to express the joy of the converted Gentiles, coming in a procession with singing and choral dancing to Zion, and there one and all exclaiming, 'All my springs are in Thee.'"—S.C.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 4.—PSALM LXXXVIII.

"The Bible has no poem which represents personal anguish in language more utterly desponding than this Psalm."—S.C. "The darkest, gloomiest of all the plaintive Psalms."—Delitzsch. Alexander renders "Upon Mahaloth leannoth," "Concerning afflictive sickness." The "sufferings of Christ" may be clearly seen here just as "the glories that should follow" form the subject of the next Psalm.

5.—Free among the dead.—"'One set free among the dead,' equivalent to one released from the bond of life."—Delitzsch.

7.—Thy wrath lieth hard upon me, and Thou hast afflicted me with all thy waves.—"I have a baptism to be baptized with, and how am I straitened till it be accomplished!" (Luke xii. 50).

8.—Thou hast made me an abomination unto them.—"The plural has an intensive force—as it were an whole assemblage of abominations."—Hengstenberg. Compare a similar plural intensive in Ps. xxi. 6, "Thou hast made Him a whole assemblage of blessings for ever." Both spoken of Christ.

10.—Wilt Thou show wonders to the dead?—"So far from this being an argument against the resurrection, it is Messiah's own most powerful plea for it—that otherwise man would be deprived of salvation, and God of the praise which the redeemed shall give Him to all eternity. Thou canst not show wonders to the dead as such, for 'God is not the God of the dead, but of the living' (Matt. xxii. 32). It is only by their rising to life again that they can duly praise Thee."—A. R. Fausset.

13.—In the morning shall my prayer prevent Thee.—An anticipation of the "very early in the morning" of the resurrection.

17.—They came round about Me daily (margin, "all the day") like water.—The floods of wrath spoken of in the last verse.

18.—Mine acquaintance into darkness.—"The very rhythm of the last line shows that the piece is not complete. The ear remains in suspense; until the majestic 89th Psalm shall burst upon it like a bright resurrection-morning."—Kay.

THURSDAY, MAY 5.—PSALM LXXXIX.

1.—I will sing of the mercies of the Lord for ever.—"It is the work of faith to go forth on the supposition of eternal duration at a time when everything visible proclaims near destruction, and to give expression to the determination to praise for ever the love and the faithfulness of God, at a time when everything appears to declare that He has changed his love into hatred, and has broken his promises."—Hengstenberg.

3.—I have made a covenant with my chosen.—"He who is taught by the Holy Spirit to be clear upon the covenant of grace will be a scribe well instructed in the things of the kingdom; he whose doctrinal theory is a mingle-mangle of works and grace is scarcely fit to be a teacher of babes."—C. H. Spurgeon.

10.—Thou hast broken Rahab in pieces.—Rahab stands for Egypt (see margin). "The Son of God has not only slain and laid low the Egyptians and all outward enemies, but also us in great numbers, and whose captain is the devil."—Arnd.

15.—Blessed is the people that know the joyful sound.—"Not that hear; for then the blessing were cheap indeed. Thousands hear the Gospel sound, but sometimes not ten of a thousand know it."—T. J. Judkin.

19.—I have laid help upon one that is mighty.—"Unto us a Child is born...and his name shall be called ...the Mighty God" (Isa. ix. 6).

20.—I have found David my servant.—Through David the type can be here clearly seen Christ the antitype. David means "beloved." "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased."

30.—If his children forsake my law.—Applicable, nationally, to the house of David, whom God chastened by the Babylonish captivity, for their sins; but applicable, spiritually, to all descendants of the second Adam.

33.—Nor suffer my faithfulness to fail.—"Man's faith may fail him sometimes, but God's faithfulness never fails Him."—W. Greenhill.

50.—How I do bear in my bosom all the mighty people.—Such (omitting the italics) is the Hebrew, and it expresses the shepherd care and responsibility of the Messiah, who is the subject of the Psalm. See Num. xi. 11—14. Thus ends the third book of the Psalms.

FRIDAY, MAY 6.—PSALM XC.

"The correctness of the title which ascribes the Psalm to Moses is confirmed by its unique simplicity and grandeur; its appropriateness to his times and circumstances, and its resemblance to the law in urging the connection between sin and death."—J. A. Alexander.

1.—Thou hast been our dwelling-place.—Literally, "Thou hast become a dwelling-place for us."

3.—Thou turnest man to destruction, &c.—"Thou turnest back frail men, even to crumbling."—Kay. The allusion seems to be to the sentence pronounced on man for sin (fit theme for Moses), "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return."

10.—It is soon cut off, and we fly away.—A clear intimation of the immortality of the soul.

11.—Even according to thy fear, so is thy wrath.—The meaning is well given in the Prayer-book Version: "Even as a man feareth, so is thy displeasure."

13.—Return, O Lord; how long?—Both a prayer for the first coming of Christ, and an exclamation of longing for its speedy approach.

14.—Satisfy us early with thy mercy.—"The law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ."

16.—Let thy work appear unto thy servants.—This was fulfilled when Jesus could say, "I have finished the work Thou gavest me to do."

SATURDAY, MAY 7.—PSALM XCI.

This Psalm is closely connected with the last. If that was Moses, this is Christ. If that was man failing as a sinner, this is man in Christ victorious over sin and Satan.

1.—He that dwelleth in the secret place of the Most High.—Moses (xc. 1) spoke of the Lord as the "dwelling-place" of his people, but Christ is that "secret" dwelling-place, and He is the subject of this Psalm. "The imagery of the Psalm seems to be in part drawn from that Passover night when the destroying angel passed through Egypt."—Kay.

9.—Because thou hast made the Lord . . . thy habitation.—The Hebrew word for "habitation" is the same as "dwelling-place" in Ps. xc. 1, and the difference between these two passages is important. In Ps. xc. 1, we read, "Lord, Thou has become a dwelling-place for us," and the rest of the Psalm shows the need which poor fallen man has of such a refuge. Here it is said of the believer, "Thou hast made the Lord . . . thy dwelling-place." This is the action of faith, using the refuge provided. Hence the safety and security which the Psalm declares to be the portion of the trusting soul.

11.—He shall give his angels charge over thee.—Satan was not mistaken in applying this Psalm to Christ (Matt. iv. 6). If it is applicable to the members, much more so to the Head, when Himself working out their salvation.

14.—Because he has set his love on me.—The last three verses pre-eminently point to Christ.

A NEW TESTAMENT PICTURE.

DRAWN BY

REV. PROFESSOR ELMSLIE,

At the Y.W.C.A. Anniversary, Exeter Hall.

I am going to answer a question that I am sure often rises in your hearts: How can one be a noble, good woman? How can one, without exceptional advantages—without wealth or social position, with the necessity of daily toil and with commonplace surroundings, make one's life beautiful, heroic, worthy of the love of man, and securing the approval and care of God? I have found the answer in a Bible story, among the pictures of the New Testament—one whose life was beautiful beyond compare, and whom God honoured in quite a unique fashion. She has given her name to many a modern institution, but I am almost sorry she has done it, for I believe that result of her fame has rather overlaid the real beauty of her character. It was something far more poetical and Christlike than any institution can be.

Her name in Hebrew was Tabitha; in Greek it was Dorcas; in English it means a gazelle, a fawn, a beautiful creature. She lived in Joppa, and we conclude that she lived all alone, for when she died there was no one of her kith or kin by her death-bed. She stands out on the page of Scripture a forlorn figure. If ever there was a woman who might have been excused from living a brave, heroic life it was she. But she had more sense than to imagine that a long face will give one a light heart, or that burying oneself in a dungeon is the best way to make up for the lack of sunshine in the life. As her own life had been sad, she would do her best to make the lives of others bright and cheerful.

How came it that she was so wise and brave? Because she was humble-minded. She remembered that she was only one insignificant creature in the universe. She did not imagine that the whole world was made for her, but rather that she was made for the world. Because the wheels of fate had crushed out her own happiness, it did not follow that she was released from all the obligations that rest on human kind. A woman does not need to have husband and children to live a life of tenderness, and sweetness, and unselfishness, and beauty. Where did Dorcas learn the secret of goodness, and self-sacrifice, and bravery? Where every good man and good woman has learned it—at the feet of Jesus Christ. She was a disciple, and she did not forget what that word really means. A disciple is one who looks how Christ went through the world, and sets to go with Him. It is not creeds, or professions, or intellectual assents, but obedience in daily life, in love to God and to men, like the actual Son of God and Son of Man Himself.

Having made up her mind to be brave and helpful to others, what did Dorcas do? In those days a woman could not be a preacher, as, thank God, she can now, when she has the gift. She could not start an Association like this; the world was not ripe for it then. She had not the wit to do anything very wonderful or wise; she had not wealth to build a hospital. But she had got clever fingers that could cut out and stitch garments that would be useful to the widows, of whom there were sure to be plenty in a seaport like Joppa. She did what any quiet, gentle, sweet-hearted, loving woman could do. That was all; but what would you have any good woman to be but this?

What do you say to it? "A life, homely, commonplace, unromantic; excellent and admirable, but very uninteresting." Yes; that is the sort of thing we all say about such lives. I think the angels of God up in heaven, if they do not laugh at our folly, must weep for our blindness. Dull, monotonous, prosaic, on the outside, perhaps, unbeautiful. But does not God often hide within the coarsest husks and shells the very sweetest of fruit kernels?...

This story says to everyone of you, living your plain, homely lives: Though the heart is often weary, and the flesh faints and fails, do not give in. Hold on. There are eyes that see you. There is a Heart that beats for you. And at last God will gather your life, not with Dorcas back to earth's sorrow and strife, but up to Himself, into the heavens of life and glory and light.

BIBLE CARRIAGES IN VICTORIA.

Dear Brother,—I have received very gratifying letters from the young brother working the Bible carriage in Victoria, and another young brother working the carriage in Tasmania. These two young men are natives of Ballarat, converted to God in the same city. The Lord is raising up many of these to preach the Gospel in the colony, and one here and there with gift and power. The carriage in Victoria has seen hard service since it was first launched into work two years and a half ago. It has had fire put to it; it has had stones thrown at it with such violence as to break the wood; it has been in the scorching sun till it cracks, and has been out in storms of rain, and storms of opposition from the Romish hatred to the Word of God and the infidel rage at the testimony for Christ preached from its platform. Yet the Lord gives us the victory and crowds hear the word of life, while thousands of Scriptures and Gospel books have been scattered in scores of townships and some three hundred miles away from Ballarat.

Brother Brewster is working his carriage in Sydney and has a large field before him there. The cry has come from Adelaide, "Send us a Bible carriage, if you can, for the Jubilee Exhibition." We have workers ready for it. We are only in the infancy of this work, as I believe it is preparatory to the revival which will yet burst out, as China is coming to the front. An Anglo-Chinese school in Ballarat, where the two languages could be taught, would prove a nursery for the heathen who are to be his inheritance and the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession. John Hambleton.

CASTLE YARD MISSION.

The 85th anniversary of the school in Castle-yard, Holland-street, Southwark, was held on Sunday week. In accordance with ancient custom, the proceedings commenced at 7 a.m. with a prayer-meeting. This was well attended, several friends having walked from Peckham, Clapham, and Finsbury-park. The devotional meeting was conducted by Mr. C. A. Whiten, hon. superintendent. After breakfast an excellent paper was read by Mr. Arthur Smith, bearing upon "The Teacher's Difficulties and How to Meet Them." This was followed by a profitable discussion on Sunday-school work, after which the friends dispersed to their respective schools.

A special address was delivered to the scholars in the afternoon by Mr. S. R. Copeland, who was superintendent of Castle-yard over thirty years ago. The afternoon school was followed by an important gathering of Sunday-school workers from the various schools of South London associated with Christ Church, Westminster Bridge-road. Tea was provided for the teachers and visitors, presided over by Rev. Newman Hall, supported by many friends of Sunday-school work. The President commended the efforts being made to rebuild the school in which eighty-five years of devoted Christian work among the poor children of Southwark had been carried on.

THE POOLE COLPORTEUR.—Mr. Wm. Lloyd, who for eight years has been engaged by the Poole Baptist Church in colportage work in the surrounding district, reports not only a large increase in the sales, but that there is much cause for thankfulness in the beneficial effect upon the social, moral, and religious condition of the people. Several instances of this, and of comfort gained from the visits of the colporteur, are mentioned. These visits, in some cases the only ones that poor villagers receive from godly persons, are paid monthly, and are eagerly looked forward to and much valued by many. The Bible and good healthful books are thus circulated to a considerable extent. Mr. Lloyd's address is Broadstone, Wimborne.

BIBLES IN FOREIGN HOTELS.

It may interest many, says a correspondent, to be told that Bibles have been left this winter in French hotels, to the number of 550, in various languages and large editions. The proprietors have mostly been agreeable to it, one even helping to send them to other places which we could not reach. If of the many English people who travel year after year, each family provided one hotel in their lifetime, how much this cause would be helped! Can anyone appreciate the effect of this quiet Mission on hearts that can never be reached otherwise? There are those who do it, and from Naples a request for five hundred Bibles is sent in by one traveller to the British and Foreign Bible Society, funds having been collected among the tourists at Naples this spring. To this we hope to add another five hundred, as the place is of such importance. It is with special intention no names are given of hotels, as it might do harm to the owners; but we have been much encouraged by the hotel owners in some places, as well as discouraged by others.

In Spain the eagerness for Bibles is surprising. At a railway station some one got a little New Testament; it was eagerly shown to others in the waiting-room, and we were surrounded by people wishing for them. As Mrs. Grimké's cards were read aloud, and the reference given to the Epistles or Gospels, the people more than once said, "Il Libre, il Libro de Dios," meaning they wanted to have the Bible to look it up. So we gave the New Testament by hundreds to travellers, and, in our imperfect Spanish, tried to say something about the simple truth, never entering on controversy, always answering, when asked, "Is this the Book of the Protestants?" "No; it is the Book of God to sinful man—how to find his way back to pardon and God. It is neither Protestant nor Catholic; it is God's Book;" and never have any dissentient voices been raised. "True, true," people answer; "we will see for ourselves what God says." In such a quiet way one may do much mission work, and need not live in selfish or inactive enjoyment of a time given to rest or the nursing of beloved ones.

ALBERT YOUTHS' INSTITUTE.

The second anniversary of this Institute, which is situated at Jenkin's-yard, Eagle-street, High Holborn, W.C., was recently held. The secretary recalled the circumstances of the commencement of the work among the lads, and the way in which it had prospered; and the treasurer, Mr. R. Cadogan, read a most encouraging letter from a former member who had been rescued from a life of sin, and who is now in Canada. One of the earliest members, who speaks of himself as having been picked up out of the gutter, and who was converted soon after joining, has lately gone to Buenos Ayres, where the Lord has opened a way for him; he was an earnest Christian worker and helper while at the Institute. Encouraging addresses were also given by the chairman (Mr. J. Deas), and Mr. F. C. Clark, who conducts the Sunday evening meeting. Mr. A. E. Sparrow (66, High Holborn, W.C.) is the hon. secretary, and he will be glad to give any information regarding the work, the object of which is "to bring the lads to a saving knowledge of the Gospel as it is in Christ Jesus." Friends wishing to view the Institute will be welcomed any evening between 8 and 10. A Bible-class is held every Sunday afternoon at 3.30, and a Gospel service at 7 p.m.

MISSION HALL, CHISWICK.—The sixth report of this Mission, now carried on in the new building in William-street, erected twelve months ago as a memorial to the late Earl of Shaftesbury, has been conducted with energy and zeal during the past year. The attendance of the children at the Sunday-school has been most encouraging, and the mothers' meeting now numbers over seventy members. Dinners have been given twice a week to about two hundred needy children, and in other ways much relief has been given to the poor. Mr R. P. Smith is the evangelist.

JEWISH AWAKENINGS.

Rev. J. Wilkinson, of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews, writes:—"Another important movement amongst the Jews has broken out near Buda-Pesth. The most remarkable feature of it is that Rabbi Lichtenstein, who has been brought to Christ by the reading of the New Testament alone, is still the officiating Rabbi, while urging his congregation to accept Jesus as Messiah and Saviour.

"A day or two ago I heard of another Rabbi having confessed Christ in Galicia. It is evident the Lord is about to do wonderful things amongst his ancient people. Rabinowitz and Lichtenstein have both been brought to Christ by the New Testament, applied by the Holy Spirit. What an encouragement to distribute widely that precious Book in Hebrew!

"Further, several of us have been praying for some years, and are still praying, that the Lord would give such a mighty movement of the Holy Spirit amongst the Jews throughout the world as the Church has never witnessed since Apostolic times. He seems to be giving the answer; we will begin to praise Him, and continue in prayer, in which we affectionately ask all Christians to join us."

Mr. Wilkinson has also forwarded to us some most interesting letters which he has received from Mr. Baron, who, with Mr. Barnett, is evangelising amongst the Jews in Austria, Hungary, Bohemia, and Galicia. We append some extracts from the letters.

VIENNA.

We commenced mission work after much prayer and counsel with several of the Lord's servants here. There is no need to seek for a Jewish quarter, for every street nearly swarms with Jews, who number over 75,000. But oh for the freedom of England! The law forbids us to give them a Bible or New Testament to guide them to Jesus Christ and heaven. We made a strong effort to obtain permission, but with no success.

By the Salzgries, the lower part of which used to be the Jewish quarter, the Gallician Jews especially congregate. There we reasoned and conversed with group after group for a long time. We asked one old man what his hope for eternity was, and he opened his coat to show that he wore fringes (Num. xv. 38). We urged him to trust in the Messiah, and he thankfully accepted a Testament, which he promised to read.

Another Gallician, whom Mr. Schönberger sent to us, exclaimed as I spoke of the New Testament: "Oh, what a glorious book is this! The teaching in it is so noble and grand; no one ever spoke like Jesus. Why should our people in their ignorance reject such a treasure? I am a teacher, and because I teach the sayings of Jesus I lose ever so many pupils." A Jewish medical student was in the room, and he also is not far from the kingdom of heaven.

PRESSBURG.

This picturesque old town on the Danube, which used to be the capital of Hungary, has a population of 50,000, of whom more than a fourth are Jews. There is a Rabbinical School of great fame, at which Jews of all ages, but mostly old men, from various parts of Hungary and Gallicia, gather to study the Talmud. At breakfast we had the opportunity of testifying to some rich Jews about Christ. Then we went outside and spoke to one group after another, until we reached the Jewish quarter. Here after earnest conversation with several we were stopped, for the alarm had spread, and Jews from all parts flocked together, some fanatical Talmudists stirring them up against us. "Brethren," cried one, "beware of these fishers of souls. They want to lead you to destruction. It is not lawful even to go near them; they are like lepers who ought to go about crying 'unclean, unclean.'" Then there was a rush upon us, and a cry of "Let us stone them!" But thanks be to God our Protector, we were not stoned.

Then we returned, but after dinner Jews began to flock to our rooms in parties of seven or eight, and though boisterous at first they gradually became most attentive and respectful listeners to the Gospel. Several Talmudical students left their addresses to have Hebrew Testaments sent to them. If we appeared outside, a crowd would follow, some of whom kept crying, "Tell us, is Messiah come already?" "Is Jesus of Nazareth the Messiah?"

One Sabbath, seven wealthy, intelligent merchants from various parts of the Empire gathered in our room. Eagerly they put one question after another in a most earnest, inquiring spirit, asking if Moses and the prophets really spoke of Jesus, and wanting to see the passages with their own eyes. "It is all nonsense," says one, but he is soon put down by another who stands up, and with many gesticulations says, "It is no folly; it is truth, and I declare these men are right. They do not tell us to forsake God, but to worship Him in spirit and in truth, and not in mere forms and ceremonies. They say that Jesus Christ was the One sent from God, human, and at the same time divine." Then handing us his card he says, "Gentlemen, I live in Epirus; come there; I will welcome you; I will join you." "But do you mean to say that this is Christianity which we see around us?" asked the objector. "This cannot be a true religion." "Believe me," quaintly replies a third, "if Christ had known that Catholicism would be the outcome of his doctrines He would have wept. No, Catholicism is not true Christianity, but these gentlemen have told you they are not Catholics." And so the little meeting breaks up, but everyone leaves his card, begging for a New Testament to be sent to him!

In a letter written from

BUDA-PESTH,

Mr. Baron thus speaks of Rabbi Lichtenstein, whom he visited at Tapiszsela:—

He has taken upon himself the task, as he himself expressed it to us, "of making the name of Jesus Christ popular with the Jewish nation, and of lifting up the Gospel as the only source of spiritual renovation." He is an old man, with an honest, open face, a tender heart, and a soul which is sincerity itself. It was by no human teaching that he was brought to a knowledge of Christ. He could not tell, he said, how the New Testament found its way into his house, but the anti-Semitic movement which instigated the Tizla-Ezlar trial, and the, to him, remarkable spectacle of Christian professors and pastors from various parts of the world writing in defence of the Jews, made him study it, and the more he read the more the beauty of the character of Jesus opened before him, until, "driven against himself by the Spirit of God," he felt obliged to publish "My Testimony," the first of three pamphlets, setting forth Jesus as the Messiah.

Living in an out-of-the-way place, he is unconscious of the sensation his pamphlets, which are being circulated by thousands, have created. He only knows that his testimony has set many wolves ready to devour him, but he has counted the cost and risked all for his convictions, and now, though severe is the test and heavy the trial through which he is passing, so that his aged head is bowed with grief, he stands firm. He was summoned before a synod of all the great Rabbis in Buda-Pesth, but to the universal clamour for recantation he was indifferent. All sorts of falsehoods are being circulated concerning him. Some say that he is mad, others that he has received a large sum of money from missionaries to write as he has done. Now they demand that he should resign his post as Rabbi, which is his only means of subsistence. He has presided over this community for thirty-five years. "Last week," said he to the writer, "three Rabbis came here, and after trying to stir up my people against me, they came to my house and argued with me for a long time, trying to persuade me to renounce my new position. They were at first clamorous and noisy, but before leaving the most zealous of the three asked me for a Hebrew New Testament, as he would like to examine it for himself. I had just one to give him."

Rev. Andrew Moody, of the Scotch Free Church in Buda-Pesth, has largely helped to scatter his pamphlets, and the Rabbi has also received a very friendly letter from Professor Delitzsch. Not long ago his daughter was married, an expensive event among Jews. The Rabbi, whose income is small, being short of funds, a Jewish friend pressed on him the loan of 250 florins, saying it did not matter when it was returned. But now that he has taken up this position, this Jew, out of spite, has called upon him, in the public papers, to pay, without any previous notice. The same morning a Roman Catholic priest, whom he had never seen before, called at his house with 250 florins, begging him to accept of them, which the old man gratefully did, but at the same time frankly told him that he must not consider him as in sympathy with the Romish system of Christianity. He has since repaid part of this sum. This shows how Jews will act to those of their brethren who dare lift up their voice in favour of Jesus.

A SAD DISASTER.

With very great regret we hear of the loss sustainedby the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen, as announced in the following telegram received by the director, Mr. E. J. Mather, last week:—

> Cardiff, April 20.—Steamer Australia, of and from Bremen, light, arrived here; when off Beachy Head, Sunday, about midnight, going full speed, ran into and sank yacht Breeze, of Cowes. Four of yacht's crew drowned; only survivor, John White, landed here by Australia.

The Breeze had only just been presented to the Mission, and was being brought round from Fowey to Yarmouth. The only man saved is John White, son of the skipper of the Mission smack Ashton. Of those lost, one leaves a widow, another a widow and three children, and the third a widow and seven children. The fourth, who was chief clerk of the publication department, had been connected with the Mission since its establishment, and, needing rest, was on the yacht for a holiday. His aged parents were entirely dependent upon him.

We are sure we may bespeak the heartfelt sympathy and prayers of our readers on behalf of the relatives so suddenly bereaved; and we trust that this sad calamity will gain for the Mission new and earnest friends, and so strengthen the hands of those engaged in a most interesting but dangerous work.

THE GOSPEL IN BRAZIL.

Mr. Vanorden says in a report issued concerning this work, that so immense is the field in Brazil that one thousand preachers of the Word of God could be employed at once, and within one year each one of them would be able to organise a small church.

Associated with Mr. Vanorden are Revs. Mr. Chamberlain and Mr. Menezes, and at many places where evangelistic services have been held, eager audiences have gathered to listen to the Gospel message. Mr. Chamberlain says concerning one of these missions that in twenty-five years' experience of Christian work in Brazil, he has rarely if ever had the privilege of addressing on successive nights such large and attentive audiences as recently. Several churches have been organised during the past year, and, though in some places there is persecution, it is evident that the Lord has opened wide the door for the Gospel ministry in this land. But the husbandmen are few.

Mr. M. H. Hodder, 27, Paternoster-row, E.C., represents Mr. Vanorden's mission in this country.

SERVANTS' HOME, NORWOOD.—The report of the first years' work in connection with this Home shows how much may be done by willing hands. About fifty girls, many motherless, have here found protection and shelter, and the workers have had the additional joy of leading many to the Saviour. Seventy of those who attend the Bible-class on Sunday afternoons have signed the pledge. An iron room is much needed for cookery classes, &c. Mrs. Woodford Fawcett is the hon. president, and the Home is at 435a, Norwood-road, S.E.

TO OUR READERS.—FIFTH LIST.

Letters to the Editor.

MRS. BUTLER'S RESCUE WORK.

Dear Sir,—During Canon Butler's prolonged illness on the Continent and my own enforced absence, I was obliged to abandon a great portion of my rescue work. As soon as I returned home, however, applications came in upon me from all sides to receive poor girls. It is exceptionally difficult for me to bring out, as is usual, any explicit report of the work, because it is peculiar. Cases are sent to me of a difficult and painful kind, in which the friends or the victims themselves desire perfect secrecy. They come to me, in fact, to be concealed, helped and saved. I need not tell your readers that some of these cases are of the most harrowing kind. Frequently they come here after having knocked in vain at many other doors, the peculiarity of their case making it difficult for others to receive them. Need I say more? I think those who have known anything of the work in which I have been engaged will trust me, and their kind hearts will perhaps be touched when I tell them I have completely come to an end of my resources for this work. I have recently received over £100 for the Riviera sufferers, chiefly in very small gifts, and I need not say I shall be thankful for every shilling for the rescue work. Clothing or house linen, or any such useful articles, might be sent to Mrs. Saunderson, Albert Cottage, High Cliffe, Winchester.

THEOLOGICAL TRAINING IN INDIA.

Dear Sir,—I have read with very great surprise the following statement in Gen. George Anderson's letter, on behalf of a proposed Theological Hall at Scharumpur, that "The missionaries in China act wisely in training natives of the country to teach and preach Christ. And now the Americans are teaching British missionaries what plan they should adopt." See The Christian, April 14.

I have not access at this moment to the reports of other societies, but the following list of Theological Training Colleges, gathered from the Report for 1885—6 of the Church Missionary Society, is quite enough to show that the training of a native agency in India has long been an ordinary branch of this Society's work, and probably of all other societies.

Calcutta Divinity School, twelve students. North-West Provinces Divinity School, Allahabad. The number of students is not given, but the subjects studied show a most important and thorough work.

Lahore Divinity School, no numbers. Divinity Class, Karachi, 3 students. Theological Class, Madras, no numbers. Two students were ordained during the year. Training Institution, Masulipatam, 39 students. Cambridge Nicholson Theological Institution, Cottgam, 19 students. Kopay Training Institution, Ceylon, 39 students.

The number of native agents employed in India, by this society alone, are given in the same report, as follows:—Native Clergy, 132. Native Lay Agents, 1693. Native Lay Agents, Female, 414.

This gives a total of 2239 native preachers and teachers, who must all have undergone training, now employed in one society alone, and many more must have laboured and "fallen asleep."

Faithfully yours, C.

CHRISTIANS AND POLITICS.

Dear Sir,—However men may differ on public questions at present, in one thing all are agreed, that a time of great anxiety is at hand. There are indications fully justifying the fear expressed by men well qualified to speak, that, besides the momentous issues involved, there will probably be an excitement and bitterness of feeling such as has been seldom witnessed. Such a season is a "perilous time" to Christians. Will you allow one who during his whole life, now nearly approaching the "threescore years and ten," has not shrunk from taking his share in the duties of a citizen, to utter a word of warning in view of the impending conflict.

First, to Christian laymen. There is a danger from the extreme importance of the questions themselves, and from, it may be, the imperative sense of duty which leads private Christians into the strife, of their forgetting what is due from those who take "the meekness and the gentleness of Christ" for their pattern—a danger of their speaking of fellow-Christians in such words as may provoke, not to love, but the reverse. "If ye bite and devour one another, take heed that ye be not consumed one of another."

The writer does not speak without experience. He can recall occasions when, from being engaged for the time in active evangelistic work along with Christian friends from whom he differed widely on a matter of public interest, he saw it his duty, for the time, to keep back from joining an organisation to promote the views which he held upon that question, "lest it should hinder the Gospel of Christ." He never saw cause to regret it. He can recall a scene now fifty years ago of great excitement—a hustings on which the eyes of the whole country were fixed. Two deacons of the same church stood on that hustings, but on different sides. Each had a prominent part assigned to him. Both were worthy men, who "served their own generation by the will of God, and have" long since "fallen on sleep." But there was a difference; an on-looker in the crowd remarked to another bystander on the two political deacons. "Yes," was the reply; "but the one is a politician only so far as his religion will permit him, the other is a religious man so far as his politics will allow."

A word to Christian ministers. While most certainly they are not exempted by their position from the duties of private citizens, surely they will admit that these occupy a secondary place to the duties of pastors of the flock of Christ and ministers of the Word of God. Whatever would militate against the success of their labours, as such, should surely be avoided. Everyone has to make a choice at times between two duties, which has the greater claim upon him. This consideration may well make pastors refrain from taking an active or prominent part in political conflicts—on one side or other—even as private citizens, in order that they "may not hinder the Gospel of Christ." Still more, surely, ought it to prevent them from coming forward singly, or in conjunction with others, as ministers, in political strife. Let him take his side if he will as a citizen, a member of the commonwealth, but as a minister of Christ's Church—never. "No soldier in service entangleth himself with the affairs of this life" (2 Tim. ii. 4, R.V.).

I need scarcely add that if, in the providence of God, any servant of Christ seems to be called to take a prominent part in any new movement for reviving the work of God in the Churches, or for special evangelistic work outside the Church, the consideration will apply with greatly increased force.

Lastly, to Christian Churches or denominations. It may—it certainly will—prove most disastrous if Churches as such—Assemblies, Unions, Synods—enter upon the discussion of political questions however important. These gatherings are made up of delegates from congregations. They are presumed to represent these. Consequently, the public questions on which they give a deliverance may and ought to be discussed in the congregations which send these delegates. If so, farewell, I fear, to spiritual life in these Churches. This is not mere speculation. It has been matter of observation that in so far as ecclesiastical bodies have intermeddled, as such—in political questions—has spiritual power declined.

I trust I shall not be misunderstood. I repudiate the teaching of those who say that a Christian man should have nothing to do with choosing legislators to make laws, or magistrates to enforce them. Far from it. It is his duty to take his part, only seeing to it that Christian principle regulate him in that duty, just as it should rule him in his duty in his family and in his business. It is a totally different thing for a Christian Church.

"Sirs, ye are brethren." "Take heed lest ye fall out by the way." An Old Disciple.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—Prayer for blessing on the following special missions:—Rev. William Haslam, at St. Mary's Church, Hammersmith-road, West Kensington, to May 3; Rev. W. Hay Aitken, at Enniskillen, Ireland, to May 9; Mr. W. R. Lane, at Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road, E.; Gospel addresses by Lord Radstock, at Conference Hall, Eccleston-street, S.W., on Sundays in May; Mr. Opie Rodway, at Baptist Chapel, Putney, S.W., April 30 to May 3.——For blessing on meeting for young converts and others, at "The Welcome," Cross Key-square, on Thursday, May 5.——For blessing on a visit from Mr. Oscar Owers, Mr. Hudson Taylor, and others, to the Union Tabernacle Wandsworth-road, S.W.

RAGGED SCHOOL MISSIONS.—The Duke of Westminster presided last week at an influential meeting called to consider the necessity of sustaining and extending ragged school missions in the Metropolis. Mr. J. Kirk (the secretary), in a brief account of the work of the Ragged School Union, said there were no less than 50,000 children attending its 200 schools. The chairman pointed to the fact of the considerable decrease that had taken place in the number of children convicted of crime, as proof that education had a great effect in this direction. Not the least of the many improvements which had marked the last fifty years had been brought about by the Ragged School agency, with its 3800 voluntary teachers. Lord Mount-Temple and General Phayre both spoke of the value of this work, which Rev. Dr. Paterson characterised as one of love, and therefore would go independently of their sympathies and efforts.

Among the Churches.

* We shall be happy to receive from our readers brief items of news for this page, respecting Christian work carried on, or progress achieved, in connection with any evangelical church at home or abroad.*

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The Bishop of Liverpool preached at St. Saviour's, Southwark, on Tuesday evening last, on behalf of the special fund to raise £100,000 for Guy's Hospital.

The Bishop of Rochester, in opening his new Deaconess Home at 6, Park hill, Clapham-park, expressed the hope that it might become a centre for woman's missions to women in the diocese.

A Cabmen's Club has been opened in Pickering-place, Westbourne-grove. The club-room is the outcome of the cabmen's division of the Church Society, which has four branches, and a membership of 400. Attached to the club is a library, a slate club, a goose club, and a provident club for the wives.

On Easter Sunday the new church in the Via Babuino, Rome, was opened. It is handsome, and capable of holding 700 persons. The services on Easter Day were all ritualistic. Some older residents have felt regret in seeing the church outside the walls closed. In its earlier days a simple evangelical service was held there, but it is some years since it passed into High Church hands. Happily, at Trinity Church, in the Piazza San Silvestro, evangelical services are conducted, and many are glad to attend where they can worship in simplicity, and find a pure Protestant ministry.

METHODIST.

There has been an increase of seventy-five members in the Oxford Circuit during the quarter.

During the last eighteen months the work of the ladies' sewing meetings at Penrith has produced about £800.

During Rev. T. Waugh's mission at Burnley there were about three hundred and twenty grown-up seekers of salvation, besides many children.

A Bible-class, carried on for nine years by Mr. C. R. Parsons in the Old Market-street part of the Portland Circuit, Bristol, now numbers 500 members.

A mission-room opened not twelve months' ago in Charles-street, Newark, has already a membership of twelve, and a Sunday-school of seventy children.

Revival services have just been conducted at Launceston, by Rev. Thomas Cook. Large numbers of people from the country districts around attended.

Captain Warner Dennis has concluded a successful mission in the Wesleyan Chapel, Iverton. Many souls have been brought to Christ, and believers greatly blessed.

Special mission services have during the winter been held in the fourteen chapels and mission halls of the Burnley Circuit. In many the results have been very encouraging.

Revival services, conducted by Mrs. Jackson, of Glasgow, in Newcastle-upon-Tyne First Circuit (Primitive Methodist), have resulted in a hundred and thirty cases of conversion.

At the close of a mission at West Cowes, conducted by Mr. Potts, 256 converts answered to their names, the greater number being over sixteen. The mission bands, which did good work, are still continued.

Mr. James Dickson, a soldier evangelist, has been labouring in the Enniskillen District for the last six months. Much blessing has resulted; many have professed conversion.

A twelve days' mission at Bodmin, conducted by Rev. E. Davidson (connexional evangelist) has been much blessed to the quickening of the members of the church, and the conversion of many of the young people.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Mr. William Ewing will go out to labour with Dr. Torrance, in the Medical Mission established there by the Free Church of Scotland.

At mission services at Durham-road Church, Gateshead, conducted by Mr. Stewart, the pastor, seventy persons made a public confession of faith.

Mr. Andrew Allan, who has just completed his divinity course at Edinburgh, has been appointed by the Free Church to form a charge at Barberton, Transvaal. He sails this week.

At the closing meeting of a Bible class held during the last six months in connection with St. George's, Sunderland, forty-seven prizes were presented to the young people who had not been once absent.

Dr. Marshall Lang, of Glasgow, suggests that the Established Church Assembly should appoint a commission to take evidence as to the extent and causes of the drifting of so many thousands from religious ordinances, and what should be done to make the ministrations of religion more adequate and efficient.

SALVATION ARMY.

Within the last fortnight "expeditions" have left England for Holland and Copenhagen.

Over one hundred good cases of conversion are reported since the corps was opened at Buckingham.

At an Easter gathering at Swadlincote, in the Derby district, many testified to being saved through the Army.

The head-quarters building, 101, Queen Victoria-street, had recently a very narrow escape from destruction by fire. A good deal of damage was done in the lower part of the building.

A report from the Yeovil section states that in the first year, since its formation, 1100 persons had come to the penitent-form, 565 had become soldiers, 14 corps had been formed, and 25 outposts.

General Booth is maturing a scheme for providing wooden barracks for village work by which he expects to provide additional accommodation for 200,000 hearers, 40,000 soldiers, and 4000 officers.

The Army is said to be spreading in Canada. Among the Indians on the Grand River Reserve, Ontario, they have a corps of one hundred red men, who meet in the council chamber by permission of the chief.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

Mary Sessions, of York, widow of the late William Sessions, a minister, has been recorded a minister.

By invitation of Sheffield Friends, George Wood has held a fortnight's mission there. Many conversions were the result, and many, too, joined the total abstaners.

R. J. & M. J. Davidson were to start, in the first week in March, on their journey of two months up the river Han to Hamkung, China. The district is a needy one, and there is more than ordinary openness for the Gospel. Dr. Wilson is there already.

A three weeks' Gospel Mission has been held in Cardiff. Thomas Houston, the "Blind Irish Evangelist," read and sung and spoke the Lord's message, and about seventy souls professed either conversion or restoration. The Cardiff Meeting-house has this year been the scene of many conversions, but this Mission has crowned all.

On March 11, an "all-day meeting was held for thanksgiving and praise," to celebrate the event of a hundred conversions, as the result of a six week's mission in Waynesville, Ohio. About sixty of those converted requested membership in the Society instrumental in their blessing, and nearly a similar number formed a Y.M.C.A.

The Western Quarterly Meeting at Worcester on April 20 was a time of special interest. Henry Stanley Newman and wife were present on their way home from Palestine, and gave, by request, a deeply-interesting description of Friends' Missions in Ramallah, Brumana on the Lebanon, and Constantinople. The missions are very satisfactory, although Turkish misrule is everywhere awful in its degrading and blighting influence.

"FALLEN ON SLEEP."

Mr. Charles Bassett, J.P., for many years circuit steward of the Pontypridd Methodist Circuit.—Mr. J. Hammond, of Cheadle, one of the Deed Poll members of the Methodist Connexion.—Mr. William Scrymgeour, of Dundee, well known as a Methodist preacher and temperance adxocate.—Mr. Thomas Beves, of Tunbridge Wells, an acceptable local preacher and diligent class-leader at Vale Royal Chapel.—Mr. William Leak, ex-sheriff of York, a prominent supporter of the Methodist Church in that city.—Rev. David Berry, of Hammersmith, a Presbyterian minister.—Rev. John Smith, of Edinburgh, who fainted while delivering his first sermon to the congregation at West Port. He had laboured for eleven years in Shettleston.—Rev. Charles Gowar, of Thatcham, for thirty-four years a Congregational minister.—At Adelaide, Australia, Mr. Ernest Hebditch, only son of Rev. S. Hebditch.—Mr. Henry Clayfield, for fifteen years deacon, and for twenty years superintendent of the Sunday-school of the Church at Blakeney.—Rev. Martin D. Livingstone, of Simcoe, Ontario, where he had ministered for over fifty-one years.—Mr. William Thomas Moxon, of Pontefract, an earnest member and liberal supporter of the Methodist cause.—Mrs. Hannah Crooke, of Lytham, one of the oldest members of the Methodist body in Lancashire.—Mr. John Allmand, a prominent member of the Congregational Church, Chester-street, Wrexham.—Mr. W. Evans, a well-known member of Salem Church, Portmadoc.—Rev. Octavius Davies, Vicar of Tregaron and rural dean.—Rev. W. Vaughan, for twenty-seven years minister of Darfield-street Baptist Church, Bradford.—Mr. Lancaster Webb, of Combs, Suffolk, a prominent Cougregationalist.

Dr. H. M. SCUDDER, of Chicago, after a ministry of forty years, has decided to go to Japan for the remainder of his life as a volunteer Christian worker.

AN AFRICAN PRINCE.—The King of Cherbio, a large country on the West coast of Africa, on his death-bed committed his son to the care of the American missionaries, who sent him to the United States that he might receive a Christian education. In addition to a good range of study, he has learnt printing, and given himself to mission work. With his wife, a highly educated young coloured girl, he sailed from New York, Feb. 22, for Cherbio, where, under the auspices of the Moravian Missionary Society, he hopes to lead his compatriots to a knowledge of the Gospel. The Bible not yet having been translated into his native tongue, he intends to set about the work, and to publish a journal.—L'Evangéliste.

ZAMBESI.—News has been received up to December, 1885. On October 11, after a most difficult journey, M. Coillard and his waggons reached Safula near Lealuyi in safety. After preparing the foundation of a station, he returned to Sesheke for his wife, who had remained there with Mdme. Jeanmairet, his niece, the latter having given birth to a daughter in September. There are now, therefore, two French stations on the Zambesi, Sesheke and Safula.——From Loanda we learn that the American missionaries of Bihé received a letter from M. Coillard, dated December 14, 1886, which had come by land. This is, doubtless, the first time that this route, explored by Livingstone, has been used for postal communication between Europeans.—Journal des Missions.

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

CHICAGO.—The Central Mission Sunday-school has 4500 names on the books, and an average attendance of 3000. The only teacher is Mr. Holmes, the superintendent, who is helped by twenty monitors.

THE BELGIAN EVANGELICAL SOCIETY has not been hindered in its work by the return to power of the clerical party. On the contrary, it seems as though the people had never been so seriously disgusted both with the Church of Rome and with Free Thought.

MONTAUBAN.—The Consistories of Orleans, Vigan, Saint Quentin, Brest, &c., have unanimously decided to send to the Minister of the Interior and of Public Worship a protest against the nomination of the liberal or free-thinking M. Allier to the Theological Faculty.—Le Christianisme.

THE CONGO REGION.—Dr. Wolf has found on the borders of the Lornami, thick forests abounding in elephants and crocodiles. There are also many towns of 10,000 and 15,000 inhabitants. At the death of the king Leckengo more than 1000 slaves were massacred. Dr. Wolf had seen whole villages living in huts made in the branches of high trees.

THE PARIS FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY.—The committee met on April 4, and acknowledged with gratitude to God that, although some large sums of money had been given for the new Congo Mission, and for the new mission house, they yet expected there would be no deficit in the current income, while the old debt has been reduced from nearly £2500 to almost half that sum.

HERR SCHRENK, formerly a missionary, now evangelising in Germany, has been in Frankfort fifteen days, where the evening meetings have had an average attendance of 2500. At Bremen, where he stayed twenty-five days, the Bible-readings from eleven to twelve were much appreciated. Thence Herr Schrenk went to Heidelberg. It is pleasing to note that most of the pastors give him cordial help.

PROTESTANTISM IN FRANCE.—Our excellent American contemporary, Christian Thought, states that in 1813 Protestantism in France did not count 150 pastors, and had not a single establishment of charity, education, or evangelisation, but that she now has 900 pastors, 37 homes for orphans, 42 retreats for the aged, two convalescent reformatories for prisoners, and asylums for the blind, deaf, and dumb.

BERLIN.—A Convalescent Home for governesses, nurses, and other workers, of which the Princess Imperial is the President, is about to be built. It is proposed that about forty such tired-out or sick ladies may be received.——The Amalienhaus in Berlin, for the training of respectable girls for service, needs the help of ladies willing to teach and train the sixty girls usually there. Though not called a Deaconess House, it is practically such.—Anzeiger.

COREA.—The treaty concluded between this country and France is more favourable to religious liberty than that made by England. The latter allowed the study of the two languages, the French treaty in addition permits them to be taught. The English passport permitted English subjects to travel in the interior for commerce or pleasure. The French treaty has no such restriction, so that missionaries may teach and travel as they please.—Le Christianisme.

RELIGIOUS LIBERTY.—A Roman Catholic Paris journal, L'Univers, says, "Religious liberty implies denial of truth and its divine essence. Toleration is a deceptive word, which serves only to conceal religious indifference. The political necessity of sometimes submitting to divers forms of worship is sorry progress. Equality of worship is decadence. Le Témoin de la Verité says, What would become of us Protestants if these gentlemen should again be our masters?

DR. BAEDEKER.—My way seems to be made clear for another evangelising tour in Russia. I hope to leave England on the 25th inst., and am anxious to secure the prayers of God's people on my behalf. As hitherto a door of entrance has been opened to me in Russia, I am eager to use the opportunity given and to go forward once more. I hope to spend some little time in the Baltic Provinces, and afterwards to go to the south of Russia.

F. W. Baedeker.

Wart Eck, Weston-super-Mare.

M. REVEILLAUD has been giving lectures at Lyons and St Etienne on "Democracy and the Gospel," &c., which the secular papers say have been well attended, and have produced a profound impression. At the close of one meeting an anarchist inquired if M. Reveillaud had ever seen God, to which he replied by saying, "Have you ever seen your brain?" This nonplussed and silenced the questioner. M. Reveillaud, through fatigue, has been obliged to interrupt his evangelistic tour by a few weeks' rest in Africa.—Le Christianisme.

DISCHARGED PRISONERS IN PARIS.—In 1839 Elizabeth Fry established a prison visiting committee in Paris, one of whose members, the active, venerable Mlle. Dumas, still lives; and though ninety-six years of age, she is still engaged in helping female liberated prisoners. The committee consists of eighteen or nineteen ladies, who visit St. Lazarre six times a week, besides Sunday afternoons. The lady-agent also visited the prison 237 times in 1836, and by her efforts was enabled to procure the immediate liberation of sixty persons.—Le Christianisme.

M. DIETERLEN, of the Mount Hermon Station, South Africa, says the year 1886 has been one of important material labour, in the way of chapel-building, &c., and has proved that the Bassoutos value the Gospel and know how to pay for its spread by hard work. At Bougallo, heathen and Christians, men, women, and children have made bricks and mortar in order to hasten the completion of the chapel. Without this help it would have been impossible to have erected such a spacious place of worship; and this is by no means a solitary case. But this hearty goodwill does not, alas! mean that the workers are converted.

The Queen's Jubilee

AND THE

TWENTY-FIRST YEAR of 'Dr. BARNARDO'S HOMES.'

AFTER careful consideration, the Trustees and Committee of "Dr. Barnardo's Homes" have decided to celebrate the 50th Anniversary of our beloved Sovereign's accession to the throne of this realm, and the Majority, or 21st Year of life, of the "Homes" themselves, by an endeavour to enlarge the scope of these comprehensive and national Institutions, thereby placing them upon a still wider and more solid basis.

THEY are convinced that no object can well be conceived more in harmony with the tender and womanly sympathy ever displayed by Her Most Gracious Majesty towards the suffering and the sorrowful, or more likely to be in accordance with Her own wishes, were she free to express them, than a project to promote the extension and increased usefulness of Institutions like these, whose chief work it is to rescue friendless and orphan children from the perils of the streets, and to afford to them not only education, useful training, and Christian care, but also all that is involved in the endearing names of "Home" and "Friend."

HERE, then, is the Scheme proposed for the hearty co-operation of all loyal subjects of Queen Victoria who love and pity helpless little children, and who may be willing, at one and the same time, to raise in Her honour and on their behalf an Enduring Memorial, the benefits of which shall be lastingly recorded in the history of multitudes of young lives.

1. TO establish in a central position a Shelter for Homeless Street Children, to be called the Jubilee Shelter, which shall be always open, night and day, to afford immediate and temporary succour to any little waif or stray who seeks admission. This Shelter would soon become an important feeder of the Parent Homes —a kind of net thrown out into the wide sea of London child-life, into which many of those "ready to perish" would be gathered.

2. TO develop, under skilled and competent control, the 5,400 acres of land already acquired in Manitoba (N.W.T. of Canada), by the establishment thereon of an Industrial Farm for the employment of the older and rougher lads rescued from the streets and low lodging-houses of our great cities and towns, and trained in the Labour House for Destitute Youths in East London. The whole settlement in Manitoba, some seven miles square, and charmingly situated near Birtle, on the Shell River, is to be called, in honour of the Queen, Victoria Regina.

3. TO rebuild the Infirmary, for Sick Children of the absolutely Destitute and Homeless class, already in operation in Stepney, but which, owing to its small size and grave structural defects, is unfitted for its purpose, and which has therefore long since been condemned. The new building, which will have all modern appliances needful for the medical and surgical treatment of 65 little patients, being most urgently required, has already been begun, and will be called Her Majesty's Hospital for

4. TO erect in our Village Home for Orphan and Friendless Girls at Ilford, Essex, a Memorial Cottage, to shelter in perpetuity twenty little rescued "waifs," who will therein find a happy home. A freehold site stands ready amid the fifty other buildings which constitute the Village; and there it is hoped may soon arise the new Memorial Cottage, to be called simply The Queen's Villa.

5 TO redeem and set free from Rent, Mortgages, and all other Charges, several of the Parent Homes (already in occupation) upon which rents and interest of mortgage have to be paid, thereby relieving the Annual Income of a heavy and continuous drain.

TO accomplish the whole of this Scheme, the Committee and Trustees of "Dr. Barnardo's Homes" propose to raise a Jubilee Fund of £50,000, in two several sums of £25,000, one of which shall be collected from among the existing Donors, and the other from the General Public.

AS regards the first of these amounts, it is estimated that if the very large number of Donors already on the books of the Institutions are willing each to contribute The Small Sum of Ten Shillings, the £25,000 required would be at once supplied.

BUT the Committee and Trustees of Dr. BARNARDO's Homes now earnestly appeal to Christian people generally for donations towards this Jubilee Fund, in the hope that they will respond in sufficiently large numbers to secure the collection of the other moiety of £25,000.

IF each reader of this advertisement will, within one week of observing this notice, send to the office of the Institution a Jubilee Gift of not less than Ten Shillings, the sum required from the General Public (£25,000), will in all probability have been received before the Twenty-first of June, the day fixed by Her Most Gracious Majesty for the celebration of the 50th Anniversary of Her Reign.

JUBILEE GIFTS of any amount in response may be sent direct to the Offices, 18—26, Stepney Causeway, E.; to the Bankers (London and South Western Bank, Bow Branch, E.; and Messrs. Dimsdale, Fowler & Co., 50, Cornhill, E.C.); or to any of the following:—

MENTONE.—Pastor Delapierre, in acknowledging the receipt of 500 francs from a reader of Le Christianisme, says the distress is great. Many of the houseless poor are sheltered in tents, but the recent rain has made the earth damp and very cold, causing much sickness. Blankets, bread, and hot milk are supplied to the extent of his ability. The pastor's wife has improvised a workshop in the church, where about twenty poor women earn their living by sewing. The English committee provides soup and other help. All are doing what they can, but there is yet much misery, and

VERY URGENT.—The Committee of the INDIGENT BLIND VISITING SOCIETY APPEAL for AID under exceptional circumstances. The Society was founded in 1834 to ameliorate the condition of the indigent blind of London. Its work and usefulness have increased year by year until it now regularly visits and assists nearly 900 of the poorest and most deserving of the blind. Many, being aged and infirm, receive weekly or quarterly pensions varying from £6 to £20 per annum; and upwards of 400 are receiving elementary education in the Society's classes, held in different parts of the metropolis. The claims upon the Society have become increasingly numerous and pressing, while its income has not been equal to the expenditure, thereby causing a serious deficit. Under these painful circumstances the Committee most earnestly plead for help.—Contributions will be gratefully received by W. C. LESTER, Secretary, Office, 27, Red Lion-square, W.C.

SIXPENCE (Post Free), or Large Edition (cloth), 1s. 3d., from the Author, Coombe Lodge, Peckham, S.E., and Elliot Stock, 62, Paternoster-row, E.C.

The Twentieth Series of Weekly Cases is now publishing, from February to April.

NOTICE TO THE READERS OF "THE CHRISTIAN," WHO MAY BE PERSONALLY OR RELATIVELY INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.
CONSUMPTION—CASE of Mrs. PRICE, WATERHOUSES, Co. DURHAM.

Brought under my notice by Mr. J. Raw, of Waterhouses Station (N.E.R.), Durham.

This patient's husband is engaged at the Mission connected with the Church where Mr. Raw is deacon. About twelve months since Mr. Raw wrote me, saying:—"She is in the first stage of consumption, and spits a large quantity of matter with admixture of blood."

I sent medicine at low charge (the patient being very poor) at Mr. Raw's recommendation and request. She got quite well in six months.

The husband writing me in December last, says: "My wife was very bad when Mr. Raw wrote for her. It is a wonderful cure. You have, indeed, saved her life, by God's blessing.

Mr. Raw at the same time writes:—"The medicine you so kindly supplied has quite restored her."

In a postscript to his letter, he also speaks of another case:—"I got Mr. Bowes, a friend of mine, to try your medicine for his son, who was very low. He is improving, I am glad to say, and getting stout."

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

REV. A. T. PIERSON, D.D., PHILADELPHIA.

THERE seems to be some subtle quality in the rare American atmosphere, that we do not find in these eastern climes, that gives to our cousins across the Atlantic the alertness, push, and vivacity which so generally characterise them. In these respects Dr. ARTHUR T. PIERSON, whose portrait we give to-day, is typical of his race. Slender in figure, he shows as much vitality and vim as would suffice for any three ordinary sons of steady-going "John Bull." What position this go-aheadism might have gained for him in the department of commerce or politics we cannot attempt to guess; what it has done for him, in the good providence of God, is to give him a leading place among the evangelical pulpit luminaries of to-day, in a land where almost every man considers himself fit to rule the Senate or to fill the Presidential Chair.

Whether or not Dr. Pierson is a born preacher, he was certainly born to preach. He has been doing little or nothing else since he was twenty years of age; he is now fifty. A native of New York city, he gained his first experiences of Christian work in destitute parts of that capital. There he learned the secret of self-possession in extempore speech—a secret which many a member of our British House of Commons, and many a paper-bound preacher, would give something to acquire to the same degree. Of his early religious impressions we know nothing, but it is on record that he was admitted to the fellowship of the Presbyterian Church at the age of fifteen.

After passing through college and theological seminary, he was "licensed" to preach, by the New York Presbytery, at twenty-three, and some months afterwards was installed as pastor of a church in Binghampton, N.Y. This, curiously enough, was a Congregational church; but the custom of pastoral interchange between one denomination and another appears to be a thing as common in America as it is rare in Great Britain. Three years later he returned to the Presbyterian fold and successively filled pastorates at Waterford, N.Y.; Detroit, Mich.; Indianapolis, Ind., and Philadelphia, where he still ministers to the well-known Bethany Presbyterian Church.

(From Photograph by Mr. J. E. Watson, Detroit, U.S.A.)

The most striking event in Dr. Pierson's ministerial career was that which happened during his pastorate in Detroit. There he met with a crisis, both in his inner and outer life, which has left its impress deeply engraven on heart and method. The story of this change will be best told in his own words, as contained in a personal narrative which was published some two years ago:—

In January, 1876, I found myself pastor, already for seven years, of a large, wealthy church (in Detroit), with one of the finest and most elegant church buildings in the whole land; with everything to gratify a carnal ambition, worldly ease, and the desire for human applause. I had been led by a most singular searching of heart to see that I had been more or less making an idol of literary culture, intellectual accomplishment and worldly position; and, a few months before, I had solemnly renounced all these things, that I might be a holier and more useful man. I saw that I was not largely blessed as a winner of souls. For the first time in my life I had no conscious idol in my heart; but for the first time I had also a blessed consciousness of real communion with God in prayer. I was especially led to ask, with peculiar importunity, that I might in some way be enabled to reach the multitudes of unsaved souls who were around us, but outside of the churches. The clear and positive conviction absolutely possessed me that this prayer had been inspired of God, and would be answered in a marked way that would show the hand of God. This solemn persuasion was communicated to my wife, but to her alone, and we joyfully and trustingly waited for God's full time to come for Him to fulfil this desire and prayer.

On March 19, 1876, the Lord's Day, unusual power was given me in preaching; and in the evening I felt so strongly that the time was very near when God would reveal his right hand, to give me new access to unsaved souls, and particularly the non-church going masses, that I felt constrained to communicate my feelings to a brother clergyman, who, at my request, remained after the service to talk with me. The next Friday evening, March 24, at the church prayer-meeting, as a pastor, I frankly opened my heart to my beloved people. I spoke to them as to the obvious lack of power in the church to reach these neglecters of worship, and I remarked that our costly, elegant and superb church edifice perhaps tended to repel the poor, and make them feel not at home.

For many months the hearts of pastor and people had been getting wedded and welded in closer sympathy, and that night there was a certain indescribable melting of souls into unity, as though the Spirit were fusing us all together. I drew involuntarily near to the praying assembly, and descending from the pulpit into the very midst of the people, opening the Bible, I read the prominent promises to praying souls, one after another, in such a way as to lead our hearts up, from the broadest and most general, to the highest and most specific.

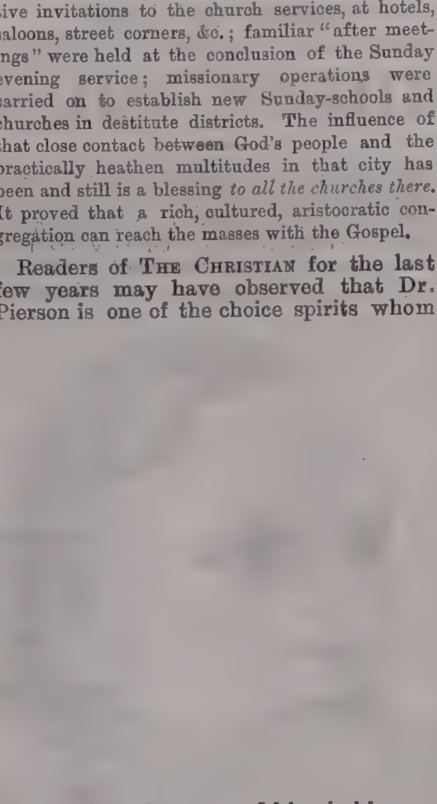
The effect of this grand climax of Scripture testimony was to drive out unbelief and fit us all to pray in faith. I knelt among them, and we, together, earnestly besought God to remove even a mountain obstacle that might hinder us as a church from effectually reaching the unsaved. We felt the Spirit almost as vivid as a visible presence, interceding within us "with groanings which cannot be uttered," for a true revival of God's work, a new Pentecost of Power, that would draw the masses to us, or inspire us to go to them and win them. No one who was present will ever forget the solemnity of those moments, when a whole people wrestled with God for a blessing. While we were praying, that church building was already burning. When the prayer ceased, we found the room partly filled with smoke, but attributed it to the contrary wind which was driving down the flues. In fact, the fire had ignited the lath near the smoke-pipe, and was slowly working its way behind the plaster, and so escaped detection, though several of us made a thorough search, after the assembly was dismissed.

Early the next morning the flames burst forth after their long confinement through the night, and laid the beautiful building in ruins. I felt, in common with many devout souls, that this was God's way of opening the door, great and effectual, to the neglecting and neglected masses about us, and that this was the grand significance of this whole event. We at once secured the Grand Opera House, where, for sixteen months, I preached the Gospel, extemporaneously, confining my themes to the great central truths of salvation, and with a marked blessing on my work. More souls were hopefully converted in one year than in the whole of my previous ministry; and, what was the most remarkable fact of all, the converts were almost exclusively from those "outsiders," whom the church had hitherto failed to reach, but toward whom our hearts had been specially drawn; from the day of that fire the Fort-street church, of Detroit, was, and still continues to be, largely attended by the class of people whom we had found it so difficult to reach or attract before. The extemporaneous preaching of a simple and free Gospel for sixteen months, in a place of popular amusement, somehow drew us to these neglected masses, and drew them to us, and the effect has been to change the relation of that church to the whole community, and greatly increase its power for good.

In the study in the tower of the church-building was a large mass of manuscript matter not hitherto used, but of great value to me in preaching, containing Scripture studies, plans of sermons, &c. The tower of the church acted like a chimney, and there the flames raged hottest. The study table was so burned, that nothing that could be consumed escaped, except that manuscript matter, which was found essentially unharmed in the ruins. No philosophy of mine can account for its rescue; but it impressed every one as another mark of the hand of God! Mr. George Müller was so impressed with these events, as showing the unquestionable interposition of God that, at his request, I sent forth a tract, called The Pillar of Fire,' in which a simple narrative of the Lord's dealings with me and my people was given.

It ought to be added, that that noble Fort-street church, of Detroit, though they did not see their way clear to adopt their pastor's plan and build a large plain tabernacle and make it absolutely a free church, did, by a vote that lacked but two of unanimity, make the evening service as free as the Opera House, and the pew-holders renounced voluntarily all right in their pews at that second service. But, best of all, the atmosphere of the church was changed; instead of the former comparatively cold and indifferent attitude of the people toward the "masses," every effort was adopted to make them feel that they were wanted. We had plain congregational singing; young men went by the score every Sunday afternoon to distribute attractive invitations to the church services, at hotels, saloons, street corners, &c.; familiar "after meetings" were held at the conclusion of the Sunday evening service; missionary operations were carried on to establish new Sunday-schools and churches in destitute districts. The influence of that close contact between God's people and the practically heathen multitudes in that city has been and still is a blessing to all the churches there. It proved that a rich, cultured, aristocratic congregation can reach the masses with the Gospel.

Readers of The Christian for the last few years may have observed that Dr. Pierson is one of the choice spirits whom Mr. Moody gathers around him in his conferences at Northfield. Among the men, deeply taught of God, who gather there, none excel him in extensive acquaintance, both with the letter and the soul of Scripture, or in lucidity of exposition. Indeed, the marked peculiarity of his present teaching and preaching is its Biblical character. His studies, we believe, are almost confined to the Word of God in the original tongues. His method is systematic to a degree. His motto is, "Search, meditate, compare." In his favourite copy of the Bible he has written at the beginning of each book a synopsis of its contents, besides much marginal matter, which makes the volume thoroughly self-contained, and one from which, at any moment, he can pour out a flood of pungent, practical talk, drawn from the hoarded stores of memory, and suggested by his own annotations. During last year's "Summer School for Bible Study" among students at Mount Hermon, it was something to see the way in which the worthy Doctor kept the young men's pencils going. In half an hour he gave them matter enough for two months' rumination. He addresses Sunday-school teachers in Philadelphia, at the Y.M.C.A. Hall, on Saturday afternoons, without denominational distinction, and has an audience of from eight to twelve hundred.



Bible study is not Dr. Pierson's sole "hobby"—a hobby, by the way, which it is impossible to ride to death. He is equally intense on the subject of foreign missions. In speech he is clear, precise, and intellectual, rather than pathetic; but few men, we venture to say, can give a more rousing and stimulating presentment of the claims of the wide, wide world, on the Church of Christ. In this matter of taking the Gospel to the unevangelised heathen, he is entirely a man after Mr. Hudson Taylor's heart. He believes the thing can be done in a very few years if the Church will but yield to the promptings of the Holy Ghost, and put a united shoulder to the wheel. To the cold and calculating eye of prudence some of his ideas may seem Utopian, as, for instance, his proposal, broached at Northfield two years ago, that there should be a World Conference of all the evangelical churches, in order that they might at once apportion out between their forces every unevangelised spot on the known surface of the globe. No doubt it can be done; few of us, however, have the faith to believe that it will—just yet.

Last year Dr. Pierson published two books, one on each of his pet subjects. "Many Infallible Proofs," (published at 5s., by Mr. F. H. Revell, of New York and Chicago), is "a series of practical chapters on the Evidences of Christianity, or the Written and Living Word of God." An enthusiastic reviewer thus describes it:—

> It sweeps along, with his matchless method of accumulative reasoning, like a resistless tornado, gathering volume and force as it goes, till seemingly no sceptical theories can stand before his arguments.

His other book, "The Crisis of Missions" (James Nisbet & Co.), was lately reviewed in these columns. We may again quote from a trans-Atlantic Review:—

> Surely if the inspiration and the force of this book were imbibed and felt by the whole sacramental host, there would be a mighty uprising, a grand anointing, and a holy crusade, to storm the kingdom of darkness all along the line.

These utterances will serve to show that Dr. Pierson's fervour of thought and feeling is not dissipated by being filtered through his pen. That pen, we may add, is kept nearly as busy as his tongue. He writes much, and his contributions are distributed over some thirty different religious magazines and papers. And this in addition to his preaching and pastoral work in connection with Bethany Church, which itself constitutes a vast field of effort, chiefly among the working-class. The buildings, embracing the Church and Sunday-school Hall (each capable of holding 2500 to 3000 persons), cover half a block, and represent a money value of 250,000 dollars. The fame of Bethany Sunday-school, for size and perfection of arrangement, has gone throughout the world. In this building a lay college is held from September to May and something is going on almost every evening. There is an assistant pastor, and a large corps of earnest workers. Bethany Church is practically under the free-pew system. Gospel services are kept up most of the year in a mission tent, and conversions are constantly taking place.

Dr. Pierson believes that modern preaching, as a rule, aims at literary excellence rather than saving power. It lacks Biblical matter and spirit, and fails to drive the arrows of conviction home upon the individual conscience. Churches are too costly and exclusive, and the Gospel is not carried to the poor. Dr. Pierson is himself a proof that there need be no mutual repulsion between culture and Holy Ghost power. His knowledge seems to be encyclopædic, but instead of smothering, it only serves to feed, the flame of his untiring zeal.

THE WITNESSING CHURCH.—6.

A MISSIONARY SERMON

By the late Rev. JOHN HARRIS, D.D.

(Concluded.)

(4) And is not greater liberality wanted? "To this fact [the need for increased liberality] I should not have alluded on the present occasion as a distinct topic, did I not read that this society has missionary agents to send, did it only possess the pecuniary means for employing them. Christians of property, shall this statement become an accusation? Can you think of all that is implied in it, without feeling as if a burning truth had fallen upon your naked heart? Can you know—as some of you must—that you are at this moment holding in your possession that which would send some of those agents to the ends of the earth?—can you know this, without hearing that property cry out and give witness against you? On the second occasion referred to, the well-known liberality of Manchester Christians at the anniversaries of their auxiliary to the London Missionary Society, naturally called forth a wish that "every town were, in this respect, a Manchester!" but accompanied with an intimation that "even then the question would not be irrelevant." Not that which waits for public excitement—that which gives, not a little from much, but much from a little—that which brightens into cheerfulness, and rises into prayer, as it casts its gift into the treasury, saying, "May this be a witness for Christ." The liberality wanted is that which shall induce the wealthy Christian parent to offer up his pious son on the missionary altar, and to lay beside him, at the same time, whatever may be necessary to make the oblation complete. The liberality wanted is that which shall constrain the wealthy Christian to ascend that altar himself, taking with him all he has, and offering the whole as a missionary oblation to God. Talk not of sacrifice; do you forget that the world has been redeemed by sacrifice? Do you remember the nature of that sacrifice? Oh, if you really know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, let the Church but sympathise with Christ in the travail of his soul; such acts of self-devotion would become of frequent occurrence, and new songs would burst forth in heaven.

(5) The history of the Church would justify, and its present position demands, an increase of energy and zeal. I say this, not so much in relation to our missionaries as to our churches. He must be ignorant, indeed, who does not know that rashness often passes for zeal, and that the path of wisdom lies between a blind impetuosity on the one hand, and a cold calculating policy on the other. But blind must he be, also, not to perceive that much in the Christian Church, at present, which assumes the name of prudence, is timidity and unbelief in disguise; that, as missionary witnesses, we treat with God too much in the commercial spirit; that we do not trust Him to any large amount; that we look too much at funds in reserve, and too little at promises in reserve. "Prove Me, now, saith God, whether I will not open the windows of heaven to bless you." But who thinks of accepting the generous challenge? Does not our conduct, in effect, reproach the first witnesses, and charge the confessors and reformers of later days with guilty rashness? If we are only prudent, what were they? Imprudent men, to venture life so recklessly as you did! Imprudent consequences so little, and to think so much of the future! And how insensible must you have been to say, when all the engines of martyrdom were brought out, that none of these things moved you! And how presumptuous to affirm that the promises of God warranted such zeal! How would you have stood corrected now! How much more cheaply might you have purchased distinction in the Church now! But if distinction was your aim, well is it for your present fame that your zeal burned so long ago; for, though your names are now on every lip, and we boast that God raised you up, you could not now repeat your noble deeds without endangering your fame. Yours is zeal to be admired at a distance!

And yet, brethren, theirs, in truth, is the energy we want—the zeal of a Paul, and the first disciples; of a Luther, and the early reformers; of a Brainerd, and our first missionaries—a zeal that would startle the Church; ay, and be stigmatised by thousands of its members, as what zeal has not been?—zeal that would be content to be appreciated a century hence. The zeal wanted is that which, while it invites prudence to be on its council, would not allow her to reign—which, while it would economise its means, would be too frequent in its demands on the funds of Christian benevolence to allow them to lie long at interest—anniversary zeal made perpetual. The energy we want is that which springs from sympathy with the grandeur of our theme, the dignity of our office, and the magnificence of the missionary enterprise. Oh, where is the spiritual perception that looks forth on the world as the great scene of a moral conflict, and beholds it under the stirring aspect which it presents to the beings of other worlds? Where are the kindled eye, and the beaming countenance, and the heart bursting with the momentous import of the Gospel message? Where the fearlessness and confidence whose very tones inspire conviction, and carry with them all the force of certainty, and the weight of an oath? Where the zeal which burns with its subject, as if it had just come from witnessing the crucifixion, and felt its theme with all the freshness and force of a new revelation?—the zeal which, during its intervals of labour, repairs to the mount of vision to see the funeral procession of six hundred millions of souls—to the mouth of hell to hear six hundred millions of voices saying, as the voice of one man, "Send to our brethren, lest they also come into this place of torment"—to Calvary, to renew its vigour by touching the cross—to the spot where John stood, to catch a view of the ranks of the blessed above. Enthusiasm is sobriety here. In this cause, the zeal of Christ consumed him—his holiest ministers have become flames of fire; and, as if all created ardour were insufficient, here infinite zeal finds scope to burn, "for the zeal of the Lord of hosts shall perform it."

(6) And where is this flame to be kindled?—where is the live coal to be obtained but from off the altar? It was there the witnesses of Christ, in every age, found it; and there they kept it bright and burning. It was there that Christ Himself sustained that zeal, in the flames of which He at last ascended as a sacrifice to God. Nay, what was that atoning sacrifice itself, but a more intense prayer for the redemption of the world—the prayer of blood—a prayer so ardent that He consumed Himself in the utterance—a prayer which is ascending still, and still filling the ear of God with its prayers derive their prevailing power. And what was the object of that bleeding intercession? and what did He Himself regard as the full answer to it? What but the advent of the Spirit, as the agent of a new creation? O Christians, is there such a doctrine in our creed as the doctrine of Divine influence? Is there such an agent in the Church as the Almighty Spirit of God? Is He amongst us expressly to testify of Christ—to be the great animating spirit of his missionary witness, the Church? and is it true that his unlimited aid can be obtained by prayer—that we can be baptized by the Holy Ghost and with fire? O ye that preach, "believe in the promise of the Spirit, and be saved." Ye that love the Lord, keep not silence; send up a loud, long, united, and unsparing entreaty for his promised aid. This, this is what we want. And this is all we want. Till this be obtained, all the angelic agency of heaven would avail us nothing; and when it is obtained, all that agency will be unequal to the celebration of our triumphs.

Witnesses for Christ hear the conclusion of the whole matter: the cause of your Redeemer has come on in the heathen world—the cause of human happiness; the destiny of immortal myriads is involved, and the world is hushed, and waiting to receive your evidence. By the love of Christ, will you not go and testify in his behalf? The destroyer of souls is witnessing against Him; and millions are crediting and confirming the dreadful testimony: will you not hasten to testify for Him? Mahometanism is denying his Divinity, and is placing an impostor in his stead—will you not attest that there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we can be saved, but the name of Christ your Lord? China is denying his existence, and one-third of the human race believe it; will you not go to proclaim, "This is the true God, and eternal life"? Hindooism is affirming that his name is Juggernaut, and that He—your Lord, the Saviour of the world—that He loves impurity and blood; and millions believe it; will you not go and attest that "his name is Jesus, because He saves the people from their sins"? Shall his Cross have next to no witnesses of its benevolence? shall his blood have no tongue to proclaim his efficacy? his cause no friends to espouse it? Witnesses for Christ, your Lord is in India, awaiting your arrival. He has obtained a hearing for you; and He is on the plains of Africa, at the gates of China, in the temples of Hindostan, calling for his witnesses to come and testify in his behalf. And shall He call in vain? He is saying in his Church to-day, not for the third, but for the thousandth time, "Lovest thou Me?" Then, by the blood which redeemed you, by the benevolent design of that redemption, that you might be my witnesses, by the wants of the world, waiting to hear you proclaim my grace, and perishing till they hear—by the certainty of your success, and the glories that would result from it—by the power of that Cross which is destined to move the world—awake, arise to your high prerogative and office; call down the aid of the great renewing Spirit, and let every creature hear you say, "We have seen, and do testify, that the Father sent the Son to be the Saviour of the world." "Ye are my witnesses."

THE UNDYING WORM.

By Dr. ALEX. WHYTE, Edinburgh.

[In the May number of The Christian Treasury (Marshall Bros. 6d.) there is a very remarkable discourse by Dr. Whyte, from which we extract the following; we advise our readers to peruse the whole of the preacher's pronouncement on this terrible theme.]

No man in this life, not even the man who has studied the Book of God, and his own heart, and the moral and spiritual laws of God best, knows what the unquenchable fire means, nor what it is to be. Christ said there were many things impossible for Him to tell his disciples, but He told them enough to save their souls from Tophet. No doubt it was impossible even for Christ Himself to tell us what the fire of hell in reality is. The whole state of human existence after death, and especially our existence after the day of judgment, is so mysterious—it must be in everything so unlike our present state of existence—that it may have been impossible even for Him to tell more than He has here told us. He is our sole and supreme authority on all matters connected with sin, death, and judgment. He has left other fields for other men to explore, but He alone knew this field, and He has explored it for us. And three times in this passage, as if to show there can be no mistake about it, He employs the terrible figure of the "unquenchable fire." Since He is silent as to what the fire is, we cannot so much as touch the border of the mystery that hangs about the dreadful word. But we will surely, if we are sane, pray and labour and suffer, as He demands, so that none of us and none of our children shall ever make the horrible discovery as to what the fire really is. God keep us all out of it!

The unquenchable fire we cannot in this world either taste or understand, but the undying worm we all taste. That cruel worm is already at work in our own souls. What is the worm that dieth not, but a sin-laden conscience awakened when it is too late; when the day of mercy is clean gone for ever, and the door of hope is shut and locked? Whether the worm, now gnawing in any bosom here, shall ever die, or shall go on increasing to all eternity, is being settled by each of us, moment by moment. In some men's bosoms the pain of that worm is raging incessantly, bleaching their faces, making their hair grey, because its time is short. In many a man this worm is almost asleep because it has all eternity before it, to waken up and do its work.

We do not need to go beyond Scripture to study this worm of remorse, for this, like everything else, is in the holy Book. We hear the cry of this awakened conscience in Cain, in Saul, in Judas. And all profane literature, worthy of the name, is full of the same horror; because literature is life, and life is full of that horror. Our own hearts, alas! are not stainless. There are men and women here, whose ashy faces this day show that they are suffering from that which no physician can get at—the sleepless tooth of the worm of God. Moralists and theologians call it remorse; Christ calls it the undying worm. In truth it is God Almighty Himself. It is the righteous Judge, in his righteous anger, making his wrath felt in those who are preparing themselves to be the vessels of his wrath. But when all is said, this remains true, that in no living man has that worm ever awakened in full fury, not even in Judas himself, or in the most miserable man here who has sinned against light as

What a book the Bible is! and what a fool is he who neglects or goes against it. What discoveries it makes to us of things otherwise undiscoverable and unimaginable by us. It opens at one time the eternity of the past, and shows us our election of grace; at another time it shows us the eternity that is to come, where we see our fathers, and the saints before us, rejoicing in glory. It takes us to Gethsemane, and leads us up to Calvary; while again, under its awful guidance, we stand in anticipation before the great white throne. It shows us the sons of God in the glories of heaven; it lays our ear to the door of hell, and lets us hear the weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth of old fellow-worshippers, as they lie with the fire around them, and the undying worm in their bosoms.

With all our sleeping draughts and comforts we cannot command a quiet night here in our earthly bodies. When the remembrance of the past begins, our midnight bed is sometimes let down as with coffin curtains into the caverns of Tophet, and we taste in the night-watches a little of what an eternity of remorse will be. No wonder they say in the morning, "You have not slept." We were remembering our lifetime. We saw the long-forgotten past in the light of God's law. Like angry ghosts there stood around our bed the souls whose destruction we had a hand in long ago; the households we have ruined; the hearts we have broken or beclouded, and boasted about it; the friends we have betrayed; the men whose good name we have done our best to dishonour. What a company, like a nest of hornets, passes around our bed, till we are able to say that we understand now, better than all our teachers, what is the worm that dieth not, and the consuming fire that is not quenched. If one night watch on earth can be made so terrible, what will the awful night be on which no morning will ever dawn?......

Son, daughter, remember thy short lifetime! And in all your remorse, and repentance, and reformation, and restitution, take with you that which alone has power to kill the undying worm. Take with you that which alone can quench the flames of hell; that which alone can speak the peace that passeth all understanding to the guilty conscience; and that which alone can turn away from you the wrath of God. Take this with you: "If we confess our sins He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins." Thus "the blood of Jesus Christ, God's Son, cleanseth us from all sin."

HOLIDAY HOME, SOUTHEND-ON-SEA.—The first anniversary of this institution was celebrated on April 22 in the rooms of the Y.W.C.A. The benefit the Home had been to many, both spiritually and physically, was amply testified to. The Committee hope that a new Holiday Home, which is greatly needed, may be established for factory girls, where during the winter girls may be trained for domestic service.

THE "STRANGE TRUE STORIES" of the Pall Mall Gazette constitute an entirely new feature in journalism. For our part we think the stories, to judge from the first one, are likely to do good. They will open the eyes of the English people to such facts as these: that men in "good society" can commit the most callous and infamous cruelties without suffering any social penalty; that lawyers of reputation will take up the most awful cases of injustice, and use all their power against the weak and oppressed, if they are only paid well enough; and that even in this democratic country it is next to impossible for a wronged and suffering man, and even more a wronged and suffering woman, to obtain redress. The state of our laws, and the code of morals which obtains in the legal profession, may well make every decent Englishman hang his

AN INVITATION FROM MR. MOODY.

To the Christian Undergraduates and Students of the English, Scotch, and Irish Universities.

At my invitation, students from probably more than one hundred universities and colleges in America, will meet at Northfield, Massachusetts, from June 30 to July 12, 1887, for Bible study and conference together, concerning the extension of Christ's kingdom among students and their relation to the evangelisation of the world. Some of the most prominent Bible teachers of America, and some, it is hoped, from Great Britain, will be present and help us in the study of the Word.

I hereby cordially invite the Christian students of each of the British Universities to be represented at the meeting. Select as far as possible those undergraduates who will return to the university next year, that they may bring back to their fellow-students the benefit they may receive. Mr. J. E. K. Studd, who has been in Northfield, and is also familiar with the Inter-Collegiate Young Men's Christian Association work of America, through which this meeting of students is called together, can give you all necessary information.—Yours in the Master's service,

Chicago, Ill., April 16. D. L. Moody.

I sincerely hope many of the undergraduates from our universities will be able to avail themselves of Mr. Moody's kind offer. They will be most hospitably entertained in one of the loveliest places of America, and will certainly gain fresh ideas on Christian work. I shall be delighted to give any further information to those undergraduates who propose going.

OUR SOLDIERS.

Dear Sir,—Those of your readers who are interested in the Portsmouth Soldiers' Institute will rejoice to know that the Lord continues to bless. We have crowded meetings each Sunday, and never without spiritual blessing. Lord Radstock has been visiting us lately and specially addressing the soldiers. Mr. Thomas Hogben's visits have also been greatly owned of God, both among children and adults. One dear little lad, who gave his heart to Jesus last December, has been rather suddenly called home. His oft-repeated prayer, "Please, God, bless dear father and make him sign the pledge," has been answered already.

We had tried vainly to get Mr. Payson Hammond for children's meetings last summer, but God is now saving many dear children here without any use of extraordinary means. Besides the Sunday evening meeting, twenty-eight others are held in connection with our Institute work each week. We should be glad to welcome more workers here.—Faithfully yours,

Sarah Robinson.

AGED PILGRIMS' FRIEND SOCIETY.—Over eleven hundred pensioners, living in all parts of the country, are now on the books of this Society, and upwards of £7,200 per annum are expended in pensions alone. One hundred and eighty of the pensioners have peaceful abodes in the Society's four Homes. The Society, within the lines of Protestant Evangelical Christianity, is undenominational, and asks the support of the Lord's people for the Lord's aged poor. The committee are endeavouring to raise a "Jubilee Fund" for the support of the Hornsey Rise Asylum, particulars of which are given in the Society's last Quarterly Record which can be obtained of Mr. J. SOLOMON'S TEMPLE.

LECTURES BY MR. T. NEWBERRY.

THE OUTER COURTS.

Mr. Thomas Newberry, of Weston-super-Mare, has lately been exhibiting his beautiful model of Solomon's Temple at the Mildmay Conference Hall, and giving daily lectures thereon. One evening he described the walls surrounding the courts, with their gates, chambers, and other particulars. The passages of Scripture read before the lecture, and which prepared the way for an understanding of the many details touched upon, were Ezekiel xl. 35 to end; Jer. xxxiv. 18 to end; and Heb. x. 19—22.

Mr. Newberry concentrated attention on the north inner gate, and especially on the eight tables of hewn stone (four within and four without), on which the victims brought for different offerings were to be slain. Much helpful instruction, and much light upon various portions of Holy Scripture, are to be gained, he said, from a consideration and interpretation of these. Upon these tables, not only were the victims slain, but their various parts were laid, together with the instruments by which they had been slain. This affords a beautiful illustration of the ancient mode of

CONFIRMING A COVENANT.

It was argued that the Hebrew word variously rendered covenant and testament in the Authorised Version should always be translated covenant, and that Heb. ix. 17 should read, "a covenant is of force over the dead; otherwise it hath no force at all while the covenant victim lives." The Hebrew word for covenant signifies an agreement confirmed by sacrifice, and hence when it is said such an one made a covenant, the Hebrew word meaning to cut is used. The Greek language has no corresponding word for that in the Hebrew: none which gives the exact import of the Hebrew covenant. The inspired writers were, therefore, obliged to use that word in the Greek which was nearest in signification to it, and that word was one meaning a disposition or arrangement of affairs which becomes of force after the death of the testator. Hence the confusion between the two words, and it is well to remember that this is the true meaning of the word in the New Testament—a covenant ratified by death, confirmed by a victim slain. A covenant was made by dividing the victim and laying one part over against the other, the party or parties entering into the covenant passing between these divided parts. In Gen. xv., when God entered into a covenant with Abraham to give him the land, He confirmed or ratified the covenant in this way. He bade Abraham take various victims of three years old, to divide them, and lay one part over against the other. This Abraham did, and then, when the sun went down, there appeared a smoking furnace and a burning lamp, which passed between those parts. Thus God, under the emblem of a consuming fire and a bright and glorious light, passed between the parts of the sacrifice, and confirmed the covenant made. So in the portion we read from Jeremiah, we see that the Jews, their rulers and leaders, had made a solemn covenant after this manner; and, when they violated that covenant, God took the matter into his own hand.

Mr. Newberry passed to a consideration of the passage read in Heb x., "Having therefore, brethren, boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, by a new and living way." That word, rendered new, signifies newly slain. After the parts were washed, they were laid on the altar, and then the fire being kindled, the smoke thereof ascended as a sweet savour to God. Through Christ's death and resurrection we have access to the Father. Having entered by the "new and living way, which He hath consecrated for us, through the veil, that is to say, his flesh, let us draw near in full assurance of faith." What is set forth on the one hand by the rent veil of the Temple was more graphivictim hanging on hooks and lying on tables on either side. What an idea this gives us of the newly-slain and living way! How it illustrates God's way of access through Christ's death and resurrection, that thus it is through the death and sacrifice of the high priest, Christ Jesus, we have boldness to enter into the presence of God!

Other spiritual truths connected with this part were also dwelt on, bringing out that we have not only the privilege of entering into the presence of God, of thinking of his justice, his loving-kindness and goodness, but we have a charge to keep. We are to guard the great and important truths connected with the sacrifice of Christ; we are to keep charge of Jehovah's house, to worship Him in reverence and godly fear.

THE LAVER AND THE BRAZEN SEA.

In another lecture Mr. Newberry very beautifully brought out the spiritual truths typified in these important parts of the Tabernacle in the wilderness, and of Solomon's Temple, showing the close connection there was between the two. The portions of Scripture read were, Exodus xxx. 17—22: 1 Kings vii. 23—39; Ezekiel xlvii. 1—12; and Rev. xv. 2.

The laver in the wilderness was, we may conclude, supplied from the waters of the smitten rock, because, apart from that rock which followed them, and which typically represented Christ, there was no water. At the beginning of Israel's wanderings, Moses was commanded to take the rod with which he had wrought so many wonders and plagues in Egypt, and smite the rock, thus bringing to mind those passages, "Awake, O sword, against my Shepherd, and against the Man that is my fellow." The spiritual rock was smitten, and the water drawn forth when the soldier pierced the side of Him who had already breathed forth his spirit into the hands of his Father, and from whose side forthwith came there out blood and water. But at the close of Israel's wanderings the water failed, and, thereupon, Moses was commanded to take, not the rod of judgment wherewith he had wrought the plagues in Egypt, but the rod that had been laid up in the sanctuary, which had budded and blossomed and brought forth fruit, even Aaron's rod. This affords also a beautiful type of Christ, in resurrection glory. Moses' disobedience and want of grace in smiting the rock when he had been bidden to speak to it, and its consequence to him, was incidentally dwelt upon, as well as that, when a second time it became necessary to fill the laver from the rock, God's design was that this should typify not the smitten and crucified, but the risen and glorified Christ.

Passing on to a consideration of the brazen sea, Mr. Newberry said the meaning of the Hebrew word for laver is uncertain—it might suggest the thought of a lake or river. But the larger reservoir of water connected with the Temple, and called the brazen sea, suggests naturally the idea of a greater fulness and more abundant supply. This water is typical of the Spirit as given out from the glorified and risen Christ. An interesting description of the brazen sea, and of its vases and lavers, together with their special uses, was here given, reference also being made to the command as to the cleansing of the priests' hands and feet. The water in the laver and in the brazen sea was never contaminated or polluted, being drawn off into the various vessels required for the cleansing of the sacrifice and of the priests; and Mr. Newberry said he attached special importance to this fact, because the water is the type of the pure and holy Spirit of God.

What, then, is the lesson taught by the solemn injunction to the high priest and the priesthood of Israel always, on pain of death, to wash their hands and feet whenever they approached the altar or entered into the sanctuary? Was God over-particular on this point? Our Lord seemed to teach otherwise when the Pharisees wondered that He had not washed or bathed before dinner. The lesson is this, that no loving service to God or communion with God is possible while the heart is defiled. Those only who have their hearts "sprinkled from an evil conscience, and their bodies washed with pure any can have boldness to enter into the holiest and there worship in spirit and in truth. In his teaching on this subject Christ said, "If thou bring thy gift to the altar and there remember that thy brother hath aught against thee . . . go thy way; first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift."

What, again, is the spiritual signification of the brazen sea, standing on twelve oxen looking towards each point of the compass? The interpretation, he believed, is to be found in those words of Jesus, uttered on "the last day, that great day of the feast": "If any man thirst, let him come unto Me and drink; he that believeth on Me, as the Scripture saith, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water." But nowhere has Scripture so spoken in so many words. God, however, employs types and figures to express his wondrous teaching, and in the expressive type of the brazen sea, made according to the express instruction of God, there is an illustration of these words of the Lord Jesus. The Spirit of God interprets, He seldom speaks of Himself. "This spake He (Christ) of the Spirit," we read, "for the Holy Ghost was not yet given, because that Jesus was not yet glorified." The brazen sea, then, is a representation of the risen Christ receiving in resurrection glory on behalf of his people of the fulness of the Spirit of God given without measure.

The oxen on which the sea rested were next spoken of as typical of those servants of God who, whether evangelist, or teacher, or minister, have received gifts and authority, in the power of the Holy Ghost, from the risen Christ, to feed his flock.

Mr. Newberry concluded with some beautifully suggestive teaching on this point, showing that those who would feed the lambs of Christ's flock, or shepherd his sheep, or preach the Gospel in regions beyond, must have first come into direct communion with God, must have stood in the secret place of the Most High, and must be faithful in the delivery of the message they had received from God.

THE BETHEL MISSION.

A quiet and successful work has been carried on by The Bethel Mission during the last year in George-street, Chelsea, and since January 1, in Westminster, where three nights in the week the Gospel is preached in the open air, and afterwards, in a room, those who wish it are spoken to and prayed with. Great blessing has attended these efforts in the conversion of souls and in rescuing drunkards and fallen women.

Other branches of the work could be opened in miserable back streets and courts of the lowest description, but for want of means. Many of the wretched inhabitants have earnestly begged Mr. Richards and his workers to extend the work among them. The roughs instead of interrupting have tried to keep the children, &c., quiet, and the police have been most kind and sympathetic. The fact that a public-house (of the worst description and most flourishing) opposite the Mission-room has just been closed speaks for itself.

Any further information about The Bethel Mission will be gladly given by Miss Ross Smyth, 1, Victoria Mansions, Victoria-street, S.W.

SPECTACLE MISSIONS.—A Mission of a new character is recommended to any who are seeking some fresh method of benefiting their fellow creatures. The object is the gratuitous supply of spectacles to the needy, and at the same time the distribution of the Scriptures. Such a Mission was established last year at Maida Vale, and its operations have already extended to four or five contiguous parishes. The advantages and capabilities of this Spectacle Mission are so great, and the work is so interesting, that a detailed account thereof, as well as of the method of management, has been given by its originator, Dr. Edward J. Waring, in a little book, which may be obtained of the hon. sec., Miss Waring, 49, Clifton-gardens, W. It should be added that the Mission is specially

MILDMAY PARK CONFERENCE,

JUNE 22, 23, AND 24.

"HE MUST REIGN."

> "Come let us..renew the kingdom."
> "All these..came with a perfect heart..to make David king..and all the rest..were of one heart to make David king."
> "The Holy one of Israel is our King."

BELOVED CHRISTIAN FRIENDS,—It is much laid upon our hearts to believe that the approaching Mildmay Conference will redound greatly to the glory of God, and to the enduring advantage of his people, if we come together, as did Israel of old, determined with one heart and mind to make Him King, whom God has exalted to "the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens," and to renew our allegiance to Him as "King of kings and Lord of lords."

At a time when every loyal subject of the Sovereign, whom the providence of God has permitted to reign over this Empire for half a century, is sharing the nation's joy, and endeavouring in some fitting way to commemorate the Jubilee of our beloved Queen, it seems as if a special call came to those whose citizenship is in heaven to lift their thankful hearts higher than the earthly throne of these realms, to Him by whom "kings reign and princes decree justice," of the "increase" of whose "government there shall be no end," and who "shall reign for ever and ever."

"Behold, one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of days, and they brought Him near before Him. And there was given Him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages should serve Him: his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed" (Dan. vii. 13, 14).

Is it not fitting, beloved friends, that on an occasion which probably none of us now living can see repeated, when thoughts of allegiance to the throne, of loyal affection to its royal occupant, and of our responsibility to maintain and increase her honour, fill the minds of millions upon millions of our fellow-subjects all over the globe, "the children of the kingdom," the servants of "the King eternal, immortal, invisible, the only wise God," should assemble to give unto Him "the glory due unto his name," to renew their vows of fealty, and to learn what He would have them to do for the extension of his all-glorious sway?

How deep, brethren, is the need for such a renewal of the kingdom: how few, comparatively, among the multitudes who profess and call themselves Christians consider themselves bound to keep the King's commandments! and even among those who do in some measure recognise their obligation, do not many regard themselves at liberty to select which of the laws of the kingdom they shall unreservedly honour and obey?

Whether it be that in the preaching of the Gospel the truth of deliverance from condemnation has been exalted at the expense of the corresponding truth of the call to service, or that the privileges of salvation have been more readily apprehended than its obligations, it must be confessed with shame that the lawlessness which characterised the professing people of God of old, and which called forth the solemn denunciations of the prophets, is a prominent feature of the present day; and that He who has redeemed us to Himself to be his "obedient children" has still to say, "Ye have been partial in the law," and to add with grieved spirit to those whom He has consecrated to serve Him as priests, "If I be a master, where is my fear?"

It has been forgotten that one of the least "commandments" is as Divine in its authority as "the first and great commandment," and believers in Christ have yielded to the temptation to think themselves exonerated from obedience to a law they disliked by acceptance of another of easier obligation.

that He might be Lord both of the dead and living," and that if He be joyfully accepted as Saviour it is that He may be loyally acknowledged as Lord? Yet, surely, the supreme, paramount truth that welds the Scriptures into one by its permeation of every separate book, whether the Law, the Prophets or the Psalms, the records of the Evangelists, the teachings of the Apostles, or the concluding wonders of the Apocalypse, is this—that "the heavens do rule," that "a King shall reign in righteousness," and that "every tongue shall confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father."

If this be so, beloved friends, what is it that is needed to promote that glory, to deepen the joy of the servants of God, and to present to the world the true evidence of Christianity but a wholehearted return to that prompt, unquestioning, uncompromising obedience to the laws of the kingdom which our glorious King deserves, which his Word enjoins, and which our consciences recognise as right? Then it will be a time of Jubilee indeed. Then shall we go forth in his joy and strength to obey, as it has never been obeyed before, his last command to "preach the Gospel to every creature," and to "say among the heathen, that the Lord reigneth."

With these thoughts upon our minds we have selected as a subject for consideration and conference the truths concerning the grace and power and glory of the King, and the privileges and responsibilities of his servants, which, we trust, will, by the teaching of God the Holy Ghost, lead us to renewed consecration of heart and life to his most blessed service. These will be found quoted at length in the accompanying paper, and, we trust, that in his infinite mercy our gracious God and Father will use them, not only at the time of Conference, but from now till then, and afterwards as long as our earthly service is permitted to last, to stir up our hearts, to stimulate our prayers, and to quicken our energies for the extension of his glorious kingdom.

The Conference will be held, if the Lord will, on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, the 22nd, 23rd, and 24th June.

Asking your continued and earnest prayers for Divine guidance in all the arrangements, and for a rich and mighty blessing upon the Conference itself, we are,

SUBJECTS OF CONFERENCE.

I.—The Grace of the King.

Thy King cometh unto thee, meek, and having salvation. Wearing the crown of thorns and the purple robe. He shall be a Priest upon his throne. A Priest for ever after the order of Melchizedek. King of righteousness, and King of peace. The King's favour is as dew upon the grass. In the light of the King's countenance is life: and his favour is as a cloud of the latter rain. The King sitteth at his table. The King hath brought me into his chambers.—Matt. xxi. 5: Zech. ix. 9; John xix. 5; Zech. vi. 13; Ps. cx. 4; Heb. vii. 2; Prov. xix. 12; Prov. xvi. 15; Song i. 12; Song i. 4.

II.—The Privileges and Responsibilities of the Children of the King.

The King is near of kin to us. No more strangers and foreigners. Made nigh by the blood. That we might receive the adoption of sons. A royal priesthood. Ye are my bones and my flesh. My sons and daughters. That ye should show forth the praises of Him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvellous light. What manner of person ought ye to be? Each one resembled the children of a king. Let the children of Zion be joyful in their King. He that loveth pureness of heart... the King shall be his friend.—2 Sam. xix. 42; Eph. ii. 19; Eph. ii. 13; Gal. iv. 5; 1 Pet. ii. 9; 2 Sam. xix. 12; 2 Cor. vi. 18; 1 Pet. ii. 9; 2 Pet. iii. 11; Jud. viii. 18; Ps. cxlix. 2; Prov. xxii. 11.

III.—The Power of the King.

He ruleth by his power for ever. The Lord God omnipotent reigneth. Upholding all things by the word of his power. The government shall be upon his shoulder. A King against whom there is no rising up. Where the word of a king is, there is power. Yet have I set my King upon my holy hill of Zion. Righteousness is the sceptre of thy kingdom. The Lord will give strength unto his people. Thou art my King, O God: command deliverances. Thine, O Lord, is...the power.—Ps. lxvi. 7;

IV.—The Privileges and Responsibilities of the Servants of the King.

Be ye with the king as He goeth out, and as H cometh in. Behold thy servants are ready to do whatsoever my Lord the king shall appoint. We have maintenance from the king's palace, it (is) not meet fo us to see the king's dishonour. They dwelt with the king for his work. Surely in what place my Lord the king shall be, whether in death or life, even there als will thy servant be. Christ shall be magnified in my body, whether it be by life, or by death. Say among the heathen, that the Lord reigneth.—2 Kings xi. 8; 2 Sam. xv. 15; Ezra iv. 14; 1 Chron. iv. 23; 2 Sam. xv. 21; Phil i. 20; Ps. xcvi. 10.

V.—The Glory of the King.

Upon the likeness of the throne was the likeness as the appearance of a man above upon it. This was the appearance of the likeness of the glory of the Lord. The brightness of his glory. He shall bear the glory. He is the King of glory. His glory is great in thy salvation. His glory covered the heavens. We beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father. Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory. Let the whole earth be filled with his glory. Amen, and Amen. —Ezek. i. 26, 28; Heb. i. 3; Zech. vi. 13; Ps. xxiv. 10, xxi. 5; Hab. iii. 3; John i. 14; Matt. vi. 13; Ps. lxxii. 19.

VI.—The Privileges and Responsibilities of the Heir of Glory.

The glory which Thou gavest Me, I have given them that they may be one. The King's daughter is al glorious within. Having the glory of God: and her ligh like unto a stone most precious. Arise, shine; the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee. The Lord shall be unto thee an everlasting light, and thy God thy glory. Thou shalt also be a crown of glory in the hand of the Lord To give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ. They shall speak of the glory of thy kingdom...to make known to the sons o men...the glorious majesty of his kingdom. Then shal the King say...Come ye blessed.—John xvii. 22; Ps. xlv 13; Rev. xxi. 11; Isa. lx. 1, 19, lxii. 3; 2 Cor. iv. 6 Ps. cxlv. 11, 12: Matt. xxv. 34; Rev. xix. 1.

RESCUE WORK IN BRIGHTON.

DEAR SIR,—Those of your readers who took a deep interest in the late Mrs. Murray Vicar's Penitentiary work will be rejoiced to know tha the Albion Hill Home is now in a thoroughly satisfactory state. Mrs. Buchanan, a lady who has devoted her life to the reclamation of outcast girls in Scotland, and who exhibits tha union of love and firmness which is so essentia in dealing with them, has undertaken to be its resident lady superintendent. Its chaplain i now Rev. R. C. McDonald, a well-known India missionary, who, after devoting twenty years t the mission field, is obliged to reside in Englan through his wife's failure of health.

"Work Among the Lost"* is thankfully reissued, and I trust that its readers, and all who hold dear the memory of one to whom Penitentiary work owes so much, will unite in supporting the Home to which she devoted her life, an which is receiving cases from all parts o England. May I ask for the prayers of you readers, as I am for the present quite laid asid from public work?—Faithfully yours,

LAWN SERVICES.—A correspondent writes t suggest that those friends who have roomy an convenient lawns attached to their residences should utilise them during the summer months fo holding services suitable to young people amon the wealthier classes.

Y.M.C.A.—The third Conference of the Southern District Union of Young Men's Christia Associations was held at the Cairns Memoria Hall, Bournemouth, on Wednesday, April 27. Delegates assembled from Ryde, Sandown, Portsmouth Wimborne, Christchurch, Dorchester, Gillingham &c. Mr. T. W. Murphy, district secretary, Ryde gave a brief outline of the work that had bee done in visiting and correspondence during th last six months. The result had been the formation of new branches at Gillingham and Christchurch, and the revival of interest at other places A paper was read by Mr. H. A. Reed, secretar Y.M.C.A., Portsmouth, urging a more aggressiv and progressive line of action; greater catholicity of spirit; that provision should be made for the intellectual and physical needs of young men The subject was further discussed by Mr. Dixon of Dorchester, Mr. W. Hind Smith, and Mr. W. H Miles, and other delegates. In the evening a publi meeting was held, and addresses were given

For the Young.

A LITTLE CHILD SHALL LEAD THEM.

English sailors frequenting the port of Naples were very familiar with the happy face and active little form of Stevie J. Burrows, the youngest son of the respected harbour missionary. This little lad, of eight years, by his winning manners and sweet melodious voice, had entwined himself around the hearts of many an honest tar. He was his father's constant companion in visiting the ships, and might be seen on a Sunday morning with his little canvas tract bag over his shoulder going about amongst the sailors and giving his little messengers of love. His happy spirit shed continual sunshine in the home circle and in the services for seamen.

One who knew him from infancy says:—At the age of three he was remarkable for singing. He would call us all together and tell us he was going to have a Bethel, and would lead the hymn, "Ho, my comrades." Then he would pray, but his little prayer was for the sailors. He entered heartily into his father's work among the seamen. He was only three years and a half when at a tea-meeting he got up to sing a nursery rhyme for the sailors. He was always eager to please sailors, and was anxious about them; he could scarcely lisp his baby prayer, but he asked God to bless them.

He was very considerate to old people, and often used to talk with an aged friend about the meetings and heaven, and would sing to her. When out walking he generally gave his pennies to the poor, and he especially pitied the blind. One day he said, "How jolly it would be for the blind to see in heaven." He often talked about heaven, and he had very beautiful thoughts and sayings.

He was remarkable for his sweetness of temper, I never remember seeing him cross or passionate. If at play he got roused, he would try and pass it over with a bright face and hearty laugh, and another sweet quality was his attention to children younger than himself, by giving them his toys and letting them knock him about, and would finish by amusing them with one of his songs.

When the earthquake of August, 1886, shook Naples, causing the city to rock like a ship in a storm, Stevie was awakened from sleep by his mother, who wrapped a plaid around him, and hurried into the street, where the people were in great excitement. He trembled for an hour and then prayed, after which he desired to go to bed, saying he was no longer afraid, and in this confidence he slept soundly until the morning.

Many noble qualities shone in his outward life, such as a very deep love for flowers, pictures, and music, a strong feeling for poor animals cruelly treated, a friendliness to the persecuted little birds, and he, like the Saviour, looked upon blind people as deserving of special sympathy, and never passed such without leaving a token. Though only eight years old when he died, he felt the strivings of a sinful nature, and used to mourn over the neglect of religious duties. On several occasions during the past two years he had inward awakenings, and felt a sincere sorrow for sins committed, and once told how a servant had tempted him to say wicked words, but the consolation of Christ's words always brought him comfort. One evening, in the month of October, 1886, after a service in the Bethel at Naples, his father and Mr. D—— (an old and constant friend) found him in the reading-room, weeping bitterly. Being asked what was the matter, he replied, "I am sorry for my sins." The Saviour's promise to children was repeated for him, "Suffer the little children to come unto Me," and he at once ceased crying, while a sweet, calm expression settled on his pretty face.

He had a child's power over rough men. Many an hour he spent in the forecastle, listening to their yarns, or playing about the deck with some of the younger sailors. His natural humour was brought out on such occasions, and tended to endear him to those sailor lads who might work of the little missionary was on Sunday morning, when he used to accompany his father in visiting the ships. This, as well as every other work, was voluntary on his part. Not being content with this mode, however, he begged for a man and boat, and a little canvas bag for tracts, that he might have liberty to do the work in his own way. It was interesting to observe how pleased the sailors looked when they saw him with his bag, slung business-like over his shoulder, climbing the sides of great ships, under the eye of the watchful boatman, and then giving a Gospel messenger to each man on board. After visiting a few ships, he would bring the seamen to the Bethel service, where his sweet, musical voice was distinctly heard giving cheer to the service of praise. Many a careless seaman has thus been impressed for good by the gentle voice and kind manner of little Stevie.

A few days before his last sickness there was a magic lantern entertainment for the sailors, when he seemed in his usual spirits. He was playing with the sailors, and to show how he had improved in reading, read some of the texts on the wall, such as, "God so loved the world." As the evening wore on he was getting weary, but on hearing that we should sing—

> Whither, pilgrims, are you going?
> Going to the better land,

he seemed to brighten up, and, when he heard that only two verses were to be sung, exclaimed, "Oh, daddy, do sing it all, I love it so."

His last service was on Sunday morning, February 13, 1887, when he helped as usual in visiting ships, and seemed quite well. The next morning scarlet-fever manifested itself, and on the following Friday he quietly passed away.

His funeral was attended by many sorrowing friends, amongst whom were young people who loved him, and also the sailors, and many a briny tear did they brush from their weather-beaten faces. His earthly remains were laid beside his elder brother, Ambrose, who was also a fellow-worker and friend of the sailors.

SERVICES FOR CHILDREN.

Portsea.—Mr. Martin J. Hall, B.A., of the Children's Special Service Mission, had some happy meetings with the children at St. Mark's, North End, Portsea, from April 17 to 20. There were several cases of deep impression, and we trust of conversion. Meetings were also held for teachers.

Kensal-Green.—Mr. W. Huckett held a week's services at St. John's Mission Room, Kensal-green, from April 11 to 16. Notwithstanding the rough and noisy element at first, he was greatly encouraged by the manifest tokens God gave of his presence and blessing. There were towards the end many evidences that the work had not been in vain.

Finchley.—Some happy gatherings of children and young people have been held at Woodside Park, by Mr. Josiah Spiers. There were good attendances, and much blessing was evident, especially at the close of the mission. Many young people came each day from some distance round, in order to be present at the meetings. Mr. Spiers is now holding similar meetings at Tottenham.

MR. MOODY IN CHICAGO.

In a special report to The New York Independent a Chicago correspondent writes on April 9:—

While labouring personally at the rink, Mr. Moody has kept his hand on the temperance work at Farwell Hall, and on afternoons not otherwise engaged has aided Mr. Murphy in it. In order to reach a class of drinking men and non-churchgoers, who cannot come to Farwell Hall, a week ago Mr. Moody hired Columbia Rink, on Milwaukee Avenue, in the north-western section of the city. Here Mr. Murphy has been preaching and lecturing to large audiences, with very great encouragement. In addition to these special temperance services, regular evangelistic meetings have been held in at least five other places in the city. It goes without saying that Chicago has never known anything like the deep and general interest in religious things which now prevails. So far as we can judge there are no signs of its abatement. Mr. Moody regards this interest as only the beginning of what is to be when the Evangelisation Society, which he has organised, and of which he is President, shall fully enter upon its work.

In addition to the two-hundred-thousand-dollar endowment already obtained, he is now trying to secure a fund of 300,000 dollars for the support of fifty women, who will visit the homes of non-churchgoers, read the Bible with their inmates, urge parents to send their children to the Sunday-school, and themselves to begin the Christian life. In his judgment at least three-fourths of our neglected population can thus be reached. His plan for obtaining the money is to get fifty men to pledge themselves to pay 600 dollars a year apiece while they live, for the support of these women, and to provide by will for its payment after their death. But Mr. Moody is not satisfied with this. He believes that not less than 100,000 dollars should annually be expended in undenominational evangelistic work in Chicago. He expects to find men not accustomed to give to the ordinary objects of benevolence, who will provide him with the money he wishes.

With such burdens as these on his shoulders, with his schools at Northfield to look after, with the care of so many evangelists constantly on his mind, with such passionate interest in the services which he personally conducts, it is not strange that Mr. Moody should be somewhat weary physically. His friends are anxious that he should take rest. As yet there seems to be no chance for it. Evenings next week he will be at the First Baptist Church, with Dr. Henson. He will also take charge of the noon meeting in Farwell Hall, and will speak on subjects of special interest to recent converts, and upon the best methods of dealing with inquirers. We hope that his life and health may be spared, and that his own prayer for twenty-five years more, in which to preach the Gospel, and to carry out the plans he has formed will be answered.

THE COLAR MISSION.—Some months since Rev. J. M. Walker, chaplain of St. John's, Bangalore, paid a visit to Miss Anstey's Mission, at Colar, Mysore Territory. He speaks in very high terms of the nature and progress of the Mission, and commends it strongly to the sympathy of his fellow-Christians.

REV. GEORGE GRENFELL, of the Baptist Congo Mission, says they had found many hitherto unknown tributaries of the Congo, which gave them quite 5000 miles of navigable waterway, accessible from Stanley Pool. And they had not come to the end of their discoveries. There was no reason why in the next ten years they should not have one hundred stations on the Upper Congo.

THE DAUGHTERS OF MISSIONARIES.—In aid of the Home at Sevenoaks a sale of work will be held in the Cannon-street Hotel on May 5 and 6, from noon to 8 p.m. Among the other articles on sale will be many interesting curiosities from foreign lands, contributed by friends. This Home has for years been doing good service to the missionary cause by attending to the education of girls whose fathers are in the thick of the battle. Friends of missions are invited to be present at the sale.

MR. ARNOT IN CENTRAL AFRICA.

The following from Echoes of Service is from a young Christian who with the enterprise of a Livingstone combines the evangelistic earnestness of Moffat:—

Garenganze, August 11, 1886.—Just as I was preparing letters, &c., to despatch to the coast, a budget came, which was the more welcome, being entirely unlooked for. They were brought in by Honjo, a half-caste, who has come here with the chief of Bihé's "words" as to the way being open for me. The news of Brother ——'s change of mind as to coming out was a grief to me; but our Father knows. If you think my coming home would encourage others a little, I would gladly do so, though I am exceedingly loth to leave the field. So far as health is concerned, it is the experience of the business houses along the west coast that young men cannot come out too early; the interior is much more healthy. A brother who is a carpenter or a weaver would be of great value here. Indeed, I am planning to make a simple loom for my lad Dick to employ himself in weaving, this being undoutedly one of the "honest trades."

My own health has been very uncertain. During the dry season, now nearly over, the cold winds were much more trying to me than the hot, humid season of the past year. My impression, however, of this country is, that it is decidedly healthy. One could not imagine malaria to lurk anywhere about; there are no marshes or swamps or anything approaching them. I have a good deal of doctoring to do, but have not encountered one case of ague and fever among the natives, or among the few Bihé men I have with me, whereas at the Barotse such cases were of daily occurrence during the summer.

With the budget of letters came the news that the goods I had left at Nana Kandangu had been freely plundered; the female chief of that place sent a messenger, with three loads (of little value), to tell me that two Portuguese mulattos had brought letters for me, ordering her to supply them with that cloth I had left there, and a third mulatto who was there authenticated the letters. The result is that all the cloth is gone; I have a few beads left to me, for which I am very thankful, and feel rebuked, and warned of the danger of multiplying one's wants.

Ocinyama goes out now with my man Kasoma; his chief mission is to look out for and bring in any who may have given themselves for this field. If Ocinyama meets no one, he will return with a few supplies for me. Honjo will leave here a few months later with a caravan from Moshide, and will return at once. He would be quite able and willing to bring in anyone with every care and attention; he may leave the west coast about the middle of 1887, if not later.

The languages here are perplexing; some three distinct dialects are spoken in the same town, but all three are of the Bantu family. Besides Moshide, who is always most pleasant and kind, and by no means greedy for presents, I have found many kind friends among his people. Although Moshide is constantly sending out war parties to the countries all round, yet this country is, and has been for some time, at rest, so far as fighting is concerned; the people live in open villages, and cultivate largely. The quietness by night and day, considering the number of people is remarkable. At night, things can be left outside in perfect safety, and the door of my hut requires no barring; life and property, I have no hesitation in saying, are safer here than in much-favoured England. Being a conquering people, polygamy is carried to a shameless extent, the chief with his many hundreds of wives taking the lead. There is much incurable disease; some diseases are entirely new to me, and are said to be of Arab importation. The few medicines I have with me have been a great help. I have made no attempt at gathering a school as yet. Moshide says he would like his children taught to read, &c.; I promise him all this when helpers come.

I don't merely read things here, I devour them. The letters from my brethren I read so carefully and so often, that I get to understand the very spirit in which they were written.

August 22.—The chief has been urging me to receive a present of ivory to send out with Ocinyama. Yesterday he sent me this message, "Why do you refuse my ivory? By doing so you raise my suspicions as to your intentions in my country. Come to me to-morrow, and receive the ivory I mean to give you, and do not act as your countryman acted [a German explorer], causing me to drive him from my country." After committing the matter to the Lord, I went down to see him this morning, and took pains to explain my reasons for refusing, chiefly that, being in God's employ, I would not be under obligations to anyone. He entirely quieted down on the subject, and seemed quite satisfied.

THE MISSIONARY CAMPAIGN.

SUNDERLAND.

Intimation having been made in the newspapers and otherwise of the intended visit of Mr. Hudson Taylor, Mr. Meyer, and Mr. Radcliffe, much expectancy of blessing was raised. We believe much private prayer was made on their behalf, and a preliminary meeting for this purpose was held on the evening previous to the public gatherings.

Mr. Meyer was first on the scene, and he began work on Tuesday, April 19, when a very fair number were present. A meeting was held the same evening, and each afternoon and evening of the three following days. Mr. Meyer had for his subjects: (1) "Our Standing and Resources;" (2) "Christ's Ownership and Use of Us;" (3) "Deliverance from the Power of Sin;" (4) "The Sealing and Baptism of the Holy Spirit;" (5) "Holy Habits of Soul;" and (6) "The Secret of Rest." None who were present at these meetings can forget them, and as the addresses were principally for believers, many received a great stimulus and assistance towards living a higher life. About fifty or sixty young men met with Mr. Meyer after each evening meeting for further counsel and instruction. Many of these signified their willingness to consecrate themselves to the Master's service in the mission field or otherwise as He should direct.

On Friday Mr. Taylor and Mr. Radcliff were present, Mr. Meyer presiding. The last meeting was very solemn; at the after-meeting all were urged very earnestly, and many signified their desire, to consecrate their all to the service of Jesus.

On Saturday evening a meeting was held at the Y.M.C.A. rooms, when Mr. Taylor and Mr. Radcliffe gave addresses, Mr. Meyer having left for home. On Sunday these two friends occupied pulpits in four different places of worship, besides addressing smaller meetings. The principal meetings were held in the Grange Congregational Church.

Believers in Sunderland will long remember these meetings, and eternity alone can declare the influence for good exercised over many lives. Hearts and lives were probed, and sins and failings laid bare. Nor were they left in this state, but we believe the Holy Spirit was poured out, and many a one received a fresh baptism. The results must be holier lives lived to the glory of God.

WORKING LADS' INSTITUTE.—The Institute, established at Whitechapel in 1876 has long ago proved its usefulness. This year's report states that, instead of 200 lads attending as formerly, there have been during the past year 1234, while the attendance at the sixteen evening classes numbers 300, and over 1000 volumes have been lent for home reading. Sound technical training is given to the lads, and two Bible classes have a large attendance. There is also a Young Christians' Association, the members of which manifest much earnestness and zeal. The work done by this Institute, which directly and indirectly has led to the formation of many others, has been the means of benefitting thousands of boys. Mr. H. Hill (38, Bow-lane) is the hon. secretary.

WITHIN THE VEIL.

Silence! reverently and lowly,
  Foot unshod and bended head,
Let us enter the Most Holy,
  Where no step impure may tread.

Humbly bold, we dare not falter,
  Through his grace, all free from stain;
For behind us is the altar,
  Where for us the Lamb was slain.

Lo the veil hangs dark before us,
  Broidered scarlet, white and blue,
Yet we dimly see its glories,
  Incense smoke hath dulled its hue.

Even here is changing, failing;
  Incense burns to ashes cold;
See the holy lamps are paling
  On the candlestick of gold.

When the priest the shewbread rangeth,
  Hot and fresh each Sabbath day,
Well he marks how soon it changeth,
  Dry and cold he takes away.

Even here is death victorious,
  Something lasting we would see,
Since the Holy is thus glorious,
  What must then the Holiest be!

. . . . .

Past the veil! a flood of splendour,
  Glorious, shadeless, perfect light;
Yet that light is purely tender,
  Dazzles not nor dims our sight.

And we see in transport lowly,
  Marvels to our eyes unfold;
All the treasures of the Holy
  Here surpassed a thousand fold.

There the incense smoke is wreathing,
  Failing with the failing light;
Here a strange rich fragrance breathing
  From the censer day and night.

There the shewbread needs supplying
  As the Sabbath days return,
Here the heavenly manna lying,
  Changeless in its golden urn.

There the candlestick thick studded,
  Bud and bloom on golden stem,
Here, on Aaron's rod that budded,
  Living blossoms, look on them.

Branch, by desert dews once nourished,
  Then a dry and lifeless thing,
Then, when earthly life had perished,
  In new beauty blossoming.

Hope of resurrection glorious,
  By thy beauty Thou dost give;
Life is here o'er death victorious:
  Thou art living, we shall live.

Here the cherubim are bending
  On the Ark their raptured gaze,
Type of worship never ending,
  Holy awe and speechless praise.

Ark of cov'nant love the token,
  Crownèd by its golden lid;
Here the law that we have broken
  By the Mercy Seat is hid.

Though transgressors, we may venture
  In his presence to adore;
Our High Priest hath bid us enter,
  He Himself hath passed before.

See the blood! Himself hath shed it,
  His pierced hand hath placed it here;
'Tis our ransom, He hath said it,
  Let us boldly then draw near!

Past the ancient dispensation,
  With its type, the Holy Place;
We are in the new creation,
  In the Holiest, by his grace.

All we need in Christ is given,
  Types and shadows pass away,
Ark and Altar, born of heaven,
  All in Him we find to-day.

Jesus! Lord! we bow before Thee,
  King and Priest upon thy throne;
Till the day when all adore Thee,
  Thou art King unto Thine own!

CLAPHAM PROPHETIC CONVENTION

The fourth annual Convention for the study of prophetic Scripture (connected with the world-wide Prayer Union for the coming of the Lord) was held at the Conference Hall, Clapham, on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday last week.

The first morning meeting was presided over by Sir Robert Phayre. An earnest address was delivered by Mr. H. F. Bowker, on "The one Hope of the Church, and its reasonable influence upon our daily walk." The spiritual and experimental character of the remarks formed a itting opening to the more critical address which ollowed from Mr. G. H. Pember, on the "Interpretation of Prophecy as current at the close of he apostolic period and immediately afterwards—has it any significance for us?" The unanimity of the early fathers in their belief of the Lord's pre-millennial advent was shown. When the Church sought a present kingdom, in the absence of Christ the King, she ceased to look for he coming of Christ; she ceased to lean on the Beloved, and sat upon the world power. The application of this to present times was clearly pointed out, coupled with faithful warnings against worldly alliances.

In the afternoon an interesting and instructive address was given by Rev. Canon Fausset, on "The Worldly Church, and her Punishment by he World." He showed that whenever the Church allies itself to the world, or in any way eans on the world, God, in righteous retribuion, makes the world the instrument of its punishment. At the evening meeting (which was again presided over by Sir R. Phayre) an address was given by Rev. N. S. Taylor, on "The Times of the Gentiles," extending from he reign of Nebuchadnezzar to the coming of he Lord, but dwelling chiefly on the events of he last prophetic week of seven years. In the bsence of Rev. F. Whitfield, who was to have poken on "The Last Prophecy of Baalam," he Chairman delivered an earnest, practical address, calculated to stimulate Christians to a more serious consideration of the signs of the imes, and a more careful attention to personal holiness in view of these things.

SECOND DAY.

The morning meeting, under the presidency f Lieut.-Gen. Halliday, was addressed by Mr. Liesching, on "Modern Delusions." He howed that man's desire from the first has been to get hold of knowledge unlawfully, and Satan has always been ready to meet that want. This pirit is working in the present day, and showing tself in the guise of spiritualism. Reference was also made to the craze after Buddhism, to he Agapemone, and to the pretensions of the New Prophetess and the Flying Roll. In closing, he speaker pointed out that there can be no afety for the people of God, except by clinging losely to his Word.

Mr. G. W. Houghton spoke on "Satan's oppoition to the three covenants of God; or the Woman with the Ephah, the Woman with the Leaven, and Mystery Babylon." The three coveants are those with Noah, Abraham, and hrist, and Satan's opposition to these was raced in, first, the leaven, where the woman orrupts the meal by putting the leaven into the hree measures; then, secondly, in the ephah, here the woman herself is seen hidden; and hirdly, in Mystery, Babylon, where the woman is no more hidden, but comes out plainly with he name written in her forehead. Thus the peaker sought to show that the mystical woman hich forms the satanic travesty of God's pure hurch, exists from earliest times, appearing in arious forms; the present one being Popery.

In the afternoon Rev. Canon Fausset delivered an address on "The Church of Christ, nd her destiny to reign, because she has overcome the world." This address served as a equel to the one by the same speaker on the revious afternoon. Then he showed how for her lliance with the world the Church was punished y worldly persecution. Now he demonstrated, [illegible] how for fidelity in repudiating such alliances, she is elevated to reign over the world. After reading Rev. xx. 1—4, he remarked that when Queen Elizabeth was kept a close prisoner by her sister Mary, she said she wished she had been born a milkmaid; but could she have seen her own prosperous reign, her thoughts would have been very different. So the kingdom of glory and blessedness which awaits believers should inspire them to meet the conflicts here. Three kingships were pointed out: (1) that of Christ, who refused the easy path offered by Satan, and chose the cross; and who is now exalted. (2) Israel, who hereafter, when refusing homage to the awful representative of Satan, will reign with Christ, and fulfil the purpose for which they were chosen, to be kings and priests to God. (3) The kingship of the saints, who analogously, on the principle of righteous retribution, because they have refused the world, will gain the victory. As the kingdom of Satan sinks by successive steps, the kingdom of Christ rises. Christ comes for a twofold purpose—to destroy the hosts of high ones, and the kings of the earth who are leagued against Him (Isa. xxiv. 21). Now is the time of preaching; then will be the time of liturgy. Now, science, art, and music are often adverse to religion; then they will no longer draw off the soul, but be made perfectly consistent with spiritual work.

The evening meeting was again presided over by General Halliday, who, after prayer, read and commented on part of Psalm civ. Dr. Robert Anderson followed with an address, on "The Mystery of Lawlessness, and the unveiling of the Lawless One." The differences of opinion, he pointed out, are definitely limited, and probably not as serious as those which exist upon doctrinal points. Referring particularly to the question of a personal Antichrist, he strongly denounced those who deny this, as striking at the very fundamentals of the Bible. Daniel vii. was referred to, with the vision of four empires, specially noting the last beast with ten horns, and the little horn arising out of them. Then the eighth chapter, containing a vision two years later, and reaching on to the last days. Also chapters xi., xii.; Rev. xii., xiii., xvii. The principal characteristics of Antichrist were alluded to, passages in the prophecy of Daniel being compared with those in Revelation to show the identity of the power predicted in both books, both pointing, it was contended, to a future personal Antichrist. The latter portion of the address was occupied with a description of the Ritualism existing and spreading in the Church; and the Scepticism among Nonconformists, concluding with a passionate appeal for faithfulness to the truth.

Rev. J. Gosset-Tanner spoke of the time of Jacob's trouble. Israel must pass through a time of trouble, and will then look forth fair as the moon, clear as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners. The trouble will be severe, and will consist of a confederacy of the nations against Jerusalem (Zech. xii. 14). The method of deliverance will be a spiritual change. The Jews will be converted, and the nations will see the visible Shekinah glory. Some of the Jews will return in unbelief, and, like Saul of Tarsus, be converted by the vision of Christ. The consideration of this point helps to explain an apparent discrepancy between Zech. xii. and xiv., the believing and unbelieving Jews being differently treated by the Lord. The Lord's judgment will be destructive to some and purifying to others. Then will set in the happy state of Israel during the reign of Christ.

THIRD DAY.

In the morning, Rev. John Hawker, grounding his remarks on the predictions concerning Gog and Magog, and identifying these names with the Empire of Russia, sketched the future movements of that power, which might be expected from prophecy, and described its final overthrow. Rev. C. Graham gave a general outline of the prophecies relating to the Church of Christ.

In the afternoon, Rev. John Wilkinson gave a long and interesting address on the Millennial Glory of Israel. Confounding the predictions which relate to the Second Advent with those that relate to the first, the Jews reject Christ because these prophecies are not fulfilled by Him. The answer, of course, is: Christ will come again. Christians have one side of the Messiah; the Jews the other. Christians go in for the cross, and the Jews for the crown. One literalises the suffering passages; the other the glory passages. The restoration of the Jews is a thing marvellous in their own eyes. So long and widely have they been dispersed, that many have given up all hope of restoration. Many, too, have no desire for a change. Coming to the words, "Thou shalt dwell in the midst of Jerusalem," and "I will dwell in the midst of Jerusalem," special emphasis was laid on the expression "in the midst," which was compared with the following passages: Deut. xxxii. 8; Acts xvii. 26; Ezek. v. 5. From these the interesting thought was deduced that Jerusalem is the geographical centre of this planet. It is God's platform, on which He will display his glory. The very fulfilment of God's threatenings in the past and present is becoming a ground of hope to the Jews concerning the future; for since God has fulfilled his threatenings, they believe He will also fulfil his promises. Some practical remarks respecting work among the Jews brought an impressive address to a close.

The evening meeting was under the presidency of Mr. G. H. Pember, who gave an address on "Firstfruits, Harvest, and Vintage." Basing his remarks on Rev. xiv., he observed that the chapter presented great difficulty to many minds. Any interpretation ought to take into account these three points. The firstfruits refer to that portion of the Church which will be found waiting for Christ, and will be caught up to meet Him. The number will be very small, bearing only a small proportion to the whole Church, as in the case of the literal firstfruits and harvest. The harvest denotes the full ingathering of the Church. The vintage represents the unsaved. Between the harvest and vintage there is this difference: the harvest is entirely removed from the earth; in the vintage the tree remains and can bear fruit again. This points to a continuance of human life and action on earth after these judgments.

The Convention was brought to a close by some earnest practical words from Mr. W. B. Harington on the question, "What manner of persons ought ye to be?"

BIBLE COLPORTAGE IN IRELAND.

The twenty-eighth annual meeting of this Society was recently held at the Y.M.C.A. rooms, Belfast. The Chairman (Mr. Wm. Laird Finlay, J.P.), having drawn attention to the gradual progress of the Society's work in giving sound religious instruction as well as good moral training, Rev. J. Elliott read the report. By the efforts of the colporteurs millions of good books have been sold. There are about seventy of these men at work, but effectively to reach the people this number should be increased to two hundred. Parcels of books are sent to residents in villages or towns who will interest themselves in the work, and much good is effected in this way.

Rev. Mr. Park said, in reading the reports from the various agents it was clearly manifest that there is no preparatory work so effective as that of colportage. The colporteur can get access into many a home where a regular minister of the Gospel would not be received, and can pursue his work of teaching the Gospel with eminent success. The work of the Society he thought was peculiarly suitable to the present condition of the country. Other speakers having addressed the meeting, Rev. Dr. Donald expressed the hope that the time will soon come when ill-feeling shall die away and all would live in greater harmony. He also strongly urged the cultivation of the most Christian spirit towards their Catholic fellow countrymen.

BLACKDOWN HILLS MISSION.—We notice with much regret, from a circular-letter by Mr. George Brealey of this Mission, that some parts of the work will have to be given up if speedy help is not sent.

Spring Anniversaries.

PARIS CITY MISSION.

THE annual drawing-room meeting of this Society was held at Lady Ashburton's, Knightsbridge, on April 27. Lord Mount Temple, who presided, said the state of some so-called Christian nations is in some respects worse than that of the heathen. The work done in the past seven years by the agents of this Mission showed its necessity. Pastor MONOD gave an interesting account of the work of the evangelist employed under him. This consists of preaching on Sundays and week-days, visitation from house to house, the evangelistic work outside the cemeteries on the occasion of funerals, which present great opportunities for proclaiming the Gospel. There is progress in every way as to the number of people being reached. French Christians are awaking to a sense of their responsibility, and parents are anxious about their children.

Mr. F. A. BEVAN, while regarding it as a disappointment that as yet the Society was only able to support seven missionaries, said that if all the French pastors were as earnest and faithful as M. Monod, there would be many more missionaries at work. He urged upon all the importance of co-operating in a work which ought rapidly to grow and increase.

Rev. Burman Cassin and Mr. George Williams also spoke.

SOUTH AMERICAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

THE thirty-sixth annual meeting of this Society was held on Tuesday, last week, in Exeter Hall. The clerical secretary, Rev. J. R. SIMPSON read the general report. Rev. T. Bridges, who for thirty years has been principal of the Southern Missions, having become a naturalised subject of the Argentine Republic, has obtained an extensive grant of land from the Government, and proposes to settle on it with his family, and to make it a large industrial farm on which Indian labour would principally be employed. He proposed to carry on work for Christ among the Ona tribe. During Mr. Bridges' long service in that Mission, most encouraging had been the advance from heathenism to Christian civilisation of the natives of Fireland. The work among the sailors at the principal seaports was very satisfactory; and the work at Rosario, begun last year, has been continued with unabated success.

The chairman, General Sir DONALD STEWART, having addressed the meeting, Rev. F. A. C. LILLINGSTON thanked God for having put into the heart of that noble man, Captain Allen Gardiner, the idea of this Mission. He did not think there had been since the days of Constantine a more romantic Mission, and he thanked God that so many Englishmen had been found ready to take up the flag of an enterprise which God had blessed so marvellously. There is danger lest the settlers should forget their home religion, their home Sabbath, and hence the necessity for that Society to send pastors among them. These settlers ought to be bearing testimony among those around them to the power of the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ; it was his solemn belief that God was causing pressure among our own population in order that they might carry the Gospel to the ends of the earth. Unless, however, the Gospel were sent to the settlers themselves, there was great danger of their falling into a worse state than the people among whom they were living. As regarded the sailors, Jack was to be found everywhere, and he believed he was exposed to greater dangers on shore than at sea, one of those dangers being that he would forget altogether the God of his fathers

Mr. ALFRED R. PITE said that during the last few weeks they had sent out a suitable man to the wants of ordinary civilised life—carpentering, tailoring, shoemaking, and other industrial pursuits; and there was reason to believe that even in secular works of that kind they would be enabled to show the reality and soundness of their Christian faith.

Dr. ROBERT N. CUST, Rev. BURMAN CASSIN, and Mr. W. READE GARDINER (grandson of Captain Allen Gardiner), also addressed the meeting.

CHRISTIAN COLPORTAGE ASSOCIATION.

A THOUSAND colporteurs going hither and thither, speaking to the people in their own language, and leaving everywhere light-winged messengers of life and love, would by no means be too large for the needs and emergencies of our land, as revealed in the interesting accounts of work done given at the meeting last week of this Association. The report states that eighty-eight men are employed. Upwards of 200,000 persons are personally reached by them every month. During the past year more than 50,000 Bibles and Testaments, and about three-quarters of a million of books, magazines, and Scripture cards have been thus sold, the total value of these being nearly £11,000. Very serious reference was made to the corrupting literature that, like a turgid stream, issues from the printing-press, and to the absolute need for such a counteracting influence as is exerted by this agency. And the many-sided character of the work—the colporteurs visiting the villages, fairs, and markets in country places, as well as the markets and workrooms of the Metropolis and other great cities—was also pointed out.

Mr. GEORGE WILLIAMS, who presided, said the Association seemed to him to combine to a great extent the work of the City Mission, the Bible Society, the Y.M.C.A.'s, and the Tract Society. Its aim was to lead the people to the Saviour, and then to send them to the churches. All the ministers of the land ought gladly to co-operate with such a society.

Rev. H. ARMSTRONG HALL gave instances of the insidious way in which infidel and other pernicious literature is circulated. He spoke of thousands of tracts with mutilated texts being scattered about, and uttered a warning also with regard to the doings of Mormon emissaries. Sir WM. MCARTHUR said it was estimated that about twenty-nine millions of books and pamphlets connected with various immoral societies are now in circulation. Referring to the seventy colporteurs employed by Mr. Spurgeon's Association, he said, if one church could send out so many, it was not exaggeration for that Association to think of sending out one thousand, and this might be done, if only sufficient funds were provided, with very great advantage.

Mr. T. A. DENNY presided over a most interesting meeting later in the evening, when the colporteurs themselves in a free and conversational manner described their experiences. These were of the most valuable character, and many a hint as to the way in which the work might be carried on was given by the thirty or more men who spoke. A glimpse was also gained of the real state of many parts of this Christian land. Said one, "There is no Romish country more priest-ridden than are some of our own villages." Several others confirmed this statement with regard to more than one of our counties. Difficulties, of which there are many, were evidently made to be overcome by these men. One, finding he could make no headway in a certain village, set down his pack outside the school doors, and during the dinner-time talked to the children of Jesus. After a while, the mothers inquired, "Are you the man who has been talking to our children?" and so he found an open door to their houses and their hearts. Another having visited a laundry was by and by sent for to come again, with the result that now the walls of the place are covered with texts, and not a few of the women employed there are rejoicing in the salvation they have found Others, while calling upon the servants to look and purchase, and could speak of prayer-meetings held in the drawing-room, as well as the kitchen. Wherever these men go it was abundantly evident that the people are ready to buy the truth, and that the seed thus scattered is abundantly blessed.

GEORGE-YARD RAGGED SCHOOLS.

MR. HOLLAND'S work at George-yard is so well known and appreciated that it requires no commendation. His earnest, unremitting labours for the Master among the poor, the neglected, and the outcast, have been attended with most wonderful blessing and prosperity. Started in 1854, with a class of thirty rough street-boys, the work has grown so rapidly that there are now no less than sixty gatherings held every week, and the total weekly attendance exceeds 6000. The work is of the most comprehensive character, embracing every agency calculated to promote the temporal and spiritual welfare of the old as well as the young.

Wednesday of last week will be remembered as a red-letter day in the history of the institutions. In the afternoon the new buildings, which have been rendered necessary owing to the smallness and inconvenience of the original premises, and which have been erected in Angel-alley, Whitechapel, on a site previously occupied by dwellings unfit for human habitation, were opened by Her Royal Highness the Duchess of TECK, who takes a great interest in the Mission, and who was accompanied by her daughter, Princess Victoria Mary, and her sons, Princes Francis and Alexander.

The Royal visitors were accorded a most enthusiastic welcome. As they entered a choir of boys and girls sang "God save the Queen." After prayer by Prebendary Billing, the Hon. LIONEL ASHLEY read a brief statement of the work. Conducted by Mr. Holland and several other gentlemen, the Royal party visited the nursery, in where there were thirty bairns from some of the poorest homes in the neighbourhood, and other portions of the institutions. The Duchess of Teck afterwards inspected the new buildings, two in number, and declared them open, expressing the hope that they would be found a blessing to the whole district.

Prebendary BILLING, on behalf of his old, valued, and venerable friend, Mr. Holland, in felicitous terms thanked Her Royal Highness for her kindness in opening the buildings. He was confident, after what she had seen of the institutions that day, Her Royal Highness must be impressed with the practical ability, as well as the Christian love, of Mr. Holland. The Royal party were loudly cheered as they left the schools, by large crowds that congregated outside

The larger of the two buildings consists of basement and three floors. Even the roof this house is to be utilised. To use Mr. Holland own words, the roof "will in summer time be prettily-arranged encampment for babies." Th other building is called "Shaftesbury House in memory of the late President of the institu tions. In this house there is a large kitchen, which girls will receive lessons in cookery, and spacious reading-room and library.

In the evening the annual meeting was hel The report submitted by Mr. Holland was every respect a gratifying and encouraging on The Band of Hope has an average attendance 214. From 100 to 150 attend the children service held every Wednesday. The classes f young "roughs" are attended by between and 80. Some of this class of boys ha accepted Christ as their Saviour, and, thou beset with many trials and temptations, a serving Him faithfully and well. One or two them have been the means of converting th parents. They are capital missionaries, a are not ashamed to sound the name of Jes wherever they are. The men's Bible-class h an attendance of 150, and the women's Bib class is composed of about 60. About 100 i ebriate women are under visitation. The Sund school continues to flourish, there being Lady ASHBURTON, who is one of Mr. Holland's nost valued and able supporters, speaking of he women's Bible-class, which she herself conucts, acknowledged it to be one of the greatest rivileges of her life to be allowed to carry on his branch of the work, and declared with hankfulness that she had learned more lessons f Christian truthfulness, of Christian faith, and f simple trust in God from the poor poverty-tricken women who attended her class, than he had done from any other people.

Lady WILLIAM COMPTON, who presides over he women's sewing class, corroborated the tatement of her mother as to the Christian ortitude of the women she came in contact with, n her department, amid the almost insuperable roubles and trials which characterised their very-day life.

The Earl of HARROWBY, who officiated as hairman, was delighted to find that the work arried on under the generalship of his dear riend, Mr. Holland, was receiving such a large mount of the Divine blessing. What is it, he sked, that attracts the people to the services? is not any new contrivances, but simply and ruly the good old Gospel of our loving Saviour, esus Christ. Let us hope that Mr. Holland, oary though he may appear, may long be pared to continue the great work he is accomlishing for the glory of our blessed Lord.

FOREIGN EVANGELISATION.

DRAWING-ROOM meeting was held in the house f Hon. Henry and Mrs. Noel, in Westbourne-rrace, on Thursday last. After some encouging words from our kind host, Pastor Th. ONOD spoke of the generous aid given by British hristians in support of evangelisation in France. e gave some account of Mr. McAll's work in aris, and that of others who have received aid om the Foreign Evangelisation Society.

The Society, said Mr. D. MATHESON, was estabshed about fourteen years ago, first, to obtain orrect information as to the work carried on by he many Continental pastors and others, and econdly, to assist by grants those who were oing a really good work. To accomplish these bjects the Society has a very modest income, ut they have no expenses to deduct, having either paid secretary nor rented office, nor any her charge, except the cost of printing their nnual Report. The largest share of their rants has gone to France, as the most influential f the Roman Catholic countries. It may be aid that the religious future of France is in the ands of her Protestant churches. Fifty years go these churches held a sort of neutral position wards their Romanist neighbours, partly wing to the prohibitory laws then in force, and ere consequently in a cold state, but of late ears spiritual life and energy have entered into he Protestants. We hail with pleasure the test effort of the Mission Intérieure to parcel ut France for evangelisation by committing the are of each district to the Protestant community f that district.

In Belgium the Society aids an admirable and ost effective work by Mr. De Jonge, in training nd sending forth Flemish evangelists, and arrying on a city mission work in Brussels. he Christian Missionary Society is doing good ork under great difficulties, and is worthy of ore support from the larger societies among us. Spain, the work has been disappointing after he expectations raised by the Revolution of 868. The Jesuits swarm everywhere and are ery powerful, while progress in mission work as been hindered by premature efforts at Church rganisation instead of quiet persevering evanelisation with Bible colportage. Some good ork, however, is being done in many localities; nd a training college for evangelists at Puerto anta Maria—one of the best hopes for Spain—as been aided by us as well as some individual orkers. In Portugal an excellent, though unretentious work in Oporto and another in isbon has been helped.

In Italy the well-known Industrial Institute of r. Comandi, of Florence, and the Military Mission by Signor Capellini, of Rome, have had grants. In Germany an excellent work by Herr Rohrbach, in Berlin, receives our support.

Last, but not least, the Society has taken under its protection an admirable Mission whose headquarters are at Messina in Sicily. The evangelists are Sgrs. Varnier and Scuderi. Their method of evangelisation is to set aside as entirely premature any thought of Church organisation; to teach the people the leading Gospel truths; to bring them to the loving Saviour, and when received to testify for Him wherever they go. The result of eight years' experience shows the wisdom of this course, as they have many converts forming groups of Christians here and there who unite in Bible reading and prayer, and are strong enough to hold together in spite of priestly persecution and boycotting, which is only a modern name for an old and cruel system practised by the Church of Rome and indicated in the Word of God in Rev. xiii. 17.

BAPTIST MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

IN the May-Meeting lists it will be observed that no less than nine meetings are advertised in connection with the Baptist Missionary Society, but that which, we suppose, may be designated as the meeting of them all, was held in Exeter Hall on Thursday evening.

The Secretary, Mr. A. H. BAYNES, began his speech with an expression of profound regret for the serious illness of their treasurer, Mr. Joseph Tritton, who was, however, slightly better than on the previous day. He did not read the annual report, as in a day or two they would be scattering it broadcast over the land as the May number of The Missionary Herald. Suffice it to say, the year has been one of wonderful blessing; light is spreading over all lands, the day-dawn seems at hand. In India, China, and on the Congo there are evident tokens of the Divine approval. The largest income in the history of the society was reported—over £69,000. During the year nineteen new missionaries had gone out, and, as a result, there is a debt. "I would rather," exclaimed Mr. Baynes, "have a debt with progress than a balance in hand with stagnation." The hearty cheers of the meeting showed that his fellow-Baptists shared that sentiment.

Sir ROBERT PHAYRE (chairman) said that during his forty-seven years in India he was often brought into fellowship with the missionaries of that Society, and he would like to give his view as a soldier and a layman of the work they were doing. Sir Robert went on to sketch the history of the labours of Carey and Thomas in India, and then passed to a recital of some incidents in the career of Sir Henry Havelock during the Indian Mutiny. While the Mutiny was in progress, a native Christian in Delhi was told of the approach of a rebel force, and was advised to flee, but his reply was, "This is not the time to flee. Now is the time to flee to the throne of grace."

The only resolution of the evening, pledging the meeting to a larger measure of consecrated support to supply the funds needful for enlarged work in "the regions beyond," was proposed by Rev. T. GRAHAM TARN, of Cambridge. He said the Church of Christ never possessed so much of the missionary spirit as she does to-day. As a result we are surrounded by missionaries of the noblest type. There must, however, be an increase of that spirit: if it possesses the Church what wonders may be wrought! If the Church will only lay her wealth and manhood upon the altar, in less than two centuries, he believed, the world would be won to Christ. Our increased knowledge of heathen religions should only serve as an incentive to renewed zeal, for none of them were able to satisfy the spiritual nature of man.

Rev. R. WRIGHT HAY, late of the West African Mission, but now designated for India, with carefully-chosen language, forcibly pleaded the claims of Africa. He told the story of a poor Singalese woman, who, with her dying breath, had exclaimed, "How beautiful God is!" In Africa they had the pathos of heathenism at its fullest, and during his work in that vast land he was appalled at the lack of any idea God in the minds and lives of the natives. What a soil that ignorance of God is for the devil to grow his weeds in! In Africa, slavery, polygamy, the degradation of women, and infanticide are the voices which cry out, "Come over and help us." One African Christian woman said to him concerning the preaching of the missionaries, "The Jesus of whom they spoke was no stranger to me, although I had never heard his name before. He was so like the Friend I had long felt I needed."

Rev. JAMES BALLIE also addressed the meeting, saying it was his desire to send to all the missionaries of the Society a message of intelligent sympathy with them in their battle with the great obstructions which hinder their work. The gathering was a deeply interesting and enthusiastic one.

MRS. MEREDITH'S MISSION.

AT the Conference Hall, Clapham-road, the annual meeting of Mrs. Meredith's Prison Mission took place on Tuesday week under the presidency of Canon HUSSEY. The object the Mission has in view is to provide work for female prisoners on their leaving gaol. For this purpose a laundry, on an exceptionally large scale, has been carried on for some time past at Nine Elms House, Wandsworth road, but owing to the changed—and, therefore, unsuitable—aspect of that neighbourhood, the Mission is being transferred to Clapham. A summary of work for the year 1886 shows that the number employed in the laundry has been 839. There have also been employed at sewing 1555, and 3171 prison-gate breakfasts have been given. The building at Nine Elms has been sold to a railway company for £3000, but this sum will not be nearly sufficient to meet coming requirements. Mrs. Meredith gave an interesting account of the work.

COUNTRY TOWNS MISSION.

THE fiftieth annual meeting of this Mission was held on Thursday at Exeter Hall. Mr. GEORGE H. MAWER, the secretary, in reading the report, said the labours of the Society have, indeed, been abundantly blessed. Many hundreds of faithful men have been sent out with the Gospel message into districts where, from a variety of causes, there was urgent need. At present there are fifty-eight missionaries in connection with the Society, thirty-three of these being either paid direct by the Society, or receiving help from its funds.

The Chairman, Sir JOHN COODE, K.C.M.G., said that as one who had spent the greater part of his life in the provinces, he was in a position to form an opinion of the great need which existed for a Society of that sort. There was no disguising the fact that in many districts of our land the ministerial power is altogether inadequate to the area to be dealt with or to the population. There are some cases where the ministerial power, if properly applied, would suffice, but he was sorry to say that in many instances there is a lack of zeal and a lack of interest in the spead of the Gospel which that Society by its missionaries supplied. In cases of that sort there was no doubt that the work, as the report stated, must be "like cold water to a thirsty land."

Mr. SILVESTER, the Society's missionary at Abingdon, Berkshire, Mr. IVEY, the missionary at Hillmorton, near Rugby, and Mr. MARTIN, the missionary at Portishead, gave an encouraging account of the mission work in their districts; these were followed by Mr. RIVETT, who gave an interesting account of his mission work in the shoe factories in Northampton. Some of the men working in the factories at Northampton, he regretted to say, did not enter a place of worship from year in to year out. There was, therefore, great need that the Gospel should be taken to them. Much had been done in the factories, but much remained to be done.

Rev. H. ARMSTRONG HALL also advocated the claims of the work.

MIDNIGHT MEETING MOVEMENT.

The annual meeting on Thursday evening, in Exeter Hall, brought together the old friends of the Society, who for many years have adopted this method of reaching the fallen. In the afternoon there was an earnest conference, when various workers expressed their views upon the best way to go to work in an entirely new neighbourhood.

Major Evered Poole presided, and, after Mr. H. L. Christien had read a paper, said, there were confessedly great difficulties to be faced, and workers might be in some measure prepared to meet them by frankly comparing notes as to the methods which had been pursued.

When the conference was thrown open there was no lack of speakers, but we can only here indicate a few of the salient points in the speeches. Many agreed with Mr. Christien's remark in his paper that this was emphatically a woman's work, and that men who took part in it ran some risk of being suspected. Some strong remarks were made on the character of some of the Homes, which were bluntly said to be no Homes at all. Mr. Drysdale pointedly asked who would be the first to take one of the rescued girls as a servant, like Rev. J. W. Horsley, who is never without two of them in his service. If we do not look upon these fallen ones as our sisters, we shall do no good. He condemned the "silent system" in Homes, and also praised highly the Homes of the Salvation Army, in which the doors are always open, and the inmates allowed plenty of talk, and liberty to go out and in without hindrance. After two hours spent in conference, the following resolution was adopted on the motion by Mr. E. W. Thomas:—Resolved, that the committee of the Society continue to place themselves in communication with ministers and others, especially in new districts, to offer assistance in the work.

At the annual meeting in the evening, Mrs. Poole gave a very touching address, in moving the adoption of the report, which stated that during the year there had been eighty-three meetings attended by 3859 women.

BIBLE READING ASSOCIATION.

The annual meeting of branch secretaries and members of this International Association, held last week at 56, Old Bailey, was in all respects most encouraging. Mr. C. Waters (hon. secretary) in making his statement said:—Very gratifying communications recently received from our own and other lands confirm the usefulness of the work, and abundantly prove its acceptability and adaptation to the requirements of Sunday-school teaching. The principle of topical reading, adopted by the Association, differentiates this from all other similar efforts. There was an increase of 29,000 members over the numbers for 1885. For 1887 the issue has already reached nearly one hundred and fifty thousand.

The Chairman (Mr. Fountain J. Hartley) called upon the members to be faithful to their pledge, and not to give up reading the day's portion because they had no time to read it in the morning. He urged them to not only read but to think and pray over the passages, and to practise their teaching in their daily walk and conversation.

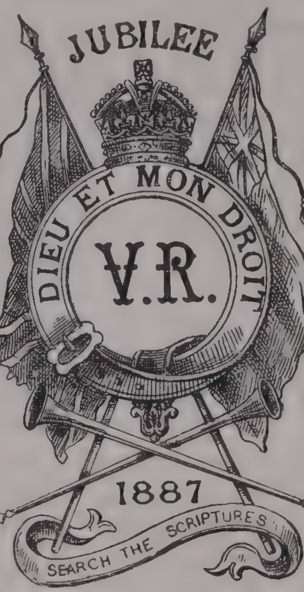
Miss Marianne Farningham said the more she knew of the Association the better she liked it. She mentioned two things she very much regretted—the little Bible teaching given in our day schools, and this often by those who do not love the Scriptures, and the small attendance at the Sunday morning schools. She strongly commended the committing to memory of passages of Scripture. Verses thus learnt are never forgotten. Again and again they come back to the mind just when they are wanted. The portions chosen by the Association were so short that not only should they be read in the morning, but another taste of them should be got in the dinner hour, and again in the evening. The more often they are read the better will they get into the mind, and be retained for future use. She recommended all to read the Bible intelligently, believingly, reverently, and aspiringly.

Rev. T. F. Briscoe and Rev. Francis Monti also gave addresses of a practical character.

⁂ In our report last week of the meeting of the Strangers' Home for Asiatics it was stated that various Crown Colonies largely subsidised the work of the Society. The Hon. Secretary informs us that the help received from this source is ten guineas each from the eight Crown Colonies—£84 in all. The Government of New Zealand also gives ten guineas.

JUBILEE TESTAMENTS.

Below is the design to which we referred in our issue of April 21. Penny Testaments or Gospels, with the imprint in gold upon the cover, may be had from the British and Foreign Bible Society, 146, Queen Victoria-street, E.C., in quantities of not less than one hundred, at 12s. 8d. per hundred. They will be largely distributed in the neighbourhood of Richmond, on June 21, and it is hoped that Christians will interest themselves in a similar effort in their own localities, and especially that the inmates of unions and hospitals may, through the generosity of friends, be recipients of this little Jubilee memento. Those who have written to the hon. sec., Mr. H. L. Cunnah, 3, Cambrian-road, Richmond, will kindly accept this information. All communications must be accompanied by stamped addressed envelope.



QUEEN MARGARET, of Italy, says a Methodist contemporary, has a large Hebrew library, including all the latest works on the literature of the Jews; that she is a proficient in the Hebrew language, and that she reads the Old Testament in the original with the greatest ease.

ST. GILES'S.—The St. Giles's Christian Mission's Sunday-schools anniversary services were held in Little Wild-street Chapel, Drury-lane, on Sunday, April 24, when three special sermons were preached by Rev. Philip Gast, of Spencer-street Chapel, Mr. J. A. Groom, of the Flower Girls' Mission, and Mr. J. C. Chadwick. All the services were well attended. On the following Tuesday there was a social tea and public meeting, the latter being presided over by Mr. F. A. Bevan, the treasurer of the Mission. Mr. A. Goodwin, secretary of the schools, read the report, which showed there were 1635 scholars, and 98 teachers on the books. We are glad to learn that a good proportion of the scholars are members of the Church, and also of the increasing usefulness of the several schools.

MR. G. CLARKE IN INVERNESS.

From an appreciative but discriminating account of Mr. Clarke's Inverness Mission, in The Inverness Courier of Friday last, we extract the following:—

"During the past fortnight Mr. George Clarke has conducted religious meetings in Inverness, which have had quite extraordinary success. Since April 17 he has conducted meetings almost every day, with a steadily increasing attendance, and growing interest manifested among all classes in the town. The week-day services consist of an afternoon Bible-reading, and a public meeting in the evening. The Bible-readings have been held in the Victoria Hall, which has come to be crowded daily at three o'clock. The evening meetings were held the first week in the Union-street Church, but this week they have been held in the Free High Church, which is filled every evening to its full extent, the audience overflowing into the passages. The attendance on the first three evenings could not have been less than 1500. The gatherings in the Music Hall were also of a remarkable kind. The first Sunday afternoon a large audience assembled to hear Mr. Clarke speak on the 'Christian Athlete.' Last Sunday afternoon the hall was crowded to suffocation to hear an address on 'Proud Men and Women,' and on Sunday evening the audience of men of all ages was exceptionally large and attentive. It was computed that nearly half the male population of the town above twenty years of age must have been present.

"Mr. Clarke is a man perfectly in earnest. He was first impressed by Mr. Moody, the American evangelist, and since then has stood firm to the choice which he made. He does not profess to preach. He says that he comes to have a 'talk' with his audiences. There is no doubt on the mind of any unprejudiced person who has heard him that he is a force on the right side. He expounds the old-fashioned evangel with a simplicity and absence of conventional forms that appeal direct to the heart. His address to men on Sunday evening could not have been better adapted to its purpose. A report of it would fail to give any idea of its power—a power which it derived as much from the circumstances of the occasion and the personality of the speaker, as from the words that were actually spoken.

"It is not to be supposed that Mr. Clarke is faultless. Some of his addresses are of rare excellence, but others are deficient in substance, and rendered attractive chiefly by the pleasant manner, and the fluent and sympathetic voice. To be sure, it is not surprising that one who speaks so much should fall at times to a commonplace level. An observer, however, to use the evangelist's own phraseology, would say that 'his fluent address forms his special temptation.' He has also carried with him from America a little of the Yankee self-assertion. This element often appears in a successful speaker; perhaps it is the defect that accompanies the rhetorical faculty, until it is corrected by the friction of debate or by long experience. The Synod fathers, who heard Mr. Clarke on Tuesday, would probably advise him to keep the personal element in subjection. But after making all deductions, Mr. Clarke is a fine specimen of an evangelist—clear-headed, warm-hearted, sunny in temperament, fearless in spirit, full of his Divine message, and capable of convincing others, because he speaks from deep-rooted conviction."

A private correspondent informs us that many have professed conversion during the Mission in Inverness. Mr. Clarke began work in Perth, we understand, on Sunday last.

RESCUE WORK.—At a meeting held recentl for the rescue of fallen women, in connection wit the Mission at 6a, Trinity-street, Borough, earnes addresses were given by various friends, and as result, four sisters, one of them weeping bitterly went to the Home. Christian ladies are needed t help in this work of love. Communication should be addressed to Mr. R. T. Bodker, 30 Holland-road, Brixton, S.W.

NINETEEN BEAUTIFUL YEARS:

The Record of the Life of a Beloved Sister.

By FRANCES E. WILLARD,
President of the "Women's National Christian Temperance Union of America."

With Introduction by BISHOP FOSTER;
And a Prefatory Note by the Poet, JOHN G. WHITTIER.

CLOTH BOARDS, 2/6; WITH GILT EDGES, 3/-.

"'NINETEEN BEAUTIFUL YEARS' is most touching and interesting; so thoroughly natural and unconventional was her life and the expression of her thoughts. It is good to see how, through all the different modes of thought and teaching, and many mistakes perhaps all round, God draws hearts to rest in Him, and trains characters to serve Him."—Home Friend.

"The young girl whose short life is here portrayed by a sisterly hand was a charming character, and exemplified the graces of a Christian experience. The pages of her diary are a revelation of the writer's bright heart and keen observation of her surroundings; and the portrait and pictures are capital. A delightful biography."
The Christian Commonwealth.

"Miss Willard here traces, with a hand as skilful as the heart that guides it is loving, the life of her beloved sister Mary. It is an American biography, but will be read here with as much avidity, and will excite as intense admiration, as if it were English. . . . Worthy of being selected as a choice gift-book to young ladies."
Methodist New Connexion Magazine.

"For elder girls 'NINETEEN BEAUTIFUL YEARS,' by Frances E. Willard, should be very helpful and stimulating. It is an affectionate record of the singularly beautiful life of the authoress's sister, Miss Mary Willard."
Christian World.

"A book that may be safely put into a young lady's hands, with the assured confidence that it will serve to strengthen and deepen all influences for good."—The Christian.

MORGAN & SCOTT'S PORTABLE EDITION
LONDON MORGAN & SCOTT

PORTABLE 3/6 EDITION.

"'CRUDEN'S COMPLETE CONCORDANCE' in a well-bound and conveniently-sized volume issued at 3s. 6d., seems one of the marvels of modern book production. Messrs. Morgan & Scott's portable edition is of this class. There has been copious controversy on the merits and demerits of Cruden's great work; but we prefer to believe in Lowndes's opinion that 'Cruden's Concordance should be in every library.' It is uncommonly complete, the definitions of leading words remarkably accurate, and the references exceedingly correct."—Publishers' Circular, March 15, 1887.

"The best cheap edition of 'CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE' that we have seen is the one published by Morgan & Scott—a portable edition, clearly printed on good paper and well bound, unabridged, and with the proper names newly translated, all for 3s. 6d. Even the poorest Christian may now have a Concordance to help him in studying the Word of God with profit."—Christian Leader, March 17, 1887.

Mr. C. H. SPURGEON writes:—"Your Concordance at 3s. 6d. must be a great boon to ministers. We could very well dispense with a Concordance to the Apocrypha. As in all other respects it is an unabridged Cruden, I am greatly rejoiced to see it produced for so small a sum. May you sell tens of thousands!"

With Chromo-Lithographic Views of the Isle of Patmos and the Sea of Galilee.
Cloth, Bevelled Boards, 3s. 6d.

"Another acceptable volume, by an author whose spiritual attainments, as well as mental powers, are fitting qualifications for an appreciative review of John's character and life. "JOHN WHOM JESUS LOVED," by his latest biographer, will furnish a rich spiritual treat to all lovers of their Lord, in every section of His Church. To young men budding for the ministry, this monograph of John should become a classic volume."—Christian Age.

"This very handsome volume on a subject of perpetual importance will no doubt be welcomed, especially by those who are acquainted with Dr. Culross's other excellent works. Dr. Culross has here pre-eminently exhibited his usual excellencies as a religious writer. Clear in style, and eloquent in argument, striking in illustration, never wordy or tedious, never flat or cold, but always exhibiting great Christian affection, with an obvious sense of the fidelity his subject so solemnly demands. We are sure this work will be useful wherever it is read; and we hope it will have a very wide circulation."
Baptist Messenger.

CHRIST'S MESSAGE TO THE CHURCH AT EPHESUS.

With Chromo-Lithographic Frontispiece. Cloth, Bevelled Boards, 2s. 6d.

"We have read this book with avidity and delight. There clings to it a heavenly aroma, a grateful savour of Jesus which bespeaks intimate communion with Himself. This even more than the masterly method in which the writer manipulates his theme, and the felicitous diction he employs, constitutes the charm of the book. The many delighted readers of his kindred treatise on the Laodicean Epistle, will need no stimulus to procure the book. The Church of God is laid under increased obligation to the pious Author for this substantial contribution to sacred literature, containing as it does so much seasonable truth."

INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CASE of a LITTLE BOY at BEDFORD.

This case was brought under my notice by Mr. John Harding, of The Plantation, Bedford, the child being the son of a friend. "The medical attendant has pronounced him to be consumptive. The symptoms are also exactly as described by you. He brings up a great deal of expectoration, and sweats very much at night. I lent my friend your book, and she wishes you to take the case in hand." (The mother, writing me soon afterwards, states that he had had pleurisy in the right side, and that his right lung was then said to be affected.)

In two months the expectoration had nearly ceased. The child gradually improved. The mother, writing me a few months since, says:—"The medicine I had from you for my little boy did so much good, he has been well ever since."

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

AN IRISH Y.M.C.A. ITINERARY.

We subjoin some notes of a month's campaign amongst the Y.M.C.A.'s in the Emerald Isle, by Mr. Hind Smith and Mr. R. McCann:—

In Dublin, at a district meeting, a most cheering report was given of the progress of the work in the southern district. Messrs. Smith and McCann also addressed the annual meeting of the Dublin Association. At Bray the annual public meeting was held, and efforts were made to improve the basis of the Association. At Kingstown there was a members' social meeting. This newly-formed branch shows considerable vigour.

At Tralee much interest was shown by those who are desirous of seeing an active work for God done in the troubled soul. Here the Association owns a valuable building, with a lecture hall that will seat 400. At Cork a new Association has been formed. This vigorous Association will, it is hoped, become the centre of a district, from whence will go out much Christian and evangelistic effort. At the Soldiers' Home a noble work is being done by Misses Sandes, Schofield, and other valued co-workers.

At Waterford there are signs of an improvement of the Association programme by enlarged spiritual work. At New Ross a public meeting was held, presided over by the excellent vicar. The committee met for conference with the deputation as to improved methods of working and basis of membership.

At Kilkenny there is the nucleus of an Association in a prayer union consisting of about a dozen earnest godly young men. At Athy, a public meeting and conference were held; it is believed these will result in an improved basis and better work being done.

At Rathmines (Dublin), there is a thorough-going and whole-hearted band of young men. The amount of evangelistic work done is marvellous. At Bessbrook (the town so highly favoured as to have none of the "four P.'s" so conspicuous in many other towns, viz., "public-house, pawn-shop, police-officer, and poor) several meetings were held. The Y.M.C.A. has increased its membership within the last year from 24 to 110, and a good spiritual work is being done. The Y.W.C.A. is also prospering.

At Newry, a thriving centre of industry, a public meeting and conference were held, and the formation of an Association advocated. At Dundalk there were also a large public meeting and conferences. The same may be said of Banbridge; while at Dromore, co. Down, a branch of the Association was formed. At Lurgan, the Association, although not possessed of any local habitation, is doing an excellent evangelistic work. At Omagh many friends desire to see an Association formed.

At Armagh and Donegal meetings were held. The latter place has a most complete Y.M.C.A. building, freehold property. It was erected at the cost of £2500, in addition to much free labour, and comprises ample accommodation for the Association—a lecture hall; a temperance hotel with three private sitting-rooms, and several bedrooms; a coffee-tavern, and stabling accommodation for forty horses. The whole has been paid for with the exception of about £750, which is being reduced annually by the profits made at the establishment. Londonderry also possesses an excellent building. It is the only Association probably in this country responsible for the conducting of a well-worked Sunday-school. Coleraine has no Association as yet. One was formed at Cookstown, and a visit was paid to the young branch at Aghadowey.

At Ballyclare the deputation attended the second annual meeting. This Association is doing good evangelistic work. A unique feature of the work at Ballymoney is a prayer-meeting held every morning at seven o'clock. Ballymena is one of the most hopeful fields for work in Ireland, and God has largely owned the labours of this branch.

Belfast boasts of 1200 members and associates, and has a well-appointed gymnasium, &c. The spiritual work is progressing, and much blessing has recently been received. At Mountpottinger (Belfast) the membership has more than doubled since 1885. At Belfast the annual Conference of the North of Ireland District was held. Thirty-five delegates were in attendance, representing fourteen associations, and most cheering reports were given of the work in the various places.

The prospects of Y.M C.A. work in Ireland are brighter than at any period in the past; in no country is the work more needed, and more likely to do good.

CUBA AS A MISSION FIELD.

A correspondent sends to us an account of the truly marvellous way in which God has been opening up Cuba to the preaching of the Gospel. Last year the Jamaica Baptist Missionary Society sent a deputation to Cuba to report upon the needs and prospects of mission work in that island. The report states that the first successful attempt to evangelise Cuba was made by Mr. Diaz, a converted Cuban doctor, who connected himself with the Baptist Church at Key West, under the pastoral care of Rev. W. F. Wood. In January, 1886, twelve persons were baptized at Havana; the little church thus formed grew so rapidly that in seven months it numbered 102 members, had five preaching stations in the city of Havana, besides its own place of meeting, two Sunday-schools, with 250 pupils and 17 teachers, and four young men preparing for the ministry.

While this has been going on in Havana, God has been working at the other side of the island in the important towns of Santiago and Cienfuegos, each with a population of about 30,000. Three or four years ago a Presbyterian went to the former town, distributed a large number of Bibles, and then left. These Bibles were read by people already sick of Romanism, and longing for something better. The Spirit of God blessed the word. Many hundreds of people left the Church of Rome, became Bible-readers, and waited for someone to explain the way of God to them more perfectly. Twice they sent to Havana for help, but the little church there had its hands full of work, and could do nothing for them. The Word of God also found its way to Cienfuegos, with the same blessed results.

At the same time the venerable pastor of Key West Baptist Church had it laid upon his heart to go to Cuba to do missionary work. In a very distinctly providential manner he became connected with the Jamaica Baptist Missionary Society, and was sent to commence work as the agent of that Society at Cienfuegos, at least for six months. God has abundantly blessed the labours of his aged servant, and Miss Fales, who accompanied him to interpret and teach, and who is also an agent of the Society. There have been many conversions to God, a deep and widespread interest has been awakened, and there seems to be every reason to expect a glorious harvest of precious souls in the near future. Further details may be obtained of Rev. E. J. Hewitt, Mount Carey, Anchovy P.O., Jamaica, West Indies.

THE FISHMONGERS' COMPANY have granted fifty guineas to the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen, in recognition of the valuable service rendered by that institution in providing gratuitous surgical and medical aid to the thousands of smacksmen engaged in the hazardous occupation of deep sea trawling.

HOME FOR CRIPPLED BOYS.—This Home, at Woolsthorpe House, Wright's-lane, Kensington, has now accommodation for training in various occupations one hundred boys, and, for sleeping, eighty-five. The lads are maintained and educated on Christian principles for three years, and taught a trade, so that they may earn their own living when they leave the Home. The Home is open to all who are poor and deserving, and has proved of the greatest benefit to large numbers, from whom good reports are continually being received, some having commenced business on their own account. Mr. T. J. Bovis is the resident secretary.

JUBILEE DINNER TO WIDOWS.

Of the many treats enjoyed this season in Bloomsbury Hall, Meard-street, Soho, the greatest and best came off on Thursday last, when nearly six hundred widows sat down to a Jubilee dinner of roast beef and plum-pudding. Thanks to the liberality of Hon. Thomas Holt, and the excellent management of Mr. William Harrison, the event was a great success. About one thousand widows had sought a share in the bounty of the evening and many a sad tale of single-handed battle was poured into the ears of those who dealt out the tickets. Colonel Chauner took the chair at an entertainment of speech and song, interspersed with ringing of handbells by the boys from Mr. Spurgeon's Orphanage. It seemed most appropriate for the orphans to thus cheer the hearts of the widows. During the evening an address was given by Rev. W. R. Mowll, of All Souls.

The supreme moment was when Mr. Harrison announced that there were gifts to be taken away in the shape of a tract, specially printed for the occasion, a copy of "Christy's Old Organ," and a quarter of a pound of tea. This was good news; but when the speaker added that there was another gift, a coin—not a threepenny-bit, nor a sixpence, nor a shilling—but a new florin, the poor women waved their handkerchiefs, and clapped again and again. As this was a Jubilee dinner, a Jubilee Testament was given to each person, with the royal coat of arms on the cover, and the royal autograph on the flyleaf. A loyal message was sent from the widows present to their widowed Queen.

MISS SHARMAN'S ORPHANS.

On Sunday week a collection was made at Westminster Chapel on behalf of Miss Sharman's Orphanage, and the whole service had reference to that admirable lady and her work. The lessons narrated the giving of manna and the feeding of the thousands in the wilderness, after which specific prayer was offered for the Homes. Rev. H. Simon's text was "Bear ye one another's burdens," found, he told us, upon the cover of the annual report of the Hastings Branch. This branch, he explained, was designed for the orphans of professional men, who, dying in the midst of their work, left no provision for their children—a class hitherto neglected, although specially needing help.

Turning to his text he described the vision, as he saw it, of pilgrims homeward bound, all carrying a load of some sort—young people bounding along with comparatively light burdens, some with imaginary burdens, yet bowing them down to the earth; others with burdens caused by their own wrong-doing—hard to bear, but salutary; and, most heavily weighted of all, those who carried the burdens of friends dearer than life. Some add lead to their neighbours' burdens by a cruel tongue, speaking truth, perhaps, but needlessly. Others were absorbed in their own loads and neglected their neighbours' through mere thoughtlessness; but we are to be sympathetic, kind-hearted, helpful. This is not a piece of good advice only, but "the law of Christ," a royal decree to be broken at our peril. Miss Sharman was bearing the burden of a large family of 308 children; some present had none—surely a sign that they were intended to help these hundreds, and all must do what they could.—British Weekly.

STEPHEN-THE-YEOMAN RAGGED SCHOOL.—At the twenty-seventh annual meeting recently held it was stated that the day and Sunday-school attendance during the year had been very satisfactory, and that at the annual prize competition of the Ragged School Union, twenty-one of the children had been successful. The young women's class has been greatly blessed, several having given evidence of conversion to God. The mothers' meeting, with an attendance of thirty-four, has also been most helpful. The Youths' Institute recently opened has met with encouraging success, and the Band of Hope and other agencies are effectively aiding the good work.

Notes and Comments.

OUR next issue will contain a portrait and sketch of Mr. William Noble, of Hoxton Hall.

Our readers will observe with interest that Mr. Moody is to hold, at Northfield, Mass., another Summer School for Bible Study during the first two weeks of July. We hope all who are concerned for the progress of foreign missions, and who can influence British students, will bring the matter before them and induce as many as possible from this side of the sea to attend the School. The movement among American students has made remarkable progress since last year's School; if the educated Christian youth of Britain and America will join hands in this glorious enterprise, the combination may do more to bring in the fulness of the Gentiles than anything that has happened during the present century.

The Scotch General Assemblies are at hand, when ministers and laymen will take note of the aspects of the times. They will have encouraging facts to record, but much also that should be emphasised on the other side. Scotland, we fear, is beginning to feel the effects of the prevailing religious indifference, not to speak of avowed unbelief, propaganda of Secularist doctrines, and neglect of family religion. These things, we learn, are filling not a few Scotch ministers of influence with deep concern, and we trust some great movement will spring out of their convictions.

"Measures, not men," is a deceitful and mischievous cry. A good man will do good under a bad system; a wicked man will do evil under a good system. The delusive maxim, "Measures, not men," was anticipatively unmasked and denounced by Shakspeare in that pregnant sentence—

> An evil soul producing holy writ
> Is like a villain with a smiling cheek—
> A goodly apple rotten at the core.

If electors were determined to send to Parliament good men, conscientious, God-fearing men, freemen, not slaves of party, men who would govern on the principles of Psalms lxxii. and lxxxii., they need not fear for the measures such men would pass.

There was a worthy attempt made at the Mansion House, last week, to interest city people in the Recreative Evening School Association, at which a member of the Royal House was present, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer assisted with a sympathetic address. Mr. Arnold White has published the fact that the net proceeds of the gathering were £6 5s. 6d. The rich people who attended, having a plethora of recreation themselves, evidently do not recognise its necessity for their poorer fellow citizens.

The New York Independent remarks that The Atlanta Constitution (a secular paper in the States) "says some things in so Christian a way as to make the leaders of religious opinion, North and South, blush." Take this, suggested by Dr. Cuyler's preaching in the pulpit of Dr. Palmer, of New Orleans:—

> There are but two bodies of men in all this country still remaining in formal and stubborn estrangement. These are the Methodist and Presbyterian Churches—the evangelising and conserving influences of our religious system. The Methodist Church with its fire and its fervour, the Presbyterian with its sturdiness and steadfastness—these two Churches, leading in Christian sentiment, remain in an attitude of hostile separation. We could understand how the zealous men of either of these Churches could fall upon each other with the sword of persecution if there was a difference in their creed or belief. But when they agree in even the smallest points of religious faith, and are separated only by a memory, through the fading mists of which all other men have plunged to shake hands in renewed friendship and affection, we may reasonably wonder if the pulpit harbours a stubborn resentment that cannot be justified in the Bible.

"And yet," says The Independent, "there is no sort of probability that the Methodists North and South, or the Presbyterians of the two sections will unite. They continue to do all they can to maintain disunion sentiments."

The very discussion of the subject, however, is a sign of the times, and we are thankful to see it occupying attention in America as well as at home. Of this we are sure: the people care less and less for sectarian distinction; and all that is needed is that their leaders draw near enough to Jesus Christ for party names and vested interests and traditional pride to fade away in the brightness of his glory.

The same paper says:—"We have called attention several times to evidences of the widespread and fruitful character of the revival influences of the winter of 1885-86, and have ventured to call the year 1886 the most prosperous year the evangelical Churches have had in a long period. The Churches have not only held their own—that is, supplied all losses in membership caused by death, withdrawal, expulsion, &c., which in the aggregate are very large—they have increased their lists by fully half a million. It is probably safe to say, taking the whole number of converts into consideration, that for every twelve or fifteen members, one convert was added." This is encouraging, and far better than a decrease, but measured by the powers of the age to come, the promise of the Holy Spirit, the facts of Pentecost, we can only thank God for the drops, and plead with Him for the showers, yea, for "the great rain of his strength."

The victory gained over corrupt legislation, by the repeal in this country of the Contagious Diseases Acts is only the beginning of the Purity Crusade. "The brutal surgical outrage, which is being perpetrated hourly in all parts of the world upon women of every tongue, nation, colour, and religion," to quote the indignant words of Mrs. Butler, is a foul insult to humanity and a blasphemy against God. The heroic men and women who have fought and conquered, in the power of God, against this infamy hitherto, will not, must not, shrink from carrying the battle into every British Colony and every foreign State. And every Christian man and women who loves purity will surely help them.

No one who will be at the trouble to read the details supplied in The Sentinel for May, can be unconvinced of the shame and disgrace that now rest on us as a nation, through the unspeakable conduct of our representatives abroad. Let the conscience of the nation but awake to the responsibility of the hour, and no Government can refuse to carry out its just and righteous demands. As will be seen from our announcements, a great meeting of protest will be held in Exeter Hall on May 20. We hope that all who cannot be present on that occasion will move their representatives in Parliament to co-operate in the wiping out of this foul blot from the nation's escutcheon.

The matter is one that deeply affects the progress of Christ's cause in our colonies. Until we wash our hands of this legalised iniquity, how can we expect God's blessing to rest on our efforts to spread the Gospel in these lands?

Mr. John Wanamaker, the well-known dry goods merchant, of Philadelphia, has commenced a system of profit-sharing with those employed in his immense establishment. Length of service, faithfulness, and business ability will be recognised in arranging the scale of participation. The Illustrated Christian Weekly, of New York, in noticing this generous act, believes it to be "the most practicable solution that has yet been offered to the vexed question of the scale of wages."

Berger Hall, Bow, is an institution, under the management of Miss Guinness and a capable staff of lady teachers, for the purpose of teaching factory girls useful knowledge during their leisure time. In order thoroughly to know the environment of the class she seeks to befriend, Miss Guinness, in the guise of a poor girl, sought for employment in a factory, and fulfilled a week's engagement, for which she drew, as wages, the sum of 2s. What she saw and heard has nerved her to make a great effort for the benefit of her less fortunate sisters.

Mr. Henry Varley has undergone a critical operation, the pain resulting from which was so extreme that even under morphia he was unable to sleep for eight days and nights. We are thankful to learn that he is now progressing favourably.

Mr. Varley, before his illness, had issued a timely tractate, "Priesthood: the True and the False" (Whiting & Co. 1d.). One of the strangest anomalies in the advocacy of the truth of the Gospel is that while Priesthood is the distinct work of our Lord during the present period, it is the least dwelt upon and expounded by evangelical teachers generally. They have much more to say in denunciation of the false than in advocacy of the true. Mr. Varley's pamphlet contains a cogent and valuable exposition of the Melchisedec priesthood in heaven of Jesus, the Son of God, as contrasted with the Popish and Ritualistic imitative continuations of an earthly priesthood after the exhausted and antiquated Aaronic type. Teachers and preachers, and, indeed, all Christians should prayerfully study this important subject; and in doing so, they will find Mr. Varley's argument sound, suggestive and helpful.

In a singular article headed "Oh, deliver me from this Muck-rake," and prefaced by a quotation from "The Pilgrim's Progress," The Pall Mall Gazette has recently dealt with the subject of the proposed reconciliation with the Pope which is now stirring so deeply the Italian mind. From much in that article we strongly dissent; yet we cannot but agree with the writer in his definition of the Pope's ambition to recover "the vulgar, secular right," as a "paltry and sordid one." The student of history is well aware, however, that Rome has never been free from these sordid ambitions, and that Dante, if he were writing to-day, might amplify to an almost unlimited extent the celebrated passages in the nineteenth and other cantos of the "Inferno," which for five centuries have been so unpleasant to defenders of the Papacy.

In a sermon by Bishop Alexander on "The Tolerance and Intolerance of the Gospel," there is a striking passage in which the preacher urges upon Christians the duty of finding out and recognising all that is good in men, and of cultivating along with intolerance of evil principles, tolerance for individuals, quite distinct from anything like morbid sympathy with wrong-doing. This teaching is called for in these days, when so many of our teachers fail to define the boundary where toleration ought to cease: simple as at first glance it may appear, it really strikes at the root of one of the most serious intellectual failings of the age.

The New York Herald has given an account of the sale by auction of a vagrant named Hart, who was sentenced by a magistrate at Kentucky to be "sold for a period of sixty days." Hart was purchased by a Mr. Small, described as a wealthy farmer, who, it is stated, immediately took the man away. This looks remarkably like a revival of slavery, and we trust an explanation may be forthcoming which will satisfactorily account for the strange proceedings. Will any of our readers in America kindly enlighten us?

Few religious bodies have shown more self-sacrifice in the service of Christ than the Moravians, and it is marvellous what an amount of labour for God they have managed to get through so quietly as to have been almost unobserved. It is gratifying to observe that there is no falling off in their zeal. Quite recently an appeal was made from the House for Lepers, which the Society maintains in Jerusalem, for help, and no fewer than nine ladies at once volunteered from Germany to go out as nurses, several ladies, members of the body in England, offering to accompany them. "The Religion of Humanity," about which we are hearing a good deal at present, does not appear to develop anything of this kind, and when we read its high-sounding declarations of love and brotherhood it is difficult to avoid thinking of Heine's cynical statement, that he had been writing all his life in the cause of the working people, but that he had taken care not to touch one of them.

A contemporary states that since the disestablishment of Buddhism in Japan, in the year 1874, the priests of that form of heathenism have dwindled from 244,000 to 50,000. It is pleasant to note also that there is more than a probability of the English and American missions in that land being fused into one.

Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton have published a translation of Dr. Stapfer's "Palestine in the Time of Christ." Despite its taking title, it is not likely to give unmixed pleasure to those into whose hands it may pass. Dr. Stapfer deals so boldly with many topics which most of our commentators and theological writers feel it incumbent upon them to handle cautiously, that we cannot but feel some anxiety for the French Protestants who, it would seem, accept his teachings. We should also be sorry to find certain of his views received in this country. We have sufficient rationalistic teaching in England already, without importing it from foreign sources. In some respects Dr. Stapfer's volume, so far as it deals with the social life of the Jews, might be of use to the Bible student, but we cannot conceive anyone, not a Unitarian, perusing it without finding all his dearest convictions rudely assailed or sneered at.

Now that so much is being said and written with regard to charitable funds on behalf of both poor rectors and poor curates, it is painful to learn that a recently deceased dignitary of the Church held for sixty-six years a living with £1600 per annum, the parish being over three hundred miles from the cathedral to which he was officially attached.

A Society journal calls attention to the fact that unless the arrangements for the Jubilee Thanksgiving Service in Westminster Abbey are modified by Royal command, Court dress for the ladies who attend will be de rigueur. We cannot quote in these columns the scathing terms in which the writer refers to the regulations that would necessitate so undesirable a compliance with fashion; but, if the facts are as stated, the indignation which he professes to feel, and the hope he expresses, that the Scriptural rule for public worship, "decently and in order," may not be departed from, are certainly not out of place.

We deem ourselves to be the most loyal of subjects, and consider it right to rejoice greatly, and in no niggardly way, that God has spared our Queen to this year of her Jubilee on the throne. But we respectfully demur at the resolution of the Government to throw away £20,000 in decorating Westminster Abbey for a single service; and no less at the decision of the City Corporation, to give a grand ball and reception at a cost of £6000. Such wasteful extravagance, and misappropriation of public money, in times of abounding poverty and distress, make us thankful that a national Jubilee is a rare event.

Much more to be commended is the decision of the British residents in Vienna, to establish a Governess' Home for their countrywomen in that gay city.

"If the righteous man is scarcely saved." This cannot mean that all the saved will be scarcely saved; for in the next Epistle the Apostle says, that they who give diligence to add to their faith, virtue, and the other graces shall have an abundant entrance. Peter, like Paul, distinguishes between the righteous man and the good man. Here he seems to have in his mind "righteous Lot," whom he mentions in the second Epistle; and who was scarcely saved. There is a like difference between him and Abraham, or Enoch, to that between the righteous man for whom "scarcely would one die," and the good man for whom "one would even dare to die."

The slow progress of temperance reform shows how much easier it is to plant an evil seed than to uproot the full-grown tree that springs from it. The Prohibition movement in the United States has received a temporary check by the defeat of the amendment submitted to the popular vote in Michigan. If it should turn out, however, that this result has been achieved by fraud, the outcome may be as unwelcome to the defenders of the traffic, as was that of the cold-blooded murder of Mr. Hallock, in Iowa, which has given a decided impetus to repressive measures.

The recent plebiscites in Glasgow and other Scotch towns clearly show that in that part of our country, at any rate, a local option scheme, or even a prohibitory enactment, would be decided by great majorities in favour of throttling the foul and fatal traffic. Mr. Axel Gustafson is doing good service to the movement by his pen. The fact that The Times has brought its heavy artillery to bear upon him is perhaps the best sign that he is making his power felt. His article in the April Contemporary clearly describes the present position of the crusade in the States. We trust that the tone of hopefulness in which he writes will be infectious. Nothing helps on a cause more than confidence in ultimate victory.

In a letter to Rev. T. W. Brown, of the Turkish Missions Aid Society, Dr. Constantine, missionary to the Greeks in Smyrna, tells of a violent attack of persecution. Evangelical Christians were attacked in the streets, while the hall of meeting, the American Chapel, the British School, and Dr. Constantine's house, all suffered from the fury of the mob. Happily the American Consul interfered, or the consequences might have been very serious.

Dr. Constantine accuses the local authorities of indifference in the matter, and says:—

> In justification our enemies say that we have used abusive language against the orthodox Christians. This is not true. As a principle I never attack others, but preach to sinners irrespective of Church relation. The cruelty and violence and hatred manifested were astonishing. The Turkish authorities demand a firman that we may be allowed to use the hall—a thing not demanded anywhere else or by anyone else. A little friendly sympathy from the English authorities may accomplish all that is needed, but we ask God's people everywhere to pray for us and our enemies.

We trust that the home authorities will exercise a mediating influence on behalf of freedom of worship, and we are sure the appeal for prayer will be heartily responded to.

While awakenings among the Jews are taking place elsewhere, the pauperism now so prevalent among them at the East-end of London will surely suggest corrective lessons. God's promise to their fathers, if they walked in his ways, was a blessing on their basket and their store, whereas, according to The Spectator, of the 23rd ult., every third Jew in London was last year in receipt of poor relief, and every second Jewish funeral in the Metropolitan area was a pauper funeral. Forty-six thousand is put down as the number of English and foreign Jews in London, and in 1866 no less than 14,350 received poor relief. Let us pray that they may ponder what the Lord would teach them by these painful experiences.

A correspondent sends to us an excellent suggestion, mooted at one of the missionary anniversaries last week—that the amounts representing the penny reduction in the income tax should be devoted to foreign missions. If all income tax payers would adopt the suggestion, the missionary coffers would be benefited to the extent of over a million and a half sterling.

The wave of missionary interest has now to some extent reached our Y.M.C.A. and Y.W.C.A., and much may be hoped for in that direction. Home evangelists are also taking up the subject, and some of them make it a practice to have at least one day at the close of every Gospel mission devoted to a consideration of the needs of the foreign field. We hope the time may soon come when this will be an established and universal practice.

In his missionary addresses, Mr. Hudson Taylor drops many a pregnant sentence that is worth treasuring up in the memory and heart, as a seed thought. Here are several :—

> We ought to have in the foreign field at least ten "laymen" for every "ordained" missionary.
> The Lord's hundreds are very big ones.
> Let us make Zenana prisons into Zenana heavens.
> Talk about sacrifice! I never made such a good investment in my life, as when I gave myself to work in China.
> It is in our power to turn the Man of Sorrows into the Man of Joys.

In connection with the recent articles in our columns on the relation of native converts to missionary work in foreign lands, it is interesting to read a paper in the New York Independent, of April 7, on the same topic, by Rev. S. F. Woodin, of the American Mission in China. He asserts that the system of paying native converts to engage in evangelistic work has generally proved a failure. It tends to make people look on these converts simply as emissaries in the pay of the foreigner, and thereby hinders their testimony. The writer commends the methods of Dr. Nevius, and puts the whole case in a nutshell, thus :—

> The Scriptural and natural method of spreading the Gospel in heathen lands seems to be this :—A few missionaries of entire self-devotion to the work, go to a heathen city, or district of country, and labour. In due time God gives his blessing, and some of the natives are converted. They, working at their former lawful callings, tell their relatives and neighbours of the truth they have received, and some of them are converted. From them the truth spreads in constantly widening circles. The Christians meet in each other's houses for prayer and reading of the Word and exhortation. Those who are found more zealous and useful in exhorting soon begin to lead the Sunday services. They, too, receive more direct instruction from the missionary. By and by they go out on the Sabbath and other days when they have leisure, to the near villages where they have relatives, or there are those friendly to the truth, and preach and exhort, working during the week at their various occupations. In due time they choose pastors for themselves. The work goes on naturally and with less ground for suspicion and opposition. The results of such work may be expected to have greater permanence and real life.

With a return to primitive enthusiasm, as well as to primitive methods, what might the Church not do in carrying the Gospel into all the world?

One of the speakers at the Baptist Missionary Meeting last week expressed the belief that in two centuries from now the whole world might be evangelised. Dr. Pierson, of Philadelphia, has stated that it ought to be done by the end of this century. Mr. Hudson Taylor is bolder, for he does not hesitate to say that it might be done within five years. "According to your faith be it unto you."

We learn with great regret that the esteemed author of a well-known poem—"The Starless Crown"—is in straitened circumstances.

Captain Conder's learned and comprehensive book, "Syrian Stone-Lore" (Bentley & Son) contains the following statement, which may be specially noted. Existing monuments prove that considerable civilisation prevailed among the Canaanites before the invasion of Joshua; they had walled cities, chariots, works of art, and riches in gold, silver, &c. Also, we should have learnt from stone-records, had the Bible never been written, that the Hebrews were not a rude and savage people, as modern sceptics have represented, but possessed an art of writing extending back much more than a thousand years B.C. They were able to defy great monarchies, and existed in the very centre of the ancient world with a worship of Jehovah that must have made them a witness to all the nations.

An Irish contemporary, alluding to the striking fact that in Cork, the very centre of Romanism in the sister isle, the secretary handed up a purse containing one hundred guineas which he had collected in small sums for mission work, says :—

> Ireland's part in the evangelisation of the world is not yet exhausted. Our part in the salvation of Ireland is not over. Neither troubles of the times now, nor the outlook for the future, will lead us to abandon a foothold in the country. The spirit which sent John Hunt to Fiji, George Piercy to China, or Barnabas Shaw to Africa, will occupy Ireland, until from the sturdy North to the restless South there shall be the reign of one Lord, and his name one. Our forefathers did not begin their labours in Ireland under circumstances of ease. The men who planted the Gospel seed through every county were not accustomed to judge of their duty by the standard of man's will. Their commission was their charter, and the Lord was their strength. So it will be with their children and successors now.

Whilst the Christian is not required in any sense to become an ascetic, it is at the same time incumbent upon him to live as one who in the world is yet not of it. Many endeavours, more or less successful, have been made to define the boundary line beyond which the Christian ought not to go, and the following statement of the case from the pen of Rev. A. W. Momerie may be found helpful to those to whom the subject is of interest :—

> In a word, though there is not required from us any irrational rejection of pleasure, there is required from us the reasoning and reasonable rejection of it, where it would be incompatible with our complete all-round development. Though there is not required from us any hypocritical profession of contempt for the world in which we live, there is required from us serious reflection upon the fact that we carry latent within us "the power of an endless life."

The armies on the Continent amount, we are told, to 9,847,084 men, and the cost of training, maintaining, and furnishing them with munitions of war amounts to the enormous sum of £640,000,000 yearly. How can the nations prosper under this grinding weight? Surely Europe is coming to a crisis, when nothing but some Divine interposition can save it from itself.

THE SOUTH COAST.

A NOTICE appeared in our columns a few weeks ago of a work of grace at Fairlight, Sussex. God was pleased to use Mr. Spencer Walton's visit, in very marked manner, to the salvation of souls. Within the last three weeks Mr. J. B. Bain has conducted a Mission there, and beyond all doubt a wonderful work of grace is going on in the parish. The power of the Holy Spirit is very real in the meetings. One night all remained to the after-meeting, and some of these have been very blessed seasons.

At noon the vicar's wife and her servants (all Christians) have for some years met for prayer, besides the weekly prayer-meeting in the schoolroom. Now blessing has come, and many have been saved. Fairlight is quite a country parish; the people have far to come to the place of meeting. But they do come, and often remain for two hours, although some require to be at work by 4 o'clock a.m. These facts ought to encourage others to believing prayer.

Mr. Bain's next mission was at Rye Harbour, eight miles from Fairlight. The good news had gone before the evangelist, and from the beginning he saw that the Lord had prepared the hearts of the people. The long sowing and loving labour of the godly missionary were now to be owned; but none expected to see such blessing. On the fourth night (Good Friday) the mighty power of God seemed to descend. Strong men wept like children, and decided for Christ. Sunday night was a repetition of the same experience. The work goes on well. The evangelist has concluded a mission at the Y.W.C.A., Hastings. At every meeting some professed to decide for Christ. As they went on, the power of the Spirit increased. Few will forget the last two meetings. Every heart seemed to realise that God Himself was present; the after-meetings showed this. Here, again, much prayer had been offered by the godly women whose time is given to the work of the Y.W.C.A.

All these missions were conducted on behalf of the Evangelisation Society. Mr. Bain's engagement with the Society terminates this week, and he will be glad to hear from any friends who may desire to arrange for missions. His address is, 10, Magdalen-terrace, St. Leonards-on-Sea.

OBITUARY.

LORD KINNAIRD.

WE regret to record the death of Lord Kinnaird, which took place on Tuesday week at his town residence, 2, Pall Mall East, in his seventy-third year. His lordship had been in failing health for some time past, but it was only during the last few days that his condition had been such as to cause serious anxiety. His lordship has ever taken a deep and practical interest in religious and philanthropic movements, though, owing to his increasing illness, he of late years has been seldom seen in public. Perhaps the society with which he was most deeply concerned was the Young Women's Christian Association. It is to his efforts, supplemented as they were by those of Lady Kinnaird and their daughters, that the brilliant success of the Association is mainly due. He also did much useful work in connection with Dr. Barnardo's Homes, and the London City Mission, the Aged Christians' Society, and other institutions of a religious and philanthropic character. His good offices were at the disposal of no one particular section of the Christian Church. If the cause were the Master's, that was sufficient to win sympathy and support. His lordship is succeeded by his son, the Hon. Arthur Fitzgerald Kinnaird, who was born in 1847, and married, in 1875, Mary Alma Victoria, daughter of Sir Andrew Agnew. Like his father, the new peer has thrown himself very warmly into all kinds of religious work.

MRS. ASHTON.

After an illness of over five years Mrs. Ashton, so well known in her labours among the poor in connection with the South London Mission for over twenty years, fell asleep in Jesus, on Wednesday last, at 122, Loughborough-park, Brixton. The sweetness of communion with her Lord remained undisturbed during the whole time of her long affliction.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, MAY 8.—PSALM XCII.

This "Psalm or Song for the Sabbath day" shows the transition from the Old Testament thought of Creation rest to the New Testament conception of Redemption rest. The sacred name "Jehovah" occurs in it seven times. The fourth, or central occurrence, being in the 8th verse—the very centre of the Psalm.

1.—To sing praises unto thy name, O most High.—The Sabbath among the Jews was never associated with gloom, it was to be called "a delight" (Isa. lviii. 13), and the promise annexed to the turning away from self, "thine own ways," "thine own pleasure," "thine own words," was "then shalt thou delight thyself in the Lord." Originally founded to commemorate God's rest in creation, it gradually pointed on to, and at last gave way to, the commemoration of the higher rest of redemption.

4.—For Thou, Lord, hast made me glad through thy work.—God wrought a perfect work in creation, but sin came in and marred it, and God had to work again. "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work," was the answer of Christ to the Jews (John v.) who accused Him of breaking the Sabbath because He had "made a man every whit whole on the Sabbath day." This new work of redemption is what we now commemorate on the Lord's day, the day that Christ was raised from the dead, and of this every true believer can say, "Thou, Lord, hast made me glad through thy work; I will triumph in the works of thy hands."

6.—A brutish man knoweth not.—"The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God . . . they are spiritually discerned" (1 Cor. ii. 14). Man at his highest estate of governmental power is, as shown in the case of Nebuchadnezzar, but a "brute" in God's sight. In the Millennial Sabbath the rule of the successive beast-kingdoms will be replaced by the rule of the Son of Man (Dan. vii. 13).

13.—Those that be planted in the house of the Lord.—"Much depends upon the soil in which a tree is planted; everything in our case depends upon our abiding in the Lord Jesus, and deriving all our supplies from Him."—C. H. Spurgeon.

MONDAY, MAY 9.—PSALM XCIII.

This Psalm is identified in subject with the preceding. Hengstenberg notices the reference of "the Lord on high is mightier" (ver. 4) to "Thou, Lord, art most high for evermore" (xcii. 8). They are also connected by the thought of the Sabbath-rest which remaineth for the people of God, which is the subject of this one.

1.—The Lord reigneth, He is clothed with majesty.—This is distinctly Millennial, or at least points to the time spoken of (Rev. xi. 15), when "the kingdoms of the world become" those of "our Lord, and of his Christ," when it can be said, "Thou hast taken to Thee thy great power, and hast reigned."

3.—The floods have lifted up their voice.—"The waters thou sawest...are peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues" (Rev. xvii. 15. "Rivers are emblems of worldly kingdoms, as the Nile of Egypt (Jer. xlvi. 7), the Euphrates of Assyria (Isa. viii. 7), and the Euphrates (also) of the Babylonian Empire (Isa. xxvii. 1)."—Delitzsch.

5.—Holiness becometh thine house, O Lord, for ever.—Compare Zech. xiv.: "In that day shall there be upon the bells of the horses, Holiness unto the Lord!...yea, every pot in Jerusalem and in Judah shall be holiness unto the Lord of hosts." There is a spiritual sense in which the verse applies to all time.

TUESDAY, MAY 10.—PSALM XCIV.

The time when the Lord takes to Himself his great power and reigns (the subject of the last Psalm), is also that of which it is said, "the time...that Thou shouldest destroy them which destroy the earth" (Rev. xi. 18).

1.—O Lord God, to whom vengeance belongeth.—It is well to remember the distinction between vengeance and revenge. Dr. Johnson says, "Revenge is an act of passion, vengeance of justice; injuries are revenged, crimes avenged." It would be wrong for Protestants, for example, to revenge themselves on Rome for the cruel persecutions they have suffered at her hands; but it is right to pray in the language of Milton, "Avenge, O Lord, thy slaughtered saints," &c. Vengeance is judicial, and must be left in his hands "to whom it belongeth," with the prayer, "show Thyself." See Luke xviii. 3.

8.—Understand, ye brutish among the people.—The word in Hebrew for "understand" is the same as that rendered "regard" in the last verse. Hence R.V. rightly translates both by the same word, "Neither shall the God of Jacob consider. Consider, ye brutish," &c.

14.—The Lord will not cast off his people.—"He may cast them down, but He never can cast them off."—C. H. Spurgeon.

15.—Judgment shall return unto righteousness.—"Judgment, which at present is turned back, inasmuch as the wicked have the upper hand (Hab. i. 13), is brought back at the proper time to righteousness, is again administered according to its rule. The "upright in heart" accompany it with the joy of their heart. Comp. the song of triumph of the Lord's people over the fall of the king of Babylon in Isa. xiv.—Hengstenberg. Comp. also Rev. xix. 2.

18.—When I said, My foot slippeth.—It should rather be "When I say," as the Psalmist is stating a general principle, apart from any special occasion. "If I say 'my foot slides,' thy mercy, O Lord, holds me up."—Hengstenberg. Instant confession of failure is accompanied by instant deliverance. "When he appears to himself already as one that has fallen, God's mercy holds him up."—Delitzsch.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 11.—PSALM XCV.

Seven verses in which "the Church stirs itself up to a worshipping appearing before its God" are followed up by four, in which "the voice of God is heard earnestly admonishing from out of the sanctuary."—Delitzsch.

7.—We are the people of his pasture, and the sheep of his hand.—The two chief points of the shepherd's office are here alluded to, viz., to feed, and to tend or rule. If Israel make such a profession as this, they need to be reminded that in the Lord's flock while here below there are goats as well as sheep (Matt. xxv. 32), and that "they are not all Israel which are of Israel" (Rom. ix. 6). Hence the solemn exhortation which the Lord now addresses to them.

7, 8.—To-day if ye will hear his voice, harden not your heart.—"The favoured nation grew deaf to their Lord's command, and proved (with two exceptions) not to be truly his sheep, of whom it is written, 'My sheep hear my voice.' 'To-day,' in the hour of grace, in the day of mercy, we are tried as to whether we have an ear for the voice of our Creator. Nothing is said of 'to-morrow.' He 'limiteth a certain day,' He presses for immediate attention. We cannot soften our hearts, but we can harden them, and the consequences will be fatal."—C. H. S.

11.—Unto whom I sware in my wrath that they should not enter into my rest.—"It is the oath in Num. xiv. 27 which is meant. If now, many centuries after Moses, they are invited in David's Psalter to submissive adoration of Jehovah, with a reference to the warning example of the fathers, the obedience of faith has now in consequence to look forward to the gracious reward of entering into God's rest, which the disobedient at that time lost. Canaan was not, therefore, the final 'rest.' This is the connection of the vein of thought in Heb. iii., iv."—Delitzsch.

THURSDAY, MAY 12.—PSALM XCVI.

We learn from 1 Chron. xvi. that this Psalm formed part of the hymn of praise which David "delivered to thank the Lord into the hand of Asaph and his brethren," on the occasion of the bringing up the Ark into the tent on Mount Zion which David had pitched for it. In spirit it is a Millennial Psalm, and is thus in keeping with the group of Psalms in which it occurs (xcii.—c.), all of which point on to the Sabbath of this world's history—the "rest that remaineth for the people of God" (Heb. ii. 9). "The subject is a call to praise, in view of Christ's second advent and glorious reign. To apply it, look forward to the glorious day of the Lord's coming, and realise its approach, that you may prepare for it."—A. R. C. Dallas.

1.—O sing unto the Lord a new song: sing unto the Lord, all the earth.—Both the newness of the song, and the universality of the sphere in which it is sung, point to a new state of things, such as we have still to look forward to. We have now "things new and old," but the old greatly preponderate.

8.—Bring an offering, and come into his courts.—According to Ezekiel xl. to end, there will be a renewal of sacrifices for the earthly people during Millennial times. The allusion to such a state of things here is, therefore, an undesigned coincidence.

9.—Worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness.—The expression "beauty of holiness" seems to point to the externals of worship suitable to that of an earthly people. R.V. margin has "in holy array." It does not refer to the worship of the present dispensation, which is spiritual (John iv. 21—24), and independent of externals.

FRIDAY, MAY 13.—PSALM XCVII.

1.—The Lord reigneth.—Professor Cheyne renders this verse, "Jehovah has become King; let the earth exult, let many far-off lands rejoice."

3.—A fire goeth before Him, and burneth up his enemies round about.—"The Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven in flaming fire, taking vengeance on those who (as the Greek implies) would not know God, and would not obey the Gospel" (2 Thess. i. 8).

7.—Worship Him, all ye gods.—This verse is quoted Heb. i. 6 as referring to the bringing in again the First Begotten into the world. He was rejected at his first Advent, He is brought in again at the second Advent.

10.—Ye that love the Lord, hate evil.—A striking proof of the eminently practical character of Second Advent truth. It is not, as some would have it, speculative in its character, but as it vividly brings before us God's hatred of evil in the fearful judgments then to be manifested, so does it suggest the practical lesson given above to those who love the Lord and his appearing.

11.—Light is sown for the righteous.—"This is only for those who are right before the Lord in his own righteousness; for all others the blackness of darkness is reserved."—C.H.S.

SATURDAY, MAY 14.—PSALM XCVIII.

"The present Psalm is a kind of coronation hymn officially proclaiming the conquering Messiah as Monarch over the nations, with blast of trumpets, clapping of hands, and celebration of triumphs."—C.H.S.

1.—His right hand and his holy arm hath gotten Him the victory.—However truly these words may be applied to Christ's victory over sin and Satan on the cross, it is probable that they refer here rather to his conquest over his foes at his second coming. Compare Isa. lix. 16 and lxiii. 5, where similar language is used in connection with his final conflict with his enemies, apparently that spoken of in Rev. xix. 19.

4.—Make a joyful noise unto the Lord, all the earth.—"All the earth Jehovah made, and all the earth must sing to Him. The multitudinous languages of the sons of Adam who were scattered at Babel, will blend in the same song when the people are gathered at Zion. Not men alone, but the earth itself is to praise its Maker. Made subject to vanity for a while by a sad necessity, the creation itself is also to be delivered from the bondage of corruption, and brought into the glorious liberty of the children of God, so that sea and forest, field and flood, are to be joyful before the Lord. Is this a dream? Then let us dream again. Blessed are the eyes which shall see the kingdom, and the ears which shall hear its songs. Hasten thine advent, good Lord!"
—C. H. Spurgeon.

PIONEERING in NEW GUINEA

By JAMES CHALMERS, of New Guinea,
Author of "Work and Adventure in New Guinea."
With a Map, Two Portraits, and Illustrations,
Engraved by E. Whymper, from Photographs taken by Lindt, of Melbourne.

This volume contains an account of Mr. Chalmers' most important Explorations, including his long visit to the Cannibals of the Gulf, and also many sketches of New Guinea life, customs, habits and beliefs. Mr. Chalmers has lived and travelled in New Guinea for the last eight years. He is known to all the tribes along the South-East Coast, and is the personal friend of many of the chiefs. He has successfully planted Christian teachers in many parts, and returns in a few weeks to carry on this work. He knows the New Guinea people in a way unapproached by any other white man, and as the power of Christianity is already beginning to influence their customs, this record of his travels and the condition in which he found the various tribes must always remain unique. The book contains much to interest those who are helping Christian Missions, those who love true stories of thrilling adventure, and those who wish to know the habits and thoughts of a fine race of savages wholly untouched by Christianity or civilization until 1872.

Mr. Chalmers, acting as interpreter, accompanied the Government Expeditions to proclaim the protectorate which he describes in the book, and was with Sir Peter Scratchley until a few days before the death of the High Commissioner.

VICTORIA R. I.

HER LIFE AND REIGN.

BY DR. MACAULAY,
Author of "Sea Pictures," "Luther Anecdotes, &c.
With Five Portraits of the Queen and Sixty Engravings by E. Whymper, and others.
Small 4to., 10s. 6d., cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges.

This book is intended to be more than a passing memorial of the Jubilee Year. It contains a complete sketch of the leading personal and public events in the life of the Queen. It also contains very careful sketches, written in Dr. Macaulay's popular style, of the religious, educational, social, and political progress during the last wonderful half-century. MISSIONARY'S OUTFIT FOR CHINA.

[The visit to Scotland of Mr. Hudson Taylor and other representatives of the China Inland Mission has excited no ordinary measure of interest; and, as a sample of its practical results, we may mention that in Glasgow alone many young Christians have offered themselves for service in China. By these, as well as by candidates in other parts of the country, the following observations with respect to outfit will be read with advantage; while they are sure also to interest Christian friends remaining at home. They are written only for men intending to wear the native dress in China, and with a view to the minimum outfit.]

The passage to China by steamer usually takes six or seven weeks, and the temperature you may expect, on the whole, is extreme heat; but if you are starting in the winter you will encounter extreme cold in the English Channel and the China Seas, and moderate heat in the tropics. Your clothing should be arranged accordingly. I advise you to take very few things indeed for the passage. The suit you may be wearing at home, no doubt, will suffice for the voyage. Take two flannel shirts for shipboard, and one or two white linen shirts for making visits at Colombo, Singapore, Hong Kong; a couple of pair of white linen trousers for the tropics, a short alpaca jacket, two suits of woollen pajamas (these are sleeping-suits and are useful also in China), one dozen handkerchiefs, half a dozen pairs of socks (if they are wholly white they are useful in China), a pair of ordinary English shoes, a cheap pair of deck shoes, a box of paper collars, comb, brush, tooth-brush, and soap. A sun-helmet and umbrella, with three or four white umbrella coverings, will complete your equipment. Be careful against over-exposure to the sun. The steward of each ship—as you change vessels at Colombo by P. and O.—should have at the least five shillings. On the P. and O. (2nd class) food is plentiful, but if travelling by French mail (3rd class), you should take some biscuits and cheese for lunch, as there is no meal provided between ten and five o'clock.

Now with regard to China, again take as little as possible, and use only strong boxes, size:—2 ft. by 1½ ft. by 1 ft. Boxes not intended to be opened on voyage should be zinc-lined and soldered down. Except, perhaps, seven yards of double width black Italian or satin cloth, take no material for native dress. The most suitable materials can be better obtained in China than here. When you arrive at Shanghai get simply a native suit as cheaply as possible—that is, hat, gown, makwa or jacket, collar, trousers (but see below), a couple of shirts, and shoes. By all means let the shoes be large and easy to your feet, or you will suffer for it. You can use the white socks brought from home, but buy another half-dozen native pairs. When you get into the interior you will find out better, and understand better, what you want further. I do not see the necessity for dispensing with your English trousers if dark blue, black, or grey, as for a few pence a Chinese tailor in Shanghai (or if there is not time there, say in Gan-king) can be called in, who will very soon alter them into native fashion. A good pair of English boots I should take into the interior for use when travelling in wet weather, but opinions differ on this point. You will discard all the rest of the English outer dress. White linen shirts, collars, neckties and gloves are of no use whatever, but I advise you to take all your flannel shirts and other underclothing; also six pairs of woollen socks (for winter use under native socks), and a few dozen handkerchiefs. English calico is perhaps useful for making up into Chinese summer shirts (the making up, however, should not be done until you are in the interior), but the native calico is stouter and more suitable for winter use. If you take any, say 18 yards. Do not take any unmade-up flannel. Take no material for your pu-kai; the blue pu of the country is well adapted for the purpose The pu kai is a Chinese wadded coverlet or bed which has to be made on your arrival in Shanghai, and has to be carried by you, of course, wherever you go, when travelling.

Take the following articles:—A couple of pillows, and have an extra pillow-case made for each of some coloured washable material; half-a-dozen towels, a large sponge and toilet soap; two pairs of calico sheets, which you will find useful in sickness; two railway rugs if you have them, or better still, two army blankets; twelve yards of white mosquito netting; also a good but small clock, an etna (you can use native wine in it), and knife, fork, and spoon. It is worth while having a portable case of tools. If you have a large, good, indiarubber sheet it will be useful, as you can throw it over your baggage when travelling in wet weather, or place it under your pu-kai when spread out at night. I found a very light (light, I mean, in weight) waterproof tweed "Inverness" overcoat admirably adapted for travelling on mule-back in the rain. No other shape is equally good. Mr. Beauchamp found a pair of English leather saddle-bags very useful in travelling on mule or donkey; but, of course, I should only advise those who have private means of their own to take them out. I agree with those who think it is advisable in China to wear a flannel belt round the stomach. (Of course you would want at least two with you.) If you do not do so, have a cholera-belt always by you, which you can slip on when you feel a touch of diarrhœa. One or two pairs of superior dark spectacles are serviceable to protect the eyes from the glare of the sun. You need not take paraffin-lamps, as they can be bought in Shanghai, and the oil in many places in the interior. A packet of candles, purchasable in Shanghai, are useful in travelling in the interior Take a good supply of note and MS. books, stationery, pens, pencils, carbon paper and carbon letter-books, and a shilling pair of pocket letter scales. Take nothing that is made of American cloth. Elastic bands soon wear out in China.

It should be borne in mind that travellers are only allowed by the steamship companies to carry a limited amount of baggage free, and all over that amount has to be paid for as extra baggage.

With regard to books, only take a few of the very best and especially those bearing on the elucidation of the text of Scripture (especially New Testament). A good commentary is valuable. In almost every station you will find a general library, to which you can have access, no doubt, if you wish it; but the first twelve or eighteen months, at least, will be fully taken up with learning the Chinese language, and this will leave but little time for general reading.

With regard to medical stores, I can say nothing except that a supply of quinine is useful at times. Be vaccinated and visit the dentist before you leave home. William J. Lewis.

MISSION TO ZULU-KAFFIRS.

The Rock Fountain Mission, established by Mr. and Mrs. Elbert S. Clarke, is well known to many of our readers who take an interest in missionary work in South Africa. This interest will be quickened by reading the report of the eighth year's work in connection therewith. The Mission was established on the bare hillside, where no missionary had ever lived, amongst Umkolisa tribe, and in addition to this there are now two out-stations—Hope Vale and the Entakama—both of them important centres for missionary work. Much of Mr. Clarke's work consists in itinerating amongst the heathen. A native teacher and preacher settled at Entakama is carrying on the Gospel work at the three stations in conjunction with the native schoolmaster at Hope Vale, where also there is a school with a regular attendance of twenty children, and which the Government Inspector has now recommended for a grant.

Mr. Clarke, who is now in England, gives some extracts from his note-book, which show that the people not only listen eagerly to the Gospel, but have in many cases gladly accepted it, one Chief having made a public confession of his love for the Saviour.

BOSTON, U.S.—On Wednesday, April 6, Pilgrim Hall was crowded by earnest Christian people, mostly ladies, who had gathered to listen to the parting words of, and say farewell to, thirteen missionaries, who were about returning to their mission fields in Turkey.

PEACE IN OUR TIME.—At a meeting of the General Synod of the Church of Ireland last week a communication was received from the Peace Committee of the Society of Friends, asking, in view of the threatening aspect of affairs in Europe "Are the Churches of Christ faithfully using their influence to abate the war spirit at home and abroad?" A message of cordial response was sent by the Synod.

THIS is a carefully executed and admirable work on a much canvassed theme. The style is clear and vigorous, and the thinking masculine. Every chapter will commend itself to the reader, as done with care and intelligence; and, while Dr. Taylor may fail, like all his predecessors, to carry conviction on every point, or to make every item in the story to dovetail with the interpretation proposed, the result will not fail to supply mental quickening and matter for edification.

We are not quite satisfied with Dr. Taylor's answer to the question, Why the Lord Jesus used parables in his discourses. The answer returned is very able of its kind, but proceeds rather on popular than Scriptural lines. We do not think the interest people in general have in stories was in any degree the reason why our Lord availed himself of parabolic speech. Nor do we think that our Lord intended by parables "to prevent his auditors from being repelled by a too sudden revelation, either of his purpose, or his message." No more can we believe that the object designed was to convey reproof in a covert kind of way, after the manner in which Nathan acted with David. Our view is that our Lord's public ministry is divided into two parts; in the former of which He spake openly to the people without reserve or interposition of cloud. But, being rejected of his own, He suddenly changed his front and proceeded to deal with them judicially in parable, "that seeing they might not see, and hearing they might not understand." It is this feature in the case which, in the Synoptic Gospels, is so strongly emphasised, and it is here, if anywhere, we are to get the real answer to the question why our Lord used parables. At the same time, to those who were willing to learn the mysteries of the kingdom were made known through these very parables, the Lord Himself expounding them to his disciples.

With regard to the true mode of interpreting parables, we are mainly at one with the author. "Each is told for the enforcement of one main truth," and to the elucidation of this, rather than to the spiritualising of every detail, the attention of the expositor is to be turned. Dr. Taylor will be found to be true to this principle. Thus "the Parable of the Sower," called in this work "the Parable of the four kinds of soil," is interpreted to mean that "the growth of the seed depends always on the quality of the soil." In the case of the tares and the dragnet, parables which in this exposition are grouped together, the clue is more difficult to find; still, in respect of this maze, our author seems to us a trusty and able guide. As Dr. Bruce has said, "Christ is not here laying down a rule for the regulation of Christian practice, but inculcating the cultivation of a certain spirit, the spirit of a wise patience." We quite agree with our author, versus Dr. Arnot, that the field intended is Christendom, and not the world of humanity, and that the main thought is that "the premature effort to secure the absolute best may result in the positive worst." It is not that discipline is forbidden, but that forbearance is commended, akin to that which Christ Himself showed to his disciples.

Our readers will sufficiently understand Dr. Taylor's treatment of the mustard seed and the leaven when we say it proceeds on the lines of popular exposition. According to the Doctor, neither these parables nor the others contained in the similitudes have anything to do with the discussion of Millennarian theories. We much regret that Dr. Taylor has not seen fit to adduce any reason at all for his opinion in this matter. So far as we are aware, he is absolutely alone in holding it. All others who hold his scheme of interpretation direct it against the pre-Millennial view. If these parables teach that the Gospel, by a gradual, stealthy, continuous process, transforms and assimilates the whole mass of mankind to itself, then manifestly, whether Dr. Taylor chooses to see it or not, a Millennarian theory is involved, definite, and clearly cut, which is nothing less than an extinguisher of the pre-Millennial hope. Nor is that all. He ought in all fairness, if it be possible, to reconcile contradictories, and to show how his interpretation of the mustard seed and the leaven can possibly co-exist with the sketch of Christendom which the tares and the dragnet provide. It almost seems as if Dr. Taylor opined that, in these matters, discretion was the better part of valour. We cannot say that we admire his refusal to face the difficulty, or to accept the logical consequences of his own interpretations.

Excellent as this work is as a whole, and fitted to take high rank among expositions of the parables, there is yet in our judgment a weak link in the chain. Dr. Taylor is not sufficiently alive to the necessity of such an interpretation of the parables as shall be self-consistent throughout. The idea too largely in this work is to explain the parables as if they were eccentric circles having no points of contact. Allowance is not sufficiently made for the inevitable demand of the mind that the parabolic truth brought forth be in consistence with itself. Thus it is not enough to say that the parable of the virgins sets forth the condition of things at Christ's second coming, the intermingling of the real and genuine, that the Master shall winnow them. We want to know how that view is compatible with the gradual transformation and assimilation of humanity by the Gospel to its own nature. It will not do to give one exposition at one part and forget it at another, simply on the principle that circumstances alter cases. In our judgment, an exposition of the parables to be complete must be harmonious throughout. Able as Dr. Taylor's work is, we cannot give it such high praise. On the Millennial question, at least, it comes short of it.

But amid so much that is excellent, it is not meet to dwell on a flaw. We would, in closing, draw special attention to the exposition of the Rich Man and Lazarus. This is a study for the times:—

> There is further revealed here the eternity of the duration of the punishment. I cannot see how else the fixity of that gulf is to be understood. It is as true that no change of place is possible to those who are here described, as it is that, if Moses and the prophets be not heard, the mission of one from the dead will be in vain. For both of these announcements stand on the same plane. I know that it is said that this is Hades—the state of disembodied spirits—intervening between this life and the general resurrection and judgment. Be it so. I accept the representation. But that completely explodes the modern notion of Dorner and others, that probation continues through that state, and is only terminated at the resurrection and the final judgment. For how can there be probation, with this impossibility of passing from one place to the other? There is here no possible probation in the intermediate state; and there is not a single word in all the Scriptures which indicates that there will be probation after the judgment—not one. That ought to be enough, and with that I leave the subject to stand before you in its own dread and awful solemnity.

A cogent testimony which may the Spirit of God write on all our hearts. D.

THE BOYLE LECTURES for 1887 will be delivered at the Chapel Royal, Whitehall, every Sunday from May 1 to July 3 inclusive (except June 12 and 19), at 3.30 p.m., by Rev. C. Lloyd Engström, secretary and lecturer of the Christian Evidence Society. Subject, "Human Nature and the Evidences of Religion."

THE MISSION SHIPS.—We stated in our last that the £225 which the sale of the Annie realised goes towards "the £550 which the new ship, the Herald of Mercy, will cost." Mr. Cook writes that the entire cost of building and furnishing the latter vessel is £1350, of which £1000 has been already received, leaving £350 still required.

WOODBRIDGE, SUFFOLK, Y.M.C.A.—A public meeting of this branch was recently held in the large lecture hall. Rev. A. J. Begbie, vicar of Framsden, gave an address on "Chief Helps and Hindrances to Y.M.C.A. work." The helps he named were—(1) United prayer, (2) united Bible study, (3) a well chosen and well used library, (4) the right sort and right amount of recreation for mind and body, (5) work for every member, (6) a welcome for every associate. The chief hindrances were—(1) A sectarian spirit, (2) recreation fever, (3) lack of missionary spirit, (4) political excitement, (5) disregard of Y.M.C.A. principles. There was a good and attentive audience.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. Herbert R. Francis lately held a week's mission at the Gospel Hall, Wood-green. His ministry was very acceptable, and his words very helpful and sound. He has since delivered a series of lectures on the Tabernacle at Finsbury Hall, in connection with the Y.M.C.A.

Church Army.—About three months ago the Church Army was started at Kempston, near Bedford, and during that time many souls have been brought to Christ. Some of the converts were the most ungodly in the village. A large tent is much needed for the summer months.

Rev. Walter Bradbury has returned from an interesting mission to the garrison troops at Gibraltar. He also visited Tangier, in North Africa, and was delighted to witness the work of Mr. Mackintosh and Mr. Baldwin, and Miss Jay and Miss Jennings among the Mahommedans.

Messrs. Munhall and Towner closed their work in Boston after a time of much blessing. Fully six hundred persons professed conversion. They next went to Worcester, Mass., to engage in a union effort, four or five churches uniting. Latest accounts state that many were flocking to Christ. At a meeting for young men 2,500 were present. Many hundreds rose for prayer, and fully 200 publicly confessed Jesus as Saviour and Lord. The evening meeting filled two churches to overflowing, and scores professed saving faith in Jesus. The whole city, with a population of 80,000, seemed to be stirred. The evangelists go from Worcester to Toledo, Ohio, a city of 75,000 inhabitants. Several denominations are uniting there also.

Sheffield.—Earnest evangelistic work is going on in connection with the Mission in this town, conducted by Mr. William Corbridge, 55, Lancing-road. A spirit of prayer unites many of the members, and the power of secret prayer is felt in the meetings. Sinners of every class are convicted of their sins, believers ase quickened and fired with the spirit which says, "Not my will, but thine be done," and agonises for the salvation of souls. "Praying Billy," from Beverley, has just spent a week here, and his clear testimony on full salvation has been made a blessing to many of the Lord's people. On Sunday, last week, there was a season of special blessing, a number of brewery men and former drunkards, both men and women, testifying God's power to save.

Inverness, N.B.—For years past a quiet but effective effort has been sustained by some earnest workers in that district of the Highland Capital called "The Shore," abutting on the harbour. Begun in a private house, it has grown so much that larger premises became a necessity. Through the kind generosity of Messrs. Walker & Co., of the Inverness Sawmills, a neat and commodious Gospel hall has been built near by, and here the work of the mission is now carried on, amid much encouragement. Besides the ordinary Gospel meetings there is a good Sunday-school. Much attention is also given to temperance work, which is not unneeded, as the temptations to drink are ever present. A recent attempt to close one of these pestilential centres unhappily failed, through the supineness of the licensing authorities.

Mr. Henry Thorne has held a ten days' Gospel Mission in the Assembly Rooms, Margate. The work deepened day by day. Many were brought to the Lord, and the Mission closed with a praise-meeting on April 26. Many non-churchgoers were found night after night in the meetings. At the request of one of the clergymen of the town Mr. Thorne gave on Monday week, to a very full audience, a graphic address, entitled, "From the Stage to the Cross." This referred chiefly to his youthful days, which were for the most part spent in Margate, and included the touching story of his conversion to God twenty-seven years ago. At the closing service on Tuesday evening many rose to testify to the blessing they had received during this mission. Many others also told how they were converted during the mission held by Mr. Thorne last May in the Theatre Royal.

MANX FISHERMEN.—Mr. Wm. Tower Townshend, Myross Wood, Leap, county Cork, Ireland, writes:—The Manx fishermen are again visiting our coast for the mackerel fishing. I should be very glad of some good Gospel tracts, which I shall be most happy to distribute amongst the fishermen. I think, as a rule, they prefer illustrated publications. Those sent last year were gratefully received.

GIBRALTAR MISSION TO SEAMEN.

The Bishop of Gibraltar presided over an interesting meeting in Rome on April 14, in aid of this Mission, which provides for the moral and spiritual wants of British and American sailors visiting the ports of the Mediterranean and neighbouring seas. Reviewing the progress of the Mission since 1875, at which time there was absolutely no mission work and no chaplain in any of the ports now visited, the Bishop said seven mission stations, each with a chaplain, were started in 1882, the grants then made amounting to £270. The rapidity with which the work has grown since then may be judged from the fact that there are now twenty-one stations, the grants to which last year amounted to £1100. At each of these places there is a chaplain, every ship in the port is visited, and there is also a Sailors' Home or Institute, which is of inestimable benefit, not only in keeping the sailor from haunts of vice and temptation, but in encouraging thrift and orderly conduct. Lay readers are also provided. The great importance of this work is shown by the statement that about 130,000 British sailors annually visit some half a dozen of these Mission stations. Only one of these, Odessa, is self-supporting. About £1500 a year is needed for the support and development of this work. Canon Sidebotham (St. John's Parsonage, Mentone) is the general hon. sec.

OPEN-AIR PREACHING.

The Open-air Mission is busy arranging spring and summer work. At its annual meeting recently in Exeter Hall, nearly two hundred preachers were stimulated to renewed exertions in "the diocese of open-air" by the counsel and caution of the various speakers. Within the past fortnight three other meetings of workers have been held. The first was in connection with the South London Auxiliary, when Rev. W. W. Howard unfolded the elements of "successful open-air preaching." The object of preaching was not to advance an "ism" or a sect, but to save souls. In this salvation was included holiness and usefulness. As to what should be preached, "the three R.'s" were insisted upon, viz., Ruin by the Fall, Redemption by the Blood of Christ, and Regeneration by the Holy Ghost. How to preach was also summed up under three heads, viz., Interest, Instruct, Impress. This brother belongs to the Methodist New Connexion, and has evidently informed his head well, without losing fervour of heart.

The second meeting was held in Stafford Rooms, Tichborne-street, and was presided over by Mr. George Williams. The occasion was the anniversary of the West London Auxiliary. The speakers were Rev. W. M. Sinclair, examining chaplain to the Bishop of London; Rev. Arthur Hall, Craven Chapel; Rev. B. Broadley, Wesleyan; and Mr. Gawin Kirkham. Mr. Hall incidentally referred to having preached outside his chapel last Sunday evening—a custom to be commended to other ministers if the masses are to be reached. The sweet singing of the Clapham Male Choir between the speeches was specially noticed.

The third was the quarterly meeting of members and friends, held in the Y.M.C.A. Rooms in Aldersgate-street, when about 150 preachers listened with great profit to Mr. Joseph Weatherley as he pointed out "some lessons learned in a recent journey to Egypt, Palestine and Syria." A few simple words from one who has been in Bible lands, aided by some objects brought from the place, throw a flood of light upon the sacred pages. Thus the preacher in turn is able to interest his hearers, and to explain the Scriptures more minutely. Mr. John MacGregor (the chairman) whose "Rob Roy on the Jordan" has become a standard work, also explained some objects he

AMONG THE COLOURED FOLKS.

A letter recently received from one of the graduates of Mr. Moody's Seminary for Young Women, at Northfield, gives a pleasing as well as amusing glimpse of work among the negroes of the Southern States. Writing from McNeill's, South Carolina, on April 6, she says:—

This school was established three years ago by two of the Northfield girls under Mrs. Steele. We have now a pleasant home, and a schoolhouse is nearly finished on the grounds. There have been enrolled during the year about one hundred and fifty names; the number at present is much smaller, as many have to work in the field. Some of the scholars come from a long distance, and show great perseverance and earnestness. They are of all ages, from seven to forty; two ministers take their places with unfailing regularity. Though often the young idea does not seem inclined to shoot vigorously, yet the work is far from discouraging; some of the children learn as readily as white ones, who have had far greater advantages.

We are often amused by the queer ways and sayings of the people. One good brother prayed "O Lord! bless dese dear darlin' teachers who has come all de way 'cross de 'Lantic Ocean to instruct us in our great ignorancy. May dey bud and blossom like de fatted calf in de stall of heaven!" His gratefulness was evident, in spite of mixed metaphors. One young man who had to leave school for work, said in the Friday afternoon prayer-meeting:—"It makes me feel very sad, dear friends, when I thinks how next week my seat will be filled with my absence."

One of our boys took his stand as a Christian a few months ago, and the other evening he related his experience. I will give it as nearly as I can in his words:—"I don't know how I came to be a Christian," he said. "Nobody didn't try to 'swade me just den. But 'long in de summer I thought I'd try to stop cursin', just to see if I could, for den de greatest pleasure I had in de world was cursin' de mule, and gwine to frolics. I tried for two weeks, but ebery day I dun forgot, an' Jones he just laughed at me and said, 'You never can quit, Isaac;' but still I kept tryin'. One day I did go through without givin' an oath, an' when my work was done I didn't walk, but I just run to de house and told Jones; but he said, 'Oh, well, you can't prove anything by dat; if you didn't curse out loud I'll bet you did in your heart, an' de sin is as great.' Dat made me study, an' fin'ly I began to go to church, an' some of de people would say, 'You'd better join de church.' But I said, 'Dat's Isaac's business,' an' turned dem off dat way.

"Den I began to pray by myself, just to see if my feelin's would change as dey tell about, an' for two weeks I b'lieve I prayed as often as anyone, but I didn't feel no differenter. I began to think I'd turn back again an' give it all up, but all at once I seemed to hear a voice sain', 'Isaac, continue on;' and so I did. And all at once I found I enjoyed prayin' just as much as I did cursin' de mule; and I didn't feel like doin' dat any more, an' I never has since. But now sometimes when dat mule bothers, I just stands and cries, an' I never does cry at anything else, but dat saves me from cursin'. I tell you what, when a boy sets out to be a real Christian, an' don't mean a pretendin' to be one, he has a tough job afore him."

BROOKLYN.—Nearly 2000 women connected with various churches have banded together to improve the condition of working women through united Christian effort.

BYROM HALL, LIVERPOOL.—The first report issued since Mr. J. Bennett Anderson accepted the pastorate six years ago exhibits an amount of progress most encouraging to all. Since then over 500 persons have been baptized and received into fellowship. The Band of Hope and Sunday morning and evening evangelistic services for children are helping much to improve the condition of the little ones in a very poor district. Temperance work has been carried on with a will, as 4000 pledges have been signed in Byrom Hall during Cassell & Co. Bishop Ellicott's Old Testamen Commentary (7d.) reaches 1 Sam. xxviii. The notes are instructive and spiritual. The Countries of the World (Pt. 35, 7d.) describes and illustrates New South Wales. The engravings are very numerous and beautifully executed, and the reading matter full of interest. Gleanings from Popular Authors (Pt. 21, 7d.) gives Mrs. Beecher Stowe's amusing story, "The Minister's Housekeeper." The Picotee and the Torch Lily form the subject of the beautiful coloured plates in Familiar Garden Flowers (Pt. 99, 6d.)

Messrs. "Make Home Cheery" is just such advice as we should expect in The Family Friend (1d.). It is a short article, but good, and the companion of several others equally good. Our Own Gazette (1d.) is always a favourite with the girls; "Pansy Vernon; or, Take Care What You Read," is a story (somewhat improbable, however) which ought to convey an important lesson. The leading feature of The Welcome (6d.) is an interesting illustrated article, entitled, "Missions to Oriental Churches," by the author of "Heroines of the Mission Field."

The Lady's World for May (Cassell & Co. 1s.) has an admirable article on cycling for ladies.

The Old Gospel and the New. The title of a sermon lately preached by the venerable Rev. Geo. Rogers in Albany Chapel, Camberwell—an able exposition and defence of the evangelical faith. Copies may be had of the Author, at 2, The Villas, South Norwood-hill, S.E. 2d.

Rev. J. B. Figgis, Brighton, who was in Nice at the time of the recent earthquake, and witnessed the scare and some of the damage produced by the calamity, lately preached a sermon embodying some lessons to be learned from the visitation. It is published by Messrs. Partridge & Co. 9d. per doz.

The A.B.C. Church and Chapel Directory (2d. Banks & Son), giving a complete list, alphabetically arranged under their respective headings, of all the ministers in London, and of the May meetings, is invaluable to the large numbers who are attracted to London at this season of the year, and as a book of general reference.

HOMELESS AND DESTITUTE BOYS.—Last week, at the Mansion House, a meeting was held in aid of the fund for erecting a new home for homeless and destitute boys of London, as a Jubilee memorial to the Queen. The institution will be a further development of the National Refuges in Great Queen-street, Holborn, in connection with which there are homes or schools for boys and girls at Twickenham, Ealing, Bisley, and Sudbury, and the training-ships Arethusa and Chichester at Greenhithe. The new building, which is to take the place of the small temporary home in Great Queen-street, is to be erected in Shaftesbury-avenue (the new thoroughfare leading from Oxford-street to Piccadilly-circus), and will be for the reception and training of 100 homeless and destitute boys; 35 working boys who have been trained in the various homes of the society; a club and institute for "old boys," where their moral and religious welfare may be watched over; and offices where the whole work of the Society may be carried on. The estimated cost of the building is £10,000, towards which about £1,500 has been received. Sir R. W. Carden urged as one reason why they were entitled to support, that through their instrumentality boys were kept out of crime who would otherwise have to be maintained at the expense of the public. Mr. W. Williams, the secretary, Right Hon. J. G. Hubbard, M.P., Canon Nesbit, rector of St. Giles-in-the-Fieds, Hon. Evelyn Ashley, Mr. F. Buxton, and others, strongly advocated the project.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

At present there are sixteen Liquor Bills before Parliament.

Mr. G. Blaiklock has been giving addresses at Shoeburyness with much acceptance.

There are 150 parishes in Scotland where the landowners refuse to permit public houses.

A writer in The Temperance Record protests against the supply of intoxicants at Jubilee banquets to the poor.

The Reformer complains of what it terms "the shameful conduct of Justices of the Peace in forcing public-houses on unwilling districts."

In connection with the anniversary of the C.E.T.S. nearly three hundred sermons were preached in London churches on April 24. In most instances there was an offertory for the Society.

In reply to inquiries from the Board of Trade, fifty of the largest shipowners assigned intemperance as the cause why so many English sailors unemployed and their places filled by foreign but temperate sailors.

The Executive of the North Wales Temperance Association recently gave statistics of drunkenness in Wales which they believe are "a strong demonstration of the wonderful success of the Sunday Closing Act for Wales."

The Chairman of the Bench of Magistrates. at Eastbourne, writes that during the recent three days' stay there of a large force of volunteers, though there were 10,000 other visitors, and 30,000 residents, not a single charge of drunkenness or any other offence was preferred.

FOREIGN.

The sale of liquor to children has been prohibited in Bengal.

Mr. Axel Gustafson's efforts to form an English Prohibition party are attracting attention in the States.

In those portions of Pennsylvania where the Local Option law is in force the gaols are comparatively empty.

An Inter-Collegiate Convention of the College Prohibition Clubs, of Michigan, is announced to be held on May 6 and 7.

Miss Willard's book, "Woman and Temperance," is being translated into Japanese by a Japanese student at Vermont, U.S.

Dr. Joseph Cook, Boston, U.S, writes condemning, as not only useless but highly dangerous, the use of intoxicants by literary men.

At the Common Council, Richmond, Virginia, it has been gravely proposed to compel drinkers over twenty-one to take out a drinking license.

Mrs. Mary C. Leavitt, of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union, drew very large audiences at Hong Kong. She has visited Japan, and also several of the treaty ports of China.

Rev. J. C. Jackson, one of a party of American tourists in the East, writes: "Not one of our party has touched wine or other strong drink on sea or land, and not one has suffered the slightest ill-effect from the water."

Fifty years ago the father of the German Emperor started a movement in Prussia against brandy. Founded on this the Jubilee of the German temperance societies was held last week in Berlin, the chief services being in the Royal Cathedral.

The New Zealand Women's Christian Temperance Union is reported in a very flourishing condition. Since her election, Mrs. A. D. Ward, the president, has travelled 1900 miles through the two islands, and formed seven new branches.

A late member of the Bombay Civil Services has written to The Times denying the alleged demoralisation of the natives by the drink-traffic. Archdeacon Farrar, and Mr. S. Smith, M.P., in reply, have brought evidence to support their recent statements on the subject.

The Bombay Government, addressing the Supreme Government at Calcutta, calls attention to the demoralising effects of the use of opium, and protests against permission being given for the cultivation of "the poppy in Scinde, or in any other part of the Presidency."

Among the Churches.

* We shall be happy to receive from our readers brief items of news for this page, respecting Christian work carried on, or progress achieved, in connection with any evangelical church at home or abroad.*

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Efforts are now being made to raise a fund of £5000 to assist in keeping up Church Army mission work in poor parishes.

"Wanted immediately, by the Church Missionary Society, Salisbury-square, three ladies for East Africa. Must be whole-hearted missionaries, physically strong, and thoroughly understanding the principle, 'In honour prefering one another.'"

The recent labours of one of the Church Army evangelists among the navvies at New Southgate have been remarkably owned of God. A reclaimed drunkard, pointing to a public-house said, "Many a bright crown have I spent there, but never another."

The Record says the Church Missionary Society will this year acknowledge the largest income it has ever received. The statement that the ordinary receipts are "£5000 or £6000 in advance of last year" is rather under than over the truth. The increase, however, is largely due to legacies.

Rev. W. J. Monk, vicar of Doddington, near Sittingbourne, has returned to the farmers in his parish the whole of the extraordinary tithe collected by him during the time he has held the living—about fourteen years. The total amount is about £500, and one farmer receives as much as £120.

The party of missionaries sailing for Eastern Equatorial Africa on May 11, will include Rev. W. Roper, Mr. D. Deekes, Mr. A. G. Smith, and Mr. W. Morris, as well as Rev. J. C. Price, who is returning to his post. Rev. R. H. Walker, late curate of All Souls', Langham-place, has offered to return to Africa with Mr. Ashe.

BAPTIST.

It is expected that Rev. E. G. Gange, of Bristol, will become successor to the late Rev. Hugh Stowell Brown, at Myrtle-street Chapel, Liverpool.

Mr. W. M. Hudson (of South Shields) has accepted a unanimous call to the pastorate of the church at Jarrow-on-Tyne. While acting as honorary pastor, he will still follow his calling as a bank cashier.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. A. Mearns lately stated that not more than fifteen in a hundred of the population of greater London are ever found at one time in the house of God.

The church and schools, at Stone, which were destroyed by fire a little over a year ago, have been restored, and were opened for services a month or two ago with every outward token of success.

Though the Highbury Quadrant Church has been without a pastor since Dr. Bevan left for Melbourne, the membership has increased, and the flow of spontaneous giving has rarely, if ever, been equalled.

About forty of the Sioux Indians, belonging to the American Exhibition, lately attended a service at the Congregational Chapel, West Kensington. In their picturesque costumes, bedecked with paint and feathers, they presented a most striking picture.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Dr. A. N. Somerville, Moderator of the Free Church General Assembly, closed his tour of evangelisation by two services in Perth last Sunday.

The report of the English Presbyterian Synod, Manchester, shows that the Church now numbers 286 congregations, with a membership of over 60,000, while the annual revenue amounts to £200,000.

We are glad to learn that there is no present foundation for the rumour, occasioned by a paragraph in a contemporary, that Dr. Thain Davidson is about to leave London. Dr. Davidson's work amongst the young men of Islington, and at the Agricultural Hall, is too important to admit of his abandoning it without very strong reasons for a change.

METHODIST.

The ladies of Brixton (chiefly Wesleyan), under the leadership of Mrs. Hugh Price Hughes, are actively engaged in starting a Brixton Rescue Home.

A mission room has been opened at Longsight, a suburb of Manchester, and promises to be a success. A good school has been gathered, and the public services are well attended.

Meetings were recently held in New York to bid farewell to twelve missionaries who were about to join Bishop Taylor's band of fifty-six missionaries already at work on the Upper Congo.

Joyful News gives a delightful account of how one after another the members of a brass band in the Reeth Circuit were converted, and then were formed into a Gospel temperance band, which is now one of the best in Yorkshire.

On the occasion of the laying of the foundation stone of a new Primitive Methodist Chapel at Chester, it was stated that the members of the congregation, numbering 170, composed almost entirely of working men, had subscibed £2600 towards the building fund, this being at the average rate of £15 per head.

SALVATION ARMY.

About two hundred conversions in London are reported as a result of the special Easter gatherings.

Captain Narain Das, of India, who is now in this country, has recently given some stirring instances of how God is working in that country.

Nearly six thousand persons were present at meetings held recently at Openshaw, during three days, and sixty-five came forward to the penitent form.

A number of Italian soldiers recently visited the Holloway corps. Great interest was felt at the sight of so many organ-grinders, ice-cream vendors, and others, rescued from sin.

At Liverpool, recently, a touching sight was witnessed. In the course of the Army's afternoon march, they collected several hundreds of the worst characters of the town, linking arms, and drawing them lovingly to the hall, where they were heartily welcome, and listened most attentively.

A wonderful change in the condition of the town is reported since the commencement of the Army's work at Swadlincote. Many once in darkness are now living in the light of God's truth, "drunkards are sober, poachers are redeemed, some very aged sinners have been snatched from hell's brink."

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

The adult school in Folkestone is reported as doing well. The library is in good use. Visitors render help, and spirituality grows.

The meeting-house at West Hartlepool, which has been closed for six years, is now re-opened for Divine worship every Sunday, with good gatherings.

Elbert S. Clark is visiting various meetings, and branches of the Missionary Helper's Union, in the interest of Rock Fountain Mission, to Zulu Kaffirs, Natal, where he and his wife have successfully laboured for eight years, and are soon returning.

The Friends of Buffalo, Kansas, have had to suffer for their earnest temperance efforts. Their new meeting-house was blown to pieces by dynamite on March 19. In the same State, at Wichita, the "John Bright University" is being founded. The amount of 300,000 dollars has already been subscribed. It is hoped that English and Irish Friends will help.

Andrew Morton, LL.D., late minister of St. James's United Presbyterian Church, Edinburgh.—Mr. John Hughes, of Caersws, the last of a triad of leading Welsh lyric poets.—Mrs. Maundrell, wife of Archdeacon Maundrell, C.M.S. The Queen's Jubilee

TWENTY-FIRST YEAR of 'Dr. BARNARDO'S HOMES.'

AFTER careful consideration, the Trustees and Committee of "Dr. Barnardo's Homes" have decided to celebrate the 50th Anniversary of our beloved Sovereign's accession to the throne of this realm, and the Majority, or 21st Year of life, of the "Homes" themselves, by an endeavour to enlarge the scope of these comprehensive and national Institutions, thereby placing them upon a still wider and more solid basis.

THEY are convinced that no object can well be conceived more in harmony with the tender and womanly sympathy ever displayed by Her Most Gracious Majesty towards the suffering and the sorrowful, or more likely to be in accordance with Her own wishes, were she free to express them, than a project to promote the extension and increased usefulness of Institutions like these, whose chief work it is to rescue friendless and orphan children from the perils of the streets, and to afford to them not only education, useful training, and Christian care, but also all that is involved in the endearing names of "Home" and "Friend."

HERE, then, is the Scheme proposed for the hearty co-operation of all loyal subjects of Queen Victoria who love and pity helpless little children, and who may be willing, at one and the same time, to raise in Her honour and on their behalf an Enduring Memorial, the benefits of which shall be lastingly recorded in the history of multitudes of young lives.

1. TO establish in a central position a Shelter for Homeless Street Children, to be called the Jubilee Shelter, which shall be always open, night and day, to afford immediate and temporary succour to any little waif or stray who seeks admission. This Shelter would soon become an important feeder of the Parent Homes —a kind of net thrown out into the wide sea of London child-life, into which many of those "ready to perish" would be gathered.

2. TO develop, under skilled and competent control, the 5,400 acres of land already acquired in Manitoba (N.W.T. of Canada), by the establishment thereon of an Industrial Farm for the employment of the older and rougher lads rescued from the streets and low lodging-houses of our great cities and towns, and trained in the Labour House for Destitute Youths in East London. The whole settlement in Manitoba, some seven miles square, and charmingly situated near Birtle, on the Shell River, is to be called, in honour of the Queen, Victoria Regina.

3. TO rebuild the Infirmary, for Sick Children of the absolutely Destitute and Homeless class, already in operation in Stepney, but which, owing to its small size and grave structural defects, is unfitted for its purpose, and which has therefore long since been condemned. The new building, which will have all modern appliances needful for the medical and surgical treatment of 65 little patients, being most urgently required, has already been begun, and will be called Her Majesty's Hospital for Sick Children.

4. TO erect in our Village Home for Orphan and Friendless Girls at Ilford, Essex, a Memorial Cottage, to shelter in perpetuity twenty little rescued "waifs," who will therein find a happy home. A freehold site stands ready amid the fifty other buildings which constitute the Village; and there it is hoped may soon arise the new Memorial Cottage, to be called simply The Queen's Villa.

5. TO redeem and set free from Rent, Mortgages, and all other Charges, several of the Parent Homes (already in occupation) upon which rents and interest of mortgage have to be paid, thereby relieving the Annual Income of a heavy and continuous drain.

TO accomplish the whole of this Scheme, the Committee and Trustees of "Dr. Barnardo's Homes" propose to raise a Jubilee Fund of £50,000, in two several sums of £25,000, one of which shall be collected from among the existing Donors, and the other from the General Public.

AS regards the first of these amounts, it is estimated that if the very large number of Donors already on the books of the Institutions are willing each to contribute The Small Sum of Ten Shillings, the £25,000 required would be at once supplied.

BUT the Committee and Trustees of Dr. Barnardo's Homes now earnestly appeal to Christian people generally for donations towards this Jubilee Fund, in the hope that they will respond in sufficiently large numbers to secure the collection of the other moiety of £25,000.

IF each reader of this advertisement will, within one week of observing this notice, send to the office of the Institution a Jubilee Gift of not less than Ten Shillings, the sum required from the General Public (£25,000), will in all probability have been received before the Twenty-first of June, the day fixed by Her Most Gracious Majesty for the celebration of the 50th Anniversary of Her Reign.

JUBILEE GIFTS of any amount in response may be sent direct to the Offices, 18—26, Stepney Causeway, E.; to the Bankers (London and South Western Bank, Bow Branch, E.; and Messrs. Dimsdale, Fowler & Co., 50, Cornhill, E.C.); or to any of the following:—

REV. J. W. ATKINSON, 308, Old Ford-road, E., Urgently Appeals to readers of THE CHRISTIAN on behalf of aged and infirm East London Poor, to whom the spring days will bring but little sunshine. A timely gift will keep many honest Christian hearts known to us from the degradation of the workhouse. Every gift, great or small, will be promptly acknowledged by above. "For His sake."

PARIS CITY MISSION. — Seven Missionaries now carry the Gospel to the poor of Paris. They pass from room to room in the lowest parts of the city, reading from and supplying copies of the Word of God. One of them devotes his efforts entirely to the neglected English poor. The marked blessing of Almighty God is resting upon this endeavour to enlighten the most ignorant and depraved—leading them to the Saviour. The Committee ask for the prayerful sympathy and help of English Christians. £40 per month is needed to pay salaries.—J. M. WEYLLAND, Hon. Sec. for England, 31, Carlton-hill, St. John's Wood, N.W.

VERY URGENT.—The Committee of the INDIGENT BLIND VISITING SOCIETY APPEAL for AID under exceptional circumstances. The Society was founded in 1834 to ameliorate the condition of the indigent blind of London. Its work and usefulness have increased year by year until it now regularly visits and assists nearly 900 of the poorest and most deserving of the blind. Many, being aged and infirm, receive weekly or quarterly pensions varying from £6 to £20 per annum; and upwards of 400 are receiving elementary education in the Society's classes, held in different parts of the metropolis. The claims upon the Society have become increasingly numerous and pressing, while its income has not been equal to the expenditure, thereby causing a serious deficit. Under these painful circumstances the Committee most earnestly plead for help.—Contributions will be gratefully received by W. C. LESTER, Secretary, Office, 27, Red Lion-square, W.C.

CHURCH PAROCHIAL MISSION SOCIETY, 21, John-street, Adelphi, W.C.—The Annual Meeting will be held at the Princes Hall, Piccadilly, on Wednesday, May 4, at 3 p.m. Chairman, The Lord Bishop of Exeter. AN APPEAL

To all Supporters of

The Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen

In aid of the

WIDOW AND ORPHAN AND SUPERANNUATION FUND.

REPEATEDLY during the past five years I have pointed out, both in the Press and at public meetings, that Mission work on the high seas is, and ever must be, attended with risk. There are dangers of the smacksman's life from which no care or forethought can render him secure. The wisest possible precautions are valueless under certain conditions, and although the vessel may be well found and admirably handled, yet immunity from disaster can never be guaranteed.

During the year 1885 we lost three valuable lives from the Mission ships. In 1886 men were on two occasions washed overboard, but were happily rescued. Now, in 1887, has come the heaviest blow.

The yacht Breeze, recently given to the Mission, left Fowey on Saturday, the 16th of April, for Great Yarmouth, in charge of Skipper Smith, with Colporteur William Field as mate, and Sheridan and White as able seamen; Charles Pannell, senior clerk in the publication department, being on board as a passenger. Had all gone well the yacht would have reached Yarmouth on Monday evening, but alas! she was run down when some miles off Beachy Head by the steamer Australia, of and from Bremen for Cardiff, and Pannell, Smith, Sheridan, and Field were drowned, the three first mentioned being asleep in the cabin when the disaster occurred, shortly before midnight on Sunday, the 17th ulto.

The mate was at the tiller, and White had just gone below to put the kettle on before calling the skipper's watch, when a startled cry from the mate caused him to rush quickly on deck, to find the steamer tearing towards them at full speed, and a collision already inevitable. Indeed, he had barely time to seize a life-belt before the bows of the steamship crashed into the yacht on the port side, crushing the little vessel under the waves, and in another moment the huge bulk had rushed on into the darkness. There was, of course, not the faintest chance for the three sleepers in the cabin, and they were mercifully spared the agonies of a prolonged struggle; but White reports that though the intense gloom, and the fact that he was surrounded by floating wreckage, prevented his seeing the mate, he twice heard his hail of "Steamer ahoy!" and he swam in the direction of the voice, in order to share his life-belt with the drowning man, but only to hear, with terrible distinctness, the piteous prayer, "O Heavenly Father, don't let me be drowned!" and then all was silent. A boat having been lowered from the steamer, White was picked up, and was landed at Cardiff two days later.

Such is the story: but the sequel is painful indeed, for four happy homes have been blighted and fifteen dependent relatives robbed of the bread winner. It is for us—for all of us who are interested in this MISSION TO DEEP SEA FISHERMEN, and who, by our prayers and our money, have contributed to its success and to the support of the workers—it is for us now to say, "These Christian men are gone to Christ, and we, for Christ's sake, and as a becoming tribute to their memory, will not suffer their loved ones to feel the bitterness of grinding poverty in addition to their already overwhelming sorrow."

For my own part, I could not rest until a special meeting of my colleagues had been called to discuss this pressing question, and I rejoice to say there was not only perfect unanimity as to the absolute duty of endeavouring to minister some relief to the temporal necessities of the mourners in the present instance, but a resolution was unhesitatingly passed affirming the desirability of at once taking steps to develop the "Widow and Orphan and Superannuation Fund," in order both to meet the demand thus morally made upon us, and with a view to encouraging a spirit of self-help amongst the employés of the Mission by assisting in the payment of Life Assurance premiums. The importance and wisdom of this decision will be better understood when it is borne in mind that there are now upwards of 50 men in the service of the Mission who are constantly afloat.

* * * * *

That last despairing cry of poor Field has rung in my ears night and day since I listened to the tale, and I am intensely thankful that his "heavenly Father" permitted that prayer to be overheard, although in His perfect wisdom He saw fit not to answer it, but rather to take His child home to the Father's house."

God grant that as the story passes from lip to lip many minds may picture that midnight scene, may attempt to gauge the anguish of that dying man as thoughts of his tenderly loved wife and little ones crowded upon his mind. God grant that many hearts may respond in truest sympathy to the appeal I make on behalf of the helpless and broken-hearted, and thus, by means of succour nobly and promptly given,

"Some tears of the poor widow may be wiped away, and some cries of the fatherless be hushed."

Yet, in the maddening maze of things,
And tossed by storm and flood,
To one fixed stake my spirit clings;
I know that God is good!

I dimly guess from blessings known
Of greater out of sight,
And, with the chastened Psalmist own.
His judgments too are right.

I long for household voices gone,
For vanished smiles I long;
But God hath led my dear ones on,
And He can do no wrong.

I know not what the future hath
Of marvel or surprise,
Assured alone that life and death
His mercy underlies.

And if my heart and flesh are weak
To bear an untried pain,
The bruised reed He will not break,
But strengthen and sustain.

And so beside the Silent Sea
I wait the muffled oar;
No harm from Him can come to me
On ocean or on shore.

I know not where His islands lift
Their fronded palms in air;
I only know I cannot drift
Beyond His love and care.

J. G. WHITTIER.

"What a comfort it is to find that the Bible saints, who now shine as stars in the firmament of heaven, were men of like passions with ourselves! They were not always saints: they sinned, and murmured, and rebelled—as we do. Heaven's rarest blades were not wrought of finer metal than that which is within our constitution. God's choicest vessels were not turned from superior earth to that of which we are made. The jewels which now lie at the foundation of the new Jerusalem were once obscure, un-named men of no finer texture than ourselves. Look to the quarry whence they were hewn, and the hole of the pit whence they were digged, and say if there was much to choose between their origin and your own. And then, take heart; for if God were able to take up such men as Jacob, and Simon Bar-Jona, and make of them princes and kings, surely He can do as much for you. The discipline may be keen as fire; but the result shall be glorious; and all eternity shall ring with the praises of Him who raises up the poor out of the dust, and lifts up the beggar from the dunghill, and makes them kings and priests unto God."—Extract.

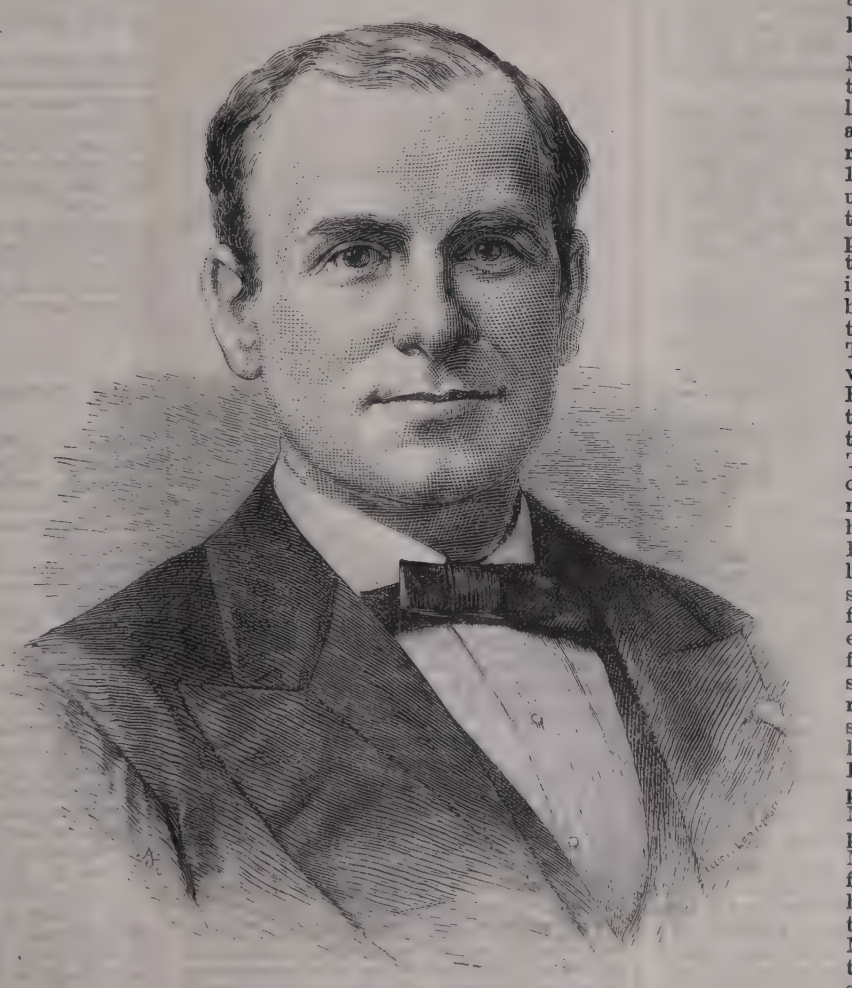
MR. WILLIAM NOBLE,

Founder of the Blue Ribbon Movement in Great Britain.

THE subject of this sketch is an illustration of what "grace, grit and gumption" can accomplish. William Noble was born near Bunhill Fields in City-road, London, in 1842. Several years of his youth were spent in the service of Her Majesty, in the Navy. The associations connected with such a life, both when at sea and on shore, led the young man to form habits which were stumbling-blocks in the way of his advancement. The years which "count as the spray" we shall pass over, referring only to those of usefulness. The "Woolwich Boys' Movement" was the first moral reform he laboured in connection with, and of which he was elected president. Then followed a season during which he improved himself by a course of reading standard works of the best character.

In the year 1871, Mr. Noble signed The Total Abstinence pledge. He then devoted his evenings to the advocacy of temperance, meeting with such success that finally the resolve was made to devote the whole of his time to the work. John B. Gough's orations had been placed in his hand by his mother. These he committed to memory, and ultimately re-delivered them before 75,000 people in the aggregate during thirteen evenings at the National Standard Theatre. The provinces were also visited and everywhere the recitals attracted much attention. The example which Mr. Noble set, stimulated other young men to do likewise.

In 1877 after six years of steady aggressive effort he made his first visit to the United States. John B. Gough, Dr. Talmage, Rev. Dr. Cuyler, Hon. W. E. Dodge, J. N. Stearn, with other prominent Christian temperance workers, joined in a hearty welcome. The visit was confined chiefly to New England and Canada. Large audiences assembled in the chief cities and towns. Whilst with Mr. Gough, in New York, he visited the Jerry McAuley Mission. This visit is best described in his own words. He says:—"On arriving at the mission hall we were ushered into a small ante-room, where we found Jerry McAuley. He asked me to pray for a blessing on the meeting, but I could not. Jerry prayed, however: 'Oh, Lord, do give us a blessing to-night—give us souls for our portion. Amen.' We went on the platform, and I saw about a hundred to a hundred and fifty of the poorer people gathered in front of us. On the walls were placards which notified one minute speeches.' Whatever can they say in a minute, I thought. Why, they said in a minute what I couldn't say in an hour. Mr. Gough spoke, and then Jerry called on me to speak for ten minutes. I felt that I ought to be sitting in the hall, and these people on the platform teaching me."



(From Photograph by Messrs. Elliott & Fry.)

The visit to Jerry McAuley's Mission led to a revolution in his life and methods of advocacy. Soon after his return to England in 1878, Mr. Noble entered upon the work of Gospel temperance, which has proved such a blessing to thousands. He then introduced the little blue badge as the insignia of the Blue Ribbon Gospel Temperance Movement, which he founded on February 10, 1878. After three months services in the National Standard Theatre, a working-man came to him with the news that a low music hall, in the district of Hoxton, had lost its licence, and was for sale. It was rented for fifteen months, at the end of which time the freeholders pressed the sale. We will not here relate the circumstances, so often repeated, which led to Mr. William I. Palmer, J.P., of Reading, purchasing the freehold. Mr. Palmer has, for the past thirteen years, been Mr. Noble's unswerving friend. A general and hall committee conduct the operations now, Mr. Noble giving more of his time to outlying missions. Mr. John T. Rae is secretary. There are also a missionary, Bible-woman, clerk, hall-keeper; and Mr. W.P. Goulding is treasurer. Among the earnest supporters of the work at Hoxton, in addition to Mr. Palmer (Chairman of the general committee and President of the movement), have been Messrs. T. A. Denny, E. M. Denny, Alfred Sutton, Samuel Gurney Sheppard, F. A. Bevan, Arthur Austin, George Williams, Joseph G. Barclay, George Palmer, and many others. The late Mr. Samuel Morley was also a very warm supporter of the work.

In July, 1885, Mr. Noble once more left England for the far West, and this time he travelled over a larger area, pushing on as far as Honolulu and Australasia. It was, seemingly, a mark of providence which led him across the Atlantic at that time, when John B. Gough passed away. On landing in the States he travelled direct to Hillside, at the invitation of his friend, passing five weeks of pleasant intercourse. Mr. Noble was the only Englishman representative of the temperance party at Mr. Gough's funeral, and acted as one of the pall-bearers. At the funeral service, Dr. Gould, of Worcester, said:—"Mr. Gough had for some time felt that his end was near. Death struck the first knell at Northfield, last summer. His friends can never forget the scene in Piedmont Church, last September, at the reception tendered to the English temperance speaker, William Noble. As Mr. Gough spoke he seemed to catch, like Elijah of old, a vision of the descending chariot of fire, and solemnly taking the mantle from his own shoulders, he put it on the shoulders of his younger brother, and then, grasping him by the hand, in words that thrilled all our hearts, charged him to stand firm and give no quarter to the great enemy until the final victory."

In addition to addressing six other memorial services in Philadelphia on the Sunday prior to his departure for Australia, Mr. Noble was invited to deliver the Memorial Address in the church at Frankfort, where the departed was stricken. Commenting upon this service, The Frankfort Herald said:—

> Mr. Noble is a friend, co-labourer, and a kindred spirit of the great orator, John B. Gough, whose sudden death has cast a gloom over our whole community. The mantle of Mr. Gough has fallen upon this younger but well-tried friend—for in a recent gathering in Massachusetts the great orator led forward his eloquent friend, and threw over him his garment in a most impressive manner, with the solemn charge that he would ever be faithful, and a most uncompromising foe to the evil that is desolating the fairest of society. This charge Mr. Noble now thinks he is sacredly bound to keep, and he does it without wavering.

Mr. Noble left San Francisco on March 12, 1886, for Auckland, New Zealand, and commenced his Australasian campaign on the evening he landed. Several of the meetings were held in Rev. Thos. Spurgeon's Tabernacle. The nine months' mission was continued in the large centres of population in New Zealand, New South Wales, Victoria, and Queensland. Invitations were received from all parts of the vast island continent. In Sydney Mr. Noble received an enthusiastic welcome, the mission being held under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A. and City Mission. Mr Noble met with many encouraging results in Australia, as the fruits of his Hoxton Hall labours. Frequently at the close of his meetings a man or woman would come up to him and say "I signed the pledge at Hoxton Hall." One man in Brisbane, Queensland, said he had entered Hoxton Hall penniless, broken-hearted, despairing, but was induced to sign the pledge, and now he had £700 put by in a Building Society.

In the midst of this successful campaign a cablegram came to hand from England, calling him home on account of Mrs. Noble's serious illness. This necessitated that many engagements should be cancelled. Returning viâ the States, Mr. Noble arrived in London on January 31; we referred at the time to the enthusiastic welcome he

Noble, we deeply regret to say, has for some time been compelled to desist through ill health from her labours in the cause of temperance. From the first she has bravely taken a stand by her husband's side in this labour of love. We trust that a period of complete rest may yet fully restore her.

Meantime her genial and active husband is busy doing battle with the omnipresent drink fiend. Since his return to England he has been actively engaged nearly every night, speaking to great audiences at Bradford, York, Hull, Reading, but principally in London, where he has visited a large number of churches and mission halls. He has arranged to conduct the service every Sunday evening in Hoxton Hall, and will be glad to welcome friends from the provinces and elsewhere. While he by no means lightly esteems the value of legal action, Mr. Noble is of opinion that the most pressing duty of the hour is the diffusion of sound ideas on the evils of the drink. To this he addresses himself, by earnest argument and plentiful illustration. Measures of restriction or abolition of the traffic would be of little avail, even if passed, without a strong public sentiment to back up the enforcement of them. Mr. Noble labours with a will, not only to create and foster this sentiment, but to lead men and women in the strength of God to abandon the evil thing. May he be long spared to use his many gifts to this high end.

ROMANISM ENDOWED.—According to The Christian Advocate Romanism receives in Ireland alone, out of the public funds, £687,000 annually; Romish reformatory and industrial schools in Ireland receive £112,000, and chaplains £11,000, and the interest on the State endowment of Maynooth College amounts at five per cent. to £21,000 per annum.

THE GOSPEL ALL NIGHT.—It is a blessed truth that, all through the dark night of this world's sin and woe, the Gospel is now shining with ever-increasing brightness. Mr. Pye, in his fourteenth annual report, gives an interesting account of work during the past year in connection with the effort for the spread of "the Gospel all night in the streets of London." There is little need for a further revelation of the depths of sorrow and sin reached in the darkness. Mr. Pye's report, however, will awaken fresh sympathy on behalf of fallen women, many of whom have been rescued from the paths of the destroyer by this agency, some even from self-destruction. The work consists in street visiting, midnight meetings, where all hear the Gospel, and from which those who are willing are sent to homes, and in the distribution of tracts, &c. Mr. Pye's address is, 29, Ifield-road,

THE BLUE OF TEMPERANCE.

If we could gather into one broad view
Infanticides and murderers; the dens
Of beggary, licentiousness, and vice,
With fettered slaves of misery and want—
Assemble in one ghastly hideous host,
The outcast and the orphan, drunken sets,
And fair unfortunates! O brother! sister!
If we could mingle in one deafening roar
The horrid blasphemy, the curse, the wail,
The suicide's death-cry and the maniac's shriek—
Or, if Asmodeus-like, we could but glance
Into the unnumbered, boundless rooms of hell,
All would unite to testify that Drink—
That Stream of Death—brought on such hideous scenes,
This hellish panorama; watered the seeds
Of woe and shame which blossomed in the tomb!
But, in the midst of this dark, direful scene,
Serenely shines the little bit of Blue,
Like a bright speck in yonder frowning sky.
It is the Blue of Temperance, that points
And guides its wearers to the Stream of Life,
Which breathes of fairer scenes and brighter days!
But Christ must touch the heart, or vain the Blue;
'Tis only He can guide, or vain th' attempt
To keep the temperance pledge.
O brother! sister!
Who art falling—fallen! oh, for Jesus' sake,
Who left celestial flowers for the thorns
Of this stained earth; eternal suns for clouds;
Who shows his piercèd hands and bleeding side!
His agony! his sweat! his cross! his death!
And resurrection to God's throne above!
Go! take the Blue, that breathes of sweeter hopes;
For his sake sow a virtuous seed-time now,
And thou wilt reap rich harvest in the hence!
Improve to-day; it is, with Christ, the star
That sheds a light upon the dim to-morrow,
And guides thee safely to eternity!

MR. GEORGE MÜLLER AT NICE.

We have had the privilege for some time of Mr. George Müller's presence in Nice. He has repeatedly conducted services in the Scotch Church, both on the Lord's Day and during the week. One cannot but regret that he did not come to the Riviera before the earthquake and the advance of the season had so much thinned the English-speaking residents. Mr. Müller's services have been greatly valued by those who have been able to attend them. His expositions of Scripture have been simple, earnest, and in every way good. Especially impressive has been his personal testimony to the Lord's faithfulness, as experienced by himself ever since his conversion, more than sixty-one years ago. He spoke much of innumerable answers to prayer, as received in his own case. Sometimes the answer has been immediate; in other cases it has been given after years of waiting. In two instances, he said, he has prayed for a particular blessing for forty-three years, without as yet having received it. But he continues pleading in the full assurance that the blessing will yet be given.

Mr. Müller is eighty-two years of age. His physical frame is as erect as it ever was, and his mind as clear. It is a great privilege to see and hear the apostolic old man.

A decision has now been come to, in view of the evils resulting from the Bible being a prohibited book in the public schools, to establish day-schools for young children where suitable Bible instruction and Christian training will be given. JUBILEE TEACHINGS.

BY REV. HENRY JOY BROWNE, BARNET.

"Then shalt thou cause the trumpet of the jubilee to sound throughout all your land."—LEV. xxv. 9.

THE Jewish time moved on in Sabbatical cycles. First there was the week, culminating in its seventh day of rest. Then there was the Sabbatical year, a year of repose and abstention from toil and care, the people feeding on the superabundant plenty of the sixth or previous year. Again, moving round this, there was the wider circle of the jubilee arrangement, which ordained the fiftieth year to be a year, not only of rest and plenty, but of exuberant joy: "Then shalt thou cause the trumpet of the jubilee to sound throughout all your land."

The meaning of the word "jubilee" is a matter of dispute amongst the learned. Some aver that it is intended to convey the idea of restoration, but the majority are of the opinion that it is connected with the Hebrew word yōbēl, the loud sounding of a trumpet, or rather of a cornet, in allusion to the jubilant notes which must have reverberated through the hills and valleys of Judea.

The jubilee year commenced on the evening of the day of atonement, when all the sacred and blessed functions of that supreme period had been accomplished. But probably it was in the morning hours of that day, that the first trumpet notes proclaimed their joyous message to the expectant land.

(1) First let us see, in the provisions for the year of jubilee, the manifestations of a Father's care. Behold that bondsman—a captive, or else a self-submitted slave, for whom misfortune has forged the manacles of servitude. See how he starts at the sound of the first jubilee note. It means freedom to him, even in a time and dispensation of servitude—even in such days as those in which Cicero wrote to Atticus, and apologised for his grief at the loss of a slave—even in those in which Cato Pollio ordered his bondman to be cast into his fishpond for having fractured a vessel of glass—of which Cæsar Augustus hearing, comes and destroys all the vessels in Cato Pollio's house. Contrast Cicero's letter (as others have done) with that which Paul writes to Philemon, of which "my son Onesimus" forms the subject. Yes, the jubilee note is the sound of a Father's voice, proclaiming liberty to the captive.

Behold that aged man, sitting mournfully in an impoverished home, an unsuccessful combatant in life's battle. His hairs are silvered with sorrow, his brow is lined with care. How sad the vista of the future, with its ever-accumulating load of debt[*] and liability, which no labour of his aged hand could ever liquidate, were it not for the trumpet of jubilee.

See that wayfarer, of unfamiliar garb and aspect, returning from long banishment—a citizen, and yet an alien; it may be, unwelcome and unknown—the old familiar scenes of his youth knowing him no more; and yet he presses forward to his ancestral home, because the trumpet of jubilee has summoned him to a restored inheritance. Such a wayfarer was Ruth when she came back to Bethlehem; for it has been pointed out that if Boaz, her kinsman, had not bought back her inheritance for her, the trumpet of jubilee would have restored to her Elimelech's possession.

But yonder is another toiler amidst life's thorns and thistles—the ill-requited labourer in a world of strife and trouble, weary with the ever-recurring tale of toil which stretches from morn till evening. Sound loud for him the jubilee trumpet, and see how his drooping spirit will revive at the thought of higher and brighter scenes, throughout a year of plenty.

And this poor prodigal, this youth with haggard looks and tear-dimmed eyes, hastening to a home which hitherto has refused him welcome. See how he quickens his pace at the blast of the jubilee trumpet. A welcome is now ensured to him. There is a seat for him at the old fireside. A father's and a mother's love, a sister's sympathy, and a brother's companionship, are now his once more.

The year of jubilee has come!
Return, ye ransomed sinners, home.

Yes, I see in these enactments the writing of a Father's hand. "Ye shall not therefore oppress one another; but thou shalt fear thy God: for I am the Lord thy God." Thus the portioned Canaan retained its ancient landmarks, and that which God had given was preserved to its recipients. The scarlet thread of a Saviour's genealogy was kept unentangled, as it ran through the web and woof of time.

How much we may learn from God's dealings with his people in that period when He stooped down to be their King, their Magistrate, their temporal Ruler. How much of tenderness there was in the Old Testament dispensation, how much consideration for man's needs and weaknesses, what care and provision for the happiness of others! Would that our statesmen studied more Divine statesmanship; our moralists, the morality of heaven; our political economists, the political economy of loving one's neighbour as oneself. Would that this jubilee year might be ushered in with liberating blasts, for our overworked toilers, our down-trodden women, our immolated children. "Then shalt thou cause the trumpet of jubilee to sound throughout all your land."

(2) But, secondly, see in this the presage of a Saviour's love. Change the scene to the banks of the Jordan, and see Him anointed for his work and mission. Follow Him up the rugged mountain path that leads to Nazareth. It is the Sabbath day. He enters the synagogue of his early home, and reads the appointed chapter for the day. Here are echoes of Isaiah's trumpet (Isa. lxi. 1): "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because He hath anointed me to preach the Gospel to the poor; He hath sent Me to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised, to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord. And He closed the book" (Luke iv. 18). Did He mean by that action to indicate that the year of jubilee had come? Undoubtedly, for as "the eyes of all them that were in the synagogue were fastened on Him," He began to say unto them, "this day is this Scripture fulfilled in your ears." Some writers of weight affirm that it was indeed actually at that time the year of jubilee. Spiritually, and in its highest sense, no doubt it was. And yet, as Bonar beautifully points out, in his note on this chapter, Lev. xxv. (which may well be studied at this time), it was rather the prelude than the actual commencement of the year of emancipation. For not till the great day of his atonement, when the great High Priest emerged from the mystery of his own sacrifice as the evening shadows closed around the scene at Calvary, did the angels ring out their highest notes of jubilee.

See that slave of sin, the bondman of the cruellest tyrant that earth has ever looked upon, sunk in the deep dark pit of his own corruption. Is there hope for him, my brothers? Yes, he has heard the jubilee trumpet of Jesus, that brings to him that message of deliverance,

Whereby man, by sin enslaved,
Bursts his fetters, and is saved.

See that moral and spiritual debtor, with the tremendous liability of his own sins upon his head—a double bankrupt for time and for eternity. He hears the jubilee note of Jesus, and his heart leaps back again to freedom, whilst his Liberator writes "It is finished!" across the handwriting that was against him.

See that homeless alien from the commonwealth of Israel, whom justice has driven from his own paradise—driven out into a world of sin and sorrow. Why does he turn his footsteps homeward? Across the stormy seas of his own guilt the trumpet blast has reached him, and he has found once more a home. From the distant land I see the prodigal return. I join in the rapture of his welcome, and there are jubilee trumpets, sounding loud, on high.

Oh, my brothers, let us raise a jubilee memorial in the coming year. Whilst loyalty rears the marble column, and writes upon the brazen tablet its tributes to the virtues of a noble queen, let us build up our temples of living stones. The Year of Jubilee has come. Then let us have done with slavery, and debt, and doubt, and distance, and despair, and let us rejoice in our emancipation.

He is the freeman whom the truth makes free.

Oh, Christian workers, shall this be a jubilee year with you? Lift, lift your trumpets. Yours is the most glorious message that man has ever heard. "Cry out, and shout, ye inhabitants of Zion." In all dungeons where there are slaves, in all impoverished homes where there are debtors, in all dreary wildernesses where there are wanderers, in all haunts of sin where there are prodigals, amidst the pulsating din where the weary and the heavy laden toil and groan, let the trumpet of deliverance sound.

A jubilee memorial! Let it be ten thousand emancipated hearts. The world is waiting for our message. Our message can liberate the world!

Extol the Lamb of God,
The all-atoning Lamb;
Redemption through his blood
Through all the world proclaim.
The Year of Jubilee has come!
Return, ye ransomed sinners, home.

CHILDREN'S COUNTRY HOLIDAYS FUND.—The new report of this fund is redolent of the sweet country air, and troops of rosy-faced children returning from their fortnight's holiday seem to pass before us as we turn over its pages. From north, south, east, and west of this great Metropolis—from the crowded and often unsavoury districts of Bethnal-green and Lambeth, of Whitechapel, and Poplar, and the Strand, to mention only a few of the twenty-nine centres where branches are formed—went, last year, 11,800 ailing and pale-faced children, to spend at least a fortnight amidst new and healthful sights and sounds, to scamper in the fields, and sniff the fresh breezes from heath, or hill, or sea. The parents themselves contributed no less than 30 per cent. of the total cost of these holidays, which were of immense benefit to the little ones. The secretary is Miss

ELIJAH THE PROPHET.—1.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Leicester.

THE SOURCE OF HIS STRENGTH.

1 Kings xix.

This chapter begins with the conjunction "And;" it is, therefore, an addition to what has gone before; and it is God's addition. When we have read to the end of the previous chapter, which tells the melancholy story of the rapid spread, and universal prevalence, of idolatry, in the favoured land of the Ten Tribes, we might suppose that that was the end of all, and that the worship of Jehovah would never again acquire its lost prestige and power. And, no doubt, the principal actors in the story thought so too. Ahab thought so; Jezebel thought so; the false prophets thought so; the scattered remnant of hidden disciples thought so. But they had made an unfortunate omission in their calculations—they had left out Jehovah Himself. He must have something to say at such a crisis. He must add a few chapters before the history was closed. When men have done their worst, and finished, it is the time for God to begin. And when God begins, He is likely, with one blow, to reverse all that has been done without Him, and to write some pages of human history, which will be a lesson and an inspiration to all coming time. That "And" is ominous enough to his foes; but it is full of hope and promise to his friends.

Things were dark enough. After the death of Solomon, his kingdom split into two parts—the southern under Rehoboam his son, the northern under Jeroboam, who had superintended the vast public works. Jeroboam was desperately eager to keep his hold on his people; but he feared to lose it, if they continued to go, two or three times in the year, to the annual feasts at Jerusalem. He thought that old associations might overpower their new-born loyalty to himself. He resolved, therefore, to set up the worship of Jehovah in his own territories; and erected two temples, one at Dan, in the extreme north, the other at Bethel, in the extreme south; and in each of these he placed a golden calf, that the God of Israel might be worshipped "under the form of a calf that eateth hay." This sin broke the second commandment, which forbade the children of Israel to make any graven image, or to bow down before the likeness of anything in heaven above, or in the earth beneath. So weak and sinful a bid for popularity is never forgotten in Holy Scripture. Like a funeral knell, the words ring out again and again, "Jeroboam, the son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin."

After many revolutions, and much bloodshed, the kingdom passed into the hands of a military adventurer, Omri. The son of this man was Ahab, of whom it is said, "he did more to provoke the Lord God of Israel to anger than all the kings of Israel that were before him." This came to pass, not so much because his character was more depraved, but because he was a weak man, the tool of a crafty, unscrupulous, and cruel woman; and some of the worst crimes, that have ever been committed, have been wrought by weak men at the instigation of worse, but stronger, spirits than themselves.

When the young and beautiful Jezebel left the ceiled palaces of Tyre, to become the consort of the new-crowned king of Israel, it was no doubt regarded as a splendid match. Tyre, at that time sat as queen upon the seas, in the zenith of her glory; her colonies dotted the shores of the Mediterranean as far as Spain; her ships whitened every sea with their sails, and ventured to the coasts of our own Cornwall for tin; her daughter, Carthage, nursed the lion-cub Hannibal, and was strong enough to make Rome tremble. But, like many a splendid match, it was fraught with misery and disaster. intermarriage with the ungodly, without suffering for it at last.

As she left her palace-home, Jezebel would be vehemently urged by the priests, beneath whose influence she had been trained, and who, therefore, exercised an irresistible spell over her, to do her utmost to introduce into Israel the hideous and cruel rites of her hereditary religion. Nor was she slow to obey. First, she seems to have erected a temple to Astarte in the neighbourhood of Jezreel, the Windsor of the land; and to have supported its 450 priests from the revenues of her private purse. Then Ahab and she built a temple for Baal in Samaria, the capital of the kingdom, large enough to contain immense crowds of worshippers (2 Kings x. 21). Shrines and temples then began to rise in all parts of the land in honour of these false deities, whilst the altars of Jehovah, like that at Carmel, were ruthlessly broken down. The land swarmed with the priests of Baal and of the groves, proud of Court favour, glorying in their sudden rise to power, insolent, greedy, licentious, and debased. The fires of persecution were lit and began to burn with fury. The schools of the prophets were shut up; grass grew in their courts. The prophets themselves were hunted down, and slain by the sword. They wandered about in sheepskins and goatskins, being destitute, afflicted, tormented; so much so, that the pious Obadiah had the greatest difficulty in saving a few of them, by hiding them in the limestone caves of Carmel, and feeding them at the risk of his own life.

The whole land seemed apostate. Of all the thousands of Israel, only seven thousand remained, who had not bowed the knee or kissed the hand to Baal. But they were paralysed with fear, and kept so still, that their very existence was unknown by Elijah in the hours of his greatest loneliness. Such times have often come, fraught with woe. False religions have gained the upper hand; iniquity has abounded; and the love of many has waxed cold. So was it, when the Turk swept over the Christian communities of Asia Minor, and replaced the Cross by the crescent. So was it, when Roman Catholicism spread as a pall of darkness over Europe, that grew denser, as the dawn of the Reformation was on the point of breaking. So was it in the last century, when Moderatism reigned in Scotland, and apathy in England.

But God is never at a loss. The land may be overrun with sin, the lamps of witness may seem all extinguished, the whole force of the popular current may run counter to his truth; and the plot may threaten to be within a hair's breadth of entire success. But, all the time, He will be preparing a weak man, in some obscure highland village; and in the moment of greatest need, will send him forth, as his all-sufficient answer to the worst plottings of his foes. "When the enemy shall come in like a flood, the Lord will lift up a standard against him." So it has been, and so it shall be again.

Elijah was of the inhabitants of Gilead. Gilead lay east of the Jordan; it was wild and rugged; its hills were covered with shaggy forests; its awful solitudes were only broken by the dash of mountain streams; its valleys were the haunt of fierce wild beasts. "What the highlands of Argyleshire and Inverness were a century ago to the lowland towns of Scotland, that must Gilead have been to the more refined and civilised people of Jerusalem and Samaria." The inhabitants of Gilead partook of the character of their country, wild, lawless, and unkempt. They dwelt in rude stone villages, and subsisted by keeping flocks of sheep.

Elijah grew up like the other lads of his age. In his early years he would probably do the work of a shepherd on those wild hills. As he grew to manhood, his erect figure, his shaggy locks, his cloak of camel's hair, his muscular, sinewy strength, which could outstrip the fiery coursers of the royal chariot, and endure excessive physical fatigue, distinguished him from the dwellers in lowland valleys; but in none of these would he be specially different from the men who grew up with him in the obscure mountain hamlet of Thisbe, whence he derived the name of Tishbite. There were many amongst them as lithe, and he. We must not look to these things for the secret of his strength.

As he grew in years, he became characterised by an intense religious earnestness. He was "very jealous for the Lord God of hosts." Deeply taught in Scripture, especially in those passages which told how much Jehovah had done for his people, Elijah yearned, with passionate desire, that they should give Him his meed of honour. And when he learnt that this was lacking; as the dread tidings came, by broken snatches, of what was transpiring across the Jordan; as messenger after messenger told how Jezebel had thrown down God's altars and slain his prophets, and replaced them by the impious rites of her Tyrian deities—his blood ran liquid fire, his indignation burst all bounds, he was "very jealous for the Lord God of hosts." O noble heart! would that we could be as righteously indignant, amid the evils of our time! Oh for a coal from that pure flame that burnt on thine inner hearth!

But the question was, How should he act? What could he do, a wild, untutored child of the desert? There was only one thing he could do—the resource of all much-tried souls—he could pray; and he did, he prayed earnestly (James v. 17). And in his prayers he seems to have been led back to a denunciation made, years before, by Moses to the people, that if they turned aside, and served other gods, and worshipped them, the Lord's wrath would be kindled against them, and He would shut up the heaven, that there should be no rain (Deut. xi. 17). Flowing into this mould, his thoughts must have shaped themselves somewhat thus:—If my God does not fulfil this threat, the people will think that it is an idle tale, or that He is a myth of the past, a dead tradition. This must not be. Better far, that the land should suffer the terrors of famine, and the people experience the bitterest agonies of thirst, and that I should be torn limb from limb. It were better that we should suffer the direst physical woes that can blast our national prosperity, rather than that we should come to think that the Jehovah of our fathers is as dead as the idols of the heathen. And so he set himself to pray that the terrible threat might be literally fulfilled. "He prayed earnestly that it might not rain."

A terrible prayer indeed! Granted; and yet, was it not more terrible for the people, to forget and ignore the God of their fathers, and to give themselves up to the licentious orgies of Baal and Astarte? Remember, too, what a wrong construction might be put upon the utter silence of God Himself. Could anything be more disastrous than that the statute-book should be filled with laws which the Lawgiver could not, or would not, enforce? Nothing could be more detrimental to the true conception of God. "These things hast thou done, and I kept silence; thou thoughtest that I was altogether such an one as thyself; but I will reprove thee, and set them in order before thine eyes."

Physical suffering is a smaller calamity than moral delinquency. And the love of God does not shrink from inflicting it, if the plague of sin may be cut out as a cancer, and stayed. This is why there is so much sorrow in thy life. Thou art suffering a terrible drought, before which all the springs of thy prosperity are drying up. No dews of grace or rains of blessing have fallen to thy lot for many days. This is not a chance; it is the work of One who loves thee too well to permit thee to forsake Himself, without making one effort to arrest and change thee. The cornfield is fired only because He wants to bring thee to Himself (2 Sam. xiv. 30). The drought is sent only to enforce the rebuilding of the altar on Carmel's height, and the immolation of the false priests in the vale beneath.

And as Elijah prayed, the conviction was wrought into his mind, that it should be even as he prayed, and that he should go to acquaint Ahab with the fact. Whatever might be the hazard to himself, both king and people must be made to connect their calamities with the true cause. And this they evidently did, as we shall see (xviii. 10). That the drought was due to his prayer is also to be inferred from the express words with which Elijah announced nor rain these years, but according to my word."

What a meeting was that! We know not where it took place; whether in the summer palace, when Jezebel was at her consort's side, or when Ahab was surrounded by his high officers of state in Samaria. But wherever it took place, it were a subject worthy of the highest art and genius. The old religion against the new; the child of nature against the effeminate child of courts; camel's hair against soft clothing; moral strength against moral weakness.

It needed no ordinary moral strength. It was no child's play for the untutored child of the desert to go, on such an errand, to that splendid court! What chance was there of his escaping with his life! Surely he would not fare better than the prophets, who had not dared so much as he! Yet he went and came unhurt, in the panoply of a might which seemed invulnerable.

What was the secret of that strength? If it can be shown that it was due to something inherent in Elijah, and peculiar to himself; some force of nature; some special quality of soul, to which ordinary men can lay no claim; then we may as well close our inquiries, and turn away from the inaccessible heights that mock us. But if it can be shown, as I think it can, that this splendid life was lived, not by its inherent qualities, but by sources of strength which are within the reach of the humblest child of God who reads these lines, then every line of it is an inspiration, beckoning us to its own glorious level. Courage, brothers! There is nothing in this man's life which may not have its counterpart in ours, if only it can be established that his strength was obtained from sources which are accessible to ourselves.

Elijah's strength did not lie in himself or his surroundings. He was of humble extraction. He had no special training. He is expressly said to have been a man of "like passions" with ourselves. When, through failure of faith, he was cut off from the sources of his strength, he showed more craven-hearted cowardice than most men would have done; he lay down upon the desert sands, asking to die. When the natural soil of his nature shows itself, it is not richer than that of the majority of men; and, if anything, it is the reverse.

He gives us three indications of the Sources of his Strength. (1) As Jehovah liveth. To all beside Jehovah might seem dead, but to him He was the one supreme reality of life. And if we would be strong, we, too, must be able to say: "I know that my Redeemer liveth; He ever liveth to make intercession for us; and because He lives, we shall live also." The death of the Cross was bitter, but He liveth; the spear made fearful havoc, but He liveth; the grave was fast closed, but He liveth; men and devils did their worst, but He liveth. The man who has heard Jesus say, "I am He that liveth," will also hear Him say, "Fear not, be strong, yea, be strong."

(2) Before whom I stand. He was standing in the presence of Ahab, but he was conscious of the presence of a greater than any earthly monarch, even the presence of Jehovah, before whom angels bow in lowly worship, hearkening to the voice of his word. Gabriel himself could not employ a loftier designation (Luke i. 19). Let us cultivate this habitual recognition of the presence of God; it will lift us above all other fear. Let us build our cottage so that every window may look out on the mighty Alps of God's presence; and that we may live, and move, and have our being beneath the constant impression: "Lo, God is here." Besides this, a conviction had been borne in upon his mind that he was chosen by God, as his called and recognised servant and messenger; and in this capacity he stood before Him.

(3) Elijah may be rendered, Jehovah is my God; but there is another possible translation, Jehovah is my strength. This gives the key to his life. God was the strength of his life; of whom should he be afraid? When the wicked, even his enemies and foes, came on him to eat up his flesh, they stumbled and fell. Though an host should encamp against him, his heart should not fear. What a revelation is given us in this name! Oh that it were true of each of us! Yet, cease from our own strength, which, at the best, is weakness, and let us appropriate God's, by daily, hourly faith. Then this shall be the motto of our future lives: In the Lord have I righteousness and strength; I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me; the Lord is my strength and song, and He is become my salvation.

SOLOMON'S TEMPLE.—2.

LECTURES BY MR. THOMAS NEWBERRY.

GOD'S TEMPLE FILLED WITH HIS GLORY.

This was the subject of the closing lecture at Mildmay Conference Hall, delivered on Thursday week. The passages of Scripture read were Exodus xl. 34, 35; 2 Chron. v. 7, 11—14, and vii. 1—3; Ezekiel xliii. 1—5; Acts ii. 1—4.

At the commencement Mr. Newberry asked, "Will God in very deed dwell with men on the earth? Behold, the heaven and heaven of heavens cannot contain Him." In reply, God says, "I dwell in the high and holy place; heaven is my throne, and earth is my footstool; but to that man will I look, and with him will I dwell, who is of a humble and contrite spirit, and trembleth at my word." No sooner had God brought Israel out of the land of bondage, and led them into the wilderness, than He said to Moses, "Make Me a sanctuary, that I may dwell among you." Marvellous condescension of Divine and infinite love! God seeking the companionship of men! What a social God is the God we adore! When God had planted the Garden of Eden, and filled it with everything that could delight the senses, He placed man there, and then, in the cool of the evening, God came and walked with our first parents. When Adam and Eve, having sinned, hid themselves, God seems to have missed their companionship, and asks, in a voice of affectionate expostulation, "Adam, where art thou?" "We have often trodden these groves," He seems to say. "We have walked in social companionship together here: Adam, my companion and friend, where art thou?"

With regard to Enoch, the seventh from Adam, this is recorded of him, "he walked with God." Thus the companionship was renewed. Mr. Newberry mentioned a charming little anecdote of a Sunday-school teacher, who in explaining the translation of Enoch to her little class of scholars, expressed herself in this simple but beautiful manner: God was walking with Enoch in the evening, as he had done before with Adam and Eve; and when they had walked so far and talked so long that it was too late for Enoch to go back to his own home, God took him home with Him. And that, Mr. Newberry added, will be the conclusion of God walking with man. In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, for those who now walk with God, with whom God walks, Christ will come and take them home to be with Him for ever and ever.

When God had brought Israel out of Egypt, He desired to renew his companionship with them, and through them with the rest of mankind. Hence his command, "Make me a sanctuary." And no sooner was that sanctuary provided, and everything accomplished according to God's own word, than "the glory of Jehovah filled the Tabernacle." Once more, when God had planted Israel in the land that He had promised them, and had established the kingdom in the hand of Solomon, no sooner was the Temple erected, and a house prepared for Him, than again the glory of Jehovah filled the house of God.

Mr. Newberry next went on to speak of three points to be especially noticed in connection with this subject. The first was the bringing of the ark into its place in the holiest of all, and under the wings of the cherubim. The ark, as previously shown, is a beautiful foreshadowing type of the person of Emmanuel. The central has given to his beloved Son. In heaven, as described in Revelation, Christ occupied the central place, and so on earth too after his resurrection, He came and stood in the midst of his disciples. Some interesting correspondences between the typical sacrifice and the "one offering once offered," especially that between the descent of the fire upon the altar, and the descent of the Holy Ghost, were dwelt upon. Christ having presented Himself as a sacrifice of a sweet savour, God shows his acceptance of the sacrifice by raising Him from the dead, and seating Him at his own right hand. And when the disciples were gathered together in one place, perfectly joined together, in the same mind and judgment, then the sound as of a rushing mighty wind was heard, and the glory of Jehovah filled all the house where they were sitting. Is not God the same now—the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever? Is He not desirous of renewing his Enoch walks with man? Will He not walk with the soul that walks with Him? If we make Him a sanctuary, will He not dwell in our midst? Yes, and as when all the conditions in regard to the typical sacrifice were complete, the temple was filled with glory, so now, if we would have the house of God filled with the glory of God, these two things are, as it were, the foundation principles—a crucified and glorified Christ having his own proper place and authority, and the heart of God's people uniting together in supplication, thanksgiving, and praise.

After some reference to the Millennial temple, upon the erection of which the glory of the Lord will once more be revealed and all flesh will see it, Mr. Newberry spoke, in conclusion, of the holy city described in Revelation. In this city, John tells us, there is no light, for the Lamb is the light (or the lamp) thereof, and there is no temple, no one place more sacred than another, for Jehovah, God Almighty, and the Lamb are the glory of it.

Those who have been interested in these lectures, will find in the "Supplement to the Englishman's Bible," published by Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton (10s.), the help they need to a fuller understanding and appreciation of the lessons brought before them. In this supplement, entitled Tabernacle and Temple, there are presented on the one hand the Scriptures bearing thereon, and on the other an exhaustive descriptive explanation, by a careful and prayerful study of which the reader will penetrate the meaning of the types and shadows, and obtain a fuller grasp of the glorious substance to which they ever point. Engravings, autotypes, and a map, further illustrate the deep things of God thus brought before us, and all students of the great and fascinating subject will readily acknowledge the help they have received from Mr. Newberry's work.

AUCKLAND Y.M.C.A.—The annual meeting of this Association, held recently in the new building, was a very successful one. The report breathed a thankful and hopeful spirit—thankfulness that so much had been accomplished, and hopefulness with regard to the future. The number of members was 174, and of subscribers 335, and it is intended that the present year shall be one of extended effort, to draw as many young men as possible under the influence of the Association.

SHANGHAI SEAMEN'S MISSION.—The reports of Christian effort amongst seamen are always especially interesting, and that concerning the Mission at Shanghai is no exception. Miss Fowles, the missionary, states that during the year upwards of 3000 men attended the 200 Gospel meetings at the Temperance Hall, and that abundant evidence has been given of God's blessing upon the work. Letters from sailors tell of their overflowing gratitude to God who has saved them, and to his servant for bringing to them the joyful news. In one case the whole crew decided to live for and serve God, and even ungodly captains, seeing the good results amongst their men, have said, "I wish you would all get converted." During the summer many visits were paid to ships lying off the port. As the sailors could not come ashore, the missionary went to them, many happy meetings on board being the result. Temperance work and other agencies are

THE STORY OF A GOSPEL.

The following account of the most interesting conversion of a Buddhist priest and a Confucian scholar in the interior of China seems forcibly to emphasise the question asked by the Apostle Paul, "How shall they believe in Him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher?"—

A few weeks ago I learned through a brother missionary in North China that a man to whom I sold a single Gospel of Mark eight years ago was brought to Christ through studying it, and had since been the means of leading more than fifty others to Christ. Now the following particulars have reached me from Mr. William Key, of the China Inland Mission, stationed at Sih-chau, in the province of Shan-si, dated Jan. 8. After speaking of encouragement in the work at Sih-chau, where he had recently gone, he writes:

"Most of the Christians connected with the Church here live near Ta-ning Hien (thirty miles distant). You will be pleased to know that the work commenced there through a Gospel of Mark, sold by a Mr. Chang—who I now understand is yourself—eight years ago. The Gospel was sold at a village called Wu-ch'eng, on Oct. 1, 1880. It was taken to a village called Sang-o-ts'un, ten miles further west, where it was read by two men—one a priest, named Chang-chih-pen, who lived in a temple there; and the other a friend of his, named Chü, a Master of Arts. Neither of them understood it much, but they continued to read it, and not only to read it, but to worship it, since they thought it must be a book from heaven.

"Three years after this (1883), Mr. Chü, the scholar, found a New Testament in an inn at Wu-ch'eng (the place where the Gospel was bought). He asked if the innkeeper would sell it, and finally bargained to buy it for eighty cash (about fourpence), twice the original price. He carried it joyfully home to his native village, and met with his friend the priest every evening to read it. They now got a step in advance, and began to worship Christ and the twelve apostles.

"Two years after finding the New Testament (1885), the scholar, Mr. Chü, went to the central city of Ping-yang Fu for the Government examinations, and, while there, inquired for the foreigners. He found old Mr. Sung, the first native Christian in the south of the Shan-si province, and through him was introduced to Mr. Drake. The man returned to his village to tell his friend the priest and all his neighbours the glad tidings of a Saviour's love.

"A year after he and the priest were baptized at Ping-yang; then another brother was brought in, and in the spring of last year I had the joy of baptizing four more. Since then nineteen have been added to the number. They do not all live in one village, but are scattered in different directions. Mrs. Key and I had the pleasure of spending a fortnight among them, and I don't think I have seen warmer-hearted Christians anywhere in China. They do not hide their light under a bushel. Mr. Chü is pastor of the flock, and is a man of faith and of the Holy Ghost....He has been much used in bringing in others and in building up the Christians."

Many of those whose hearts are thoroughly stirred to cry to God for the evangelisation of the world and the speedy bringing in of "Christ's heathen" (Psa. ii.), are praying for a mighty awakening in such countries as China and Africa, and surely such reports as the above, and what we now hear from the Congo, should encourage us to increased prayer and effort, "Be strong, all ye people of the land, saith the Lord, and WORK: for I am with you, saith the Lord of Hosts" (Hag. ii. 4).

The time of harvest has come; the fields are white—but still we cry, "Where are the reapers?" Here are men in China groping about in the dark, priest and people alike, dissatisfied with the slavery of idolatry and the empty but high-sounding philosophy of Confucius. By accident, or some strange providence, an itinerant missionary passes through a neighbouring village; they buy one of his foreign books, and, before heard, worship it. Then they get more light, and worship Christ and his twelve apostles—but not till after six or seven years of anxious waiting for the light of the Gospel to shine into their hearts.

These things should drive us to our knees indeed, and take such possession of our hearts and consciences that we shall be able to stand uncondemned before our Lord's last command: "Go ye into all the world," and vindicate our claim of loving Him by doing whatsoever He commands us—which we hitherto have not done.

OBITUARY.

MR. JAMES SCRYMGEOUR.

The death of this Dundee philanthropist will cause deep sorrow, not only in the town where he laboured so long, but throughout Forfarshire and Perthshire. He was an ardent temperance advocate, and with the young he was a great favourite. Mr. Scrymgeour will be best remembered for his labour amongst the poor. As agent to the Prison Aid Society he was brought into contact with the waifs and strays of society, and was ever seeking to lead them into paths of honesty and virtue. He also took a particular interest in endeavouring to rescue fallen women, and many through his influence have become useful and respectable members of society. His experience of Industrial School work was very large and varied. The widow, the orphan, and destitute knew him as a true friend.

MR. J. H. TRITTON.

In the death of Mr. Joseph Tritton, of the well-known banking firm in Lombard-street, the Church of Christ has lost one of its ripest and rarest members, and the world one of its truest benefactors. Called at an early age to the knowledge of God in Christ, his life has been one long testimony to the reality of Christian faith and life. He displayed in a singularly eminent degree the qualities of clear perception, matured judgment, and firm decision of character. For upwards of twenty-four years he held the post of Treasurer of the Baptist Missionary Society, the interests of which, as an institution for spreading the light of the Gospel to the dark nations of the earth, lay very near to his heart. Amid the changing opinions and shifting beliefs of men he clung with rigid tenacity to "the old paths," and never failed to declare his unshaken confidence in the "Old, old story, of Jesus and his Love." Although identified with the Baptist denomination, he was far removed from the spirit of sectarian ambition. For nine years past he was a constant worshipper and communicant at the Chatsworth-road Church, West Norwood, under the ministry of Rev. W. Fuller Gooch, but Christians of every name in the district where he lived found ready response to their appeals for aid and co-operation. He had for a long time before his decease been in weakened health, and he fell asleep in Jesus on the evening of Sunday, May 1. He was interred in the churchyard of Great Leighs, Essex, his country residence, on Thursday, May 5.

CURE FOR INTEMPERANCE.—A correspondent draws attention to the following prescription which has been used with success in allaying the craving, where confirmed drinkers have become abstainers:—Sulphate of iron, 5 grains; magnesia, 10 grains; peppermint, 11 drachms; spirit of nutmeg, 1 drachm. Shake the bottle. This dose (two tablespoonfuls) to be taken twice a day. A bottle containing twelve doses costs 1s. 6d.

NEW YORK MEDICAL MISSIONARY SOCIETY.—The Corresponding Secretary, in his report at the recent annual meeting of this Mission, said that in connection with the dispensary work sinners were pointed to the Saviour, and infidels, abandoned women, criminals, and drunkards were saved from their sins. As the result of the recent intercollegiate revival of zeal for foreign missions 1400 young men and 400 young ladies are resolved to spend their lives as foreign missionaries. Four hundred and fifty of these intend to take a full medical missionary course of study, and 450 a partial medical course. Fifty young men and twelve young ladies are expected to make application for admission to the Mission Training Institute in the autumn. Dr. Dowkontt, the founder of the Mission, publishes a monthly called The Medical Missionary Record, giving full information of the work, at one dollar per annum, at 118 E. 45th-street, New

LEPROSY IN JAMAICA.

Sir,—Very recently it was my privilege to be present at a service held in the Lazar House here. It was a very affecting sight. In the Lazar House there are 144 lepers, mostly men, but with about fifty women, and some little children in all stages of the dreadful malady. The hot tropical sun shone through the open casement into the room where these poor sufferers were assembled, to hear the words of Divine consolation from the devoted Archdeacon Douet. Behind a screen were some in a late stage of the disease, who could no longer rise from bed, but who were thus able to join in the worship. You should have seen how their faces brightened, when I distributed a few copies of The British Workman among them. It seems they have very few books, but these have all been read, and Archdeacon Douet wants to get them some new ones. I felt it a privilege to help a little in this direction, and no doubt there are many English Christians who would feel thankful for the opportunity of assisting in such a good work. If so, the Venerable Archdeacon Douet, Government House, Spanish Town, Jamaica, will be most grateful.

The island, I am sorry to say, is afflicted by a moral leprosy, represented by the fact that the illegitimate births are as sixty to forty legitimate, and in some districts of the island as high as seventy. Thank God! the Spirit of the Most High is breathing upon the dry bones. The ministers of the island of all denominations, with the noble-minded bishop at their head, are fully alive to the paramount importance of social purity. A fortnight since we had a remarkable meeting in Kingston, at which about seven hundred men were present. The Bishop was in the chair, and Baptists, Wesleyans, Presbyterians, and others were well represented upon the platform. Last night we had a still more interesting meeting of men here in Spanish Town, the former seat of the Government, at which the Custos—something like a Lord-Lieutenant—of the parish presided, and meetings are being arranged in other parts of the island.

The low moral state of Jamaica is largely attributable to the virus of slavery, for in the old slavery days there were hardly any legitimate births at all, marriage among the negroes being then discountenanced and hardly recognised. Here, as elsewhere in the great harvest field, we must thank God and take courage.

Yours faithfully,

Samuel James Capper.

Spanish Town, Jamaica.

THE FOLLOWING ANECDOTE OF MR. SPURGEON is well authenticated:—On a certain occasion, when dining at a lady's house in Regent's Park, with the late Dr. Brock, he (Mr. S.) remarked that £2000 had to be forthcoming for his builder to-morrow, and though nothing was in hand, the money would be paid at ten o'clock. "I wish you would not say that," Dr. Brock replied; but immediately after, while they were still at the table, a telegram came to say that A. B. had just left £2000 for the Orphanage; and then, confessing that he had never seen anything like that, the Dr. called upon all to put down their knives and forks and return thanks to God. They never knew who A. B. was, nor whence he came.—Gleanings in Harvest Fields.

RAGGED SCHOOL WORK AT THE WEST-END.—The forty-third annual meeting of Ogle-mews Ragged Schools was held last week. The school attendances have continued very satisfactory—about 200 on Sunday morning and evening, and 100 on week days. Amongst the useful branches of the Institution is a crêche, the charge (3d. a day) being remitted in cases of great poverty. There are seventy voluntary workers. A kitchen for the supply of penny dinners has recently been erected on a piece of newly acquired land. The great improvement manifest in the present buildings and accommodation, as compared with those in which the work at Field-lane was carried on some twenty years ago, was the subject of general

For the Young.

MRS. GINEVER AND THE ORPHANS.

[The little book from which these incidents are taken entitled, "A Retrospect," and may be obtained at ield's Bible Warehouse, 65, Regent-street, W. (1s.) contains a most simple and touching account of the rphan Homes at Holloway and Broadstairs, conducted Mrs. Ginever. The story of how she has been led nd guided, of her trust, and how wonderfully it has een rewarded, is one that will comfort and rejoice the eart of every Christian. The three Homes are capable accommodating 127 orphans, and no urgent case is fused.]

n one occasion, going the day after an auction pay for the goods, I was disappointed at finding e man I had engaged to remove them had not ept his appointment, so I employed another in is place. Upon finding it was an orphan home e said, "Now I see why I have been kept from ending half a sovereign elsewhere. You see, a'am, it's this way: I used to work on the ilway and met with an accident, so that I am ill weak in one arm. They gave me compensaon, and with that I bought a pony and cart and t up a greengrocer's shop. When it was opened, y wife and I agreed to give to the Lord the rst evening's profits. Being Saturday night we ad a goodish many customers and so we made n shillings. We thought, as the Lord had preerved my life and not left my children fatherless, ought to go to some orphanage. I'd only eard of one—that large place at Bristol—but omehow day after day has passed and I did not eem guided to send it. This morning my wife aid, 'Now do send it to-day, for business is very lack and we may be tempted to spend it.' So if ou will accept it I should prefer giving it in our wn neighbourhood." After a little talk I peruaded him to purchase out of it a few flowers r the little garden, also to come and plant them nd do what was needed when he had a spare vening, so as to give the balance in labour nstead of cash.

A similar incident occurred later on. When e first baby was received I saw in a shop winow a pretty plaid, and thought how much I hould like some of it for a pelisse; but it was Monday morning, and four shillings and sixpence as all I had in hand, so baby must wait a more onvenient opportunity. Just as I was turning way from the window the master of the shop ame, and, asking me if I were the lady who had ome orphan children, invited me to go in and elect two pounds' worth of drapery when I had few minutes to spare. "I will come at once," gladly replied, and soon selected some mucheeded material, and of course did not forget the laid.

Three months after the first six children were eceived, an application came for one recently ereft of both parents; but as no further ddition had been made to our bed-room ccommodation, and it had been a great struggle o maintain the small number already taken, it eemed impossible to help this poor child.

Still the case was most urgent, and looking up or guidance the order from the Master came: 'Take this child and nurse it for me, and I will give thee thy wages." At once I determined to ake the dear orphan into my own bed, and a elegram was sent for her to come. The Lord of he vineyard has said, "The labourer is worthy of his hire;" and I believe He is never better pleased than when we are bold enough to fix our own wages. So I said, "The old terms, please, Lord—the soul of the child." A few days after her arrival, she reminded me it was Sunday morning, and that she was going to wear all her new clothes. "How about the heart," I said; 'is that new too?" "Yes, that it is, for I went o Jesus just as you told me, and He has forgiven me, and I know it too." Those who do not nderstand children might ask, "Would a Chrisian child have thought so much about her new lothes?" I suppose a Christian man or woman ould not think it wrong to express their joy at clothes were as great a treasure to the little girl as a handsome gift would be to them, and when the Lord blesses the soul of a child He does not wish to make the young life unnatural. He has made the young of all created beings to skip and rejoice; how much more does it become a child to be buoyant and happy, who knows the blessedness of safety in the loving arms of Jesus!

This child is now a young woman, and, I am thankful to say, a church member and Sunday-school teacher.

THE MARTYR OF SOLWAY SANDS.

The tide is flowing on Solway sands,
While, bound to a rugged stake,
A fair young Scottish lassie stands
For Christ and Covenant's sake.

She could die in the bloom of her early youth
(Still a passing pain to die),
But not one word of heavenly truth
Could her guileless tongue deny.

The water had reached her praying lips,
And dashed in her upturned eyes,
And the swoon that had led through death's eclipse
Was unfolding Paradise.

But rough and torturing hands unbound
The lass from the martyr-stake,
And she found herself on Scottish ground,
Still mocked for Jesus' sake.

"Now swear to the king, or worse shall be,
And abjure your Covenant vile."
"Never," she cried, "my King is He
Who died for me erstwhile!

"I am his! I am his! I am bought with blood,
Let me go where the saints have gone;
I will pray for your king as I plead with God,
But my troth is with Christ alone!"

Then they bound her again to the cruel stake
In the hoarse advancing tide,
And saw the gurgling bubbles wake
And the fair hair floating wide.

But they saw not the gleam of the white-winged host,
Nor heard, as she heard, the strain
Of the ransomed ones on the heavenly coast
That answered the glad refrain—

"Blessing and honour, and glory and power,
For ever and ever shall be
To Him who has saved us in hell's dark hour,
And made us his people, and free."

But the latest voice in that heavenly lay—
The clearest of all beside—
Was hers who went to her death that day
In the Solway's flowing tide.

O Scottish Land! at Freedom's birth,
Though with pangs thy children cried,
It was not loss, but a gain to earth,
That Margaret Wilson died.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sunday, May 15, Rom. xv. 17—33; Monday, May 16, Rom. xvi. 1—16; Tuesday, May 17, Rom. xvi. 17—27; Wednesday, May 18, Ps. xxiii. 1—6; Thursday, May 19, Ps. xxiv. 1—10; Friday, May 20 Ps. xxv. 1—22; Saturday, May 21, Ps. xxvi. 1—12.

SCOTCH CHILDREN FOR CANADIAN HOMES.—On April 26 Miss Emma Stirling, of Edinburgh, sailed again for Halifax, taking with her a party of over fifty children to her pleasant farm home in Nova Scotia, from which most of them will, ere long, be planted out in approved families. Miss Stirling divides her time pretty equally between New and Old Scotland, endeavouring to keep well in hand all the multiplying threads of her work.

HOME FOR MOTHERLESS GIRLS.—There are thirty-three little girls in this Home at Hurst-road, Ocklynge, Eastbourne, fifteen of these being entirely dependent for all they need on the kind lady (Miss J. S. Lee) at its head. For the remainder, sums varying from 2s. 6d. to 5s. per week are paid by charitable persons desirous of rescuing little ones. The girls are educated and taught needlework. Friends wishing to see the Home are welcome any day (Sundays excepted) from eleven

Mr. GEORGE CLARKE in INVERNESS.

An account of this mission, kindly sent by Rev. George Robson, of Inverness, reached us too late for our last issue; some portions of it are forestalled by the report already given. Mr. Robson says:—

It is difficult to convey in writing a due impression of the work of grace which has been witnessed in this town, in connection with Mr. Clarke's mission. For once, denominational feeling was completely broken down, so far as the people were concerned; the audiences which crowded the Free High Church night after night were evidently, as the inquiry-room also proved, gathered out of all the churches in town without exception. Out of the whole series of meetings two stand prominently forth. On the evening of Sabbath, April 24, the Music Hall was packed with an audience composed exclusively of men, and such men as are to be seen only in the Highlands, in such attire and aspect also as are seen only on a Sabbath. It was a sight never to be forgotten by those who witnessed it; and when the vast assembly, led by a strong male choir rose and sang "Stand up, stand up for Jesus," the effect was thrilling. Mr. Clarke, standing at the very front of the platform, spoke for an hour, on the manliness of true Christianity in a style which was itself an admirable illustration of his theme.

The other meeting which stands out more prominently was that held on Thursday night, April 28. It was the closing meeting of the mission proper, and the address was a powerful appeal for immediate decision and whole-hearted consecration. Fully two-thirds remained to the after-meeting, which was of a peculiarly solemn character, leading up to an open declaration of personal surrender to God, in which all who stood up sang together Frances Havergal's "Take my life, and let it be." In spite of Mr. Clarke's very solemn and discouraging "fencing" of the act, the great body of the meeting took part in it, and the presence of the Spirit of God was very vividly realised in it.

Throughout the whole mission there has been a growing interest and deepening impression. Mr. Clarke's manly bearing, clear common sense, and unaffected style, combined with his transparent earnestness, have won for him the respect of classes which too often look with contempt on an evangelist, while the impression produced through his preaching has spread into circles usually impervious to such movements. Never, probably, has there been a mission which produced so deep an impression on this community. The grace of God has been seen, not only in the conversion of sinners, but also in a very manifest quickening of spiritual life in the churches. There was much prayer, and God has answered beyond our expectations. On the evening of Sabbath, May 1 (Mr. Clarke having left for Perth the previous day), a united thanksgiving service was held in the Music Hall, which was crowded in every part. "Blessed be the Lord God of Israel, who only doeth wondrous works."

WOLDINGHAM, SURREY. — Although this hamlet is only seventeen miles from London, the only provision for the spiritual welfare of those living in the cottages scattered on the Downs, has up till recently been a Sunday afternoon service conducted by a clergyman from a distance. The nearest day-school or Sunday-school is nearly two miles away. Within the last two or three months an evangelistic service has been held in the kitchen of an old public-house, which the freeholder has converted into a coffee tavern. The spirit of hearing manifested has been most encouraging. It is now proposed to put up an iron room, seating about 120 people, with a moveable partition, providing Sunday-school accommodation in the rear. As the estate (several hundreds of acres in extent) has just been opened up for building purposes, and is near a new railway station, the population will no doubt increase rapidly in the next few years. Mr. J. W. C. Fegan, Deepdale, Caterham Valley, will be glad of the sympathy of friends in Spring Anniversaries.

LONDON CITY MISSION.

(Exeter Hall, May 5: Mr. G. Williams, Chairman.)

This excellent Society is in the happy position of having a large surplus, and the committee are doing wisely in considering the claims of those workers who have served them long and faithfully, by according a small increase of salary. There is to be an increase in the number of missionaries in needy districts, while some provision will be made for the widows of missionaries. The report contained a splendid record of work done, and of large results achieved in the reclamation of those out of the way.

Rev. C. H. Spurgeon

warmly regretted the absence of the Bishop of Rochester, whose heart was, he knew, thoroughly in the work. He rejoiced to see what he might term specialties in the mission work, such as house-to-house and public-house visitation. It spoke well for the publicans that they regarded the missioners with favour, but the office was no easy one to fulfil. "A city missionary must be no fool; if he is, he is a fool to be a city missionary," was one of the terse remarks which characterised the speech. We are, he said, as a garrison for Christ in the midst of a revolted city. In many ways Gospel work in London is easier than it was fifty years ago, but in many ways it is harder. The same influence which produces greater growth of righteousness also produces greater sin, even as sun and rain strengthen grain and weed alike.

The ideal of Christian ambition is not to live a happy life, and then go to heaven. It is a poor soul that can fulfil its destiny within the narrow circle of its own ribs! Salt is not to be kept in a box nor in an elegant salt-cellar; but it is to be rubbed into the meat to prevent putrefaction. And he is most like Christ who never confines himself within his own rank, but mixes up with his fellow-men, for the place for salt is in the meat. Fishermen will stand knee-deep in the water to catch their fish, and we must stand knee deep in the population. This is the truest Socialism. If Christ wept o'er Jerusalem, what tears would suffice for this great city of ours, which is not a city but a world?

When I was a boy I used to hear sermons about escaping from the wrath to come, and I used to be told that if men perished in their sins there is a dreadful hell and everlasting pain. That testimony is very much confined now, and I am very sorry for it. I believe that, in proportion as there is a doubt thrown upon that, there will be a cooling down in the ardour of Christian men in regard to these dying souls. Some may invent theories which will allow them to be quiet while men go down to hell. I cannot accept such a theory, and, therefore, I cannot rest without doing all I can myself, and I urge you to do all you can, to pluck the firebrands from the flame, and save them from going down into the pit. We are destined to an immortality of honour and glory if we serve our Master well here below; but, on the other hand, I cannot but regard a man living and dying in his sins as destined to a future of which I dare not speak. But I would have no man venture to attempt it and enter upon it unprepared. You who believe the old faith, above all men are called upon by God to work while it is called to-day, and to spend your very life in calling to men that they turn from the error of their ways, and come to the Cross of Christ and live.

Go back in history, and hear the cry in the London streets, "Bring out your dead, bring out your dead." That was the Plague of London. Suppose there had been a man anywhere in London who had found out a medicine that would heal the plague. To his surprise and amazement, when he was dying of the plague he put the phial to his lips and recovered. He has found out all about it; he has known it for weeks, and he has gone into the streets and never told his little children are getting stark and stiff, and all those multitudes in the streets with the cross on their doors, he has never told them. Why, if he were human, he would rush to his neighbours and tell them of the remedy; if he were not possessed of an evil spirit he would make it known from end to end of the city that people could be cured. Now, I need not translate that parable. Translate the meaning of it into your own lives, and as you know the Gospel of Christianity, go and spread it all around among the myriads of this great city.

After some earnest words from Rev. Burman Cassin, a valuable and thoughtful address was given by Rev. David Davies, of Regent's Park, who referred to the increasing population of London, as a difficult problem to the Christian worker. The Metropolis absorbs a large number of young men and women from the country; here they breathe a vitiating atmosphere, physical and moral, and lose the restraints of home. In places of business they are subjected to evil influences, and led to disregard manly virtue and womanly chastity. Hence the importance of going into places where these young people can be reached. The work among sailors, too, is of the highest importance, for in London they are beset with every temptation. Nowhere are so many nations represented as in London, and the City Mission work, therefore, is really proclaiming the Gospel to almost every nation in the world. The missionaries have a glorious work before them, and if it wears them out, it is—

> Better to live, and waste in living,
>   Than live in useless sleep;
> Who gives to others what's worth the giving,
>   Cannot both give and keep.

Mr. P. Cox supplied an excellent commentary on the actual work of the Society by relating incidents from his own experience. The motto of the City Mission is "London for Christ;" to achieve that grand consummation they will need all the help and sympathy that the Christian public can give them.

CHURCH MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

(Exeter Hall, May 3: Sir J. Kennaway, Chairman.)

There were a morning and an evening meeting; both were crowded, and fraught with interest. The total income for the year (said Rev. W. Gray) is the largest on record—£234,000 odd. Of this, £4000 were given during the February meetings. Eighteen graduates and four ladies were accepted for work during the year, and twelve young men for training. The Chairman of the morning (who is the new President of the Society) acquitted himself well in a sympathetic speech. Bishop Rowley Hill pointed out that the obstacles to the spread of the Gospel now are virtually the same as in primitive times, and the same Holy Ghost power is needed. He commented on the disgrace of "Christian" England spending 120 millions on drink, and one million on foreign missions. Canon Westcott, as a Cambridge man, rejoiced at the growth of missionary zeal in that University. Prof. Monier Williams once more vindicated the immeasurable superiority of the Bible over all the so-called sacred books of the East. Christianity, he contended, must not be watered down to suit the tastes of Hindu or Mohammedan.

At the evening meeting the Dean of Windsor, who presided, drew a glowing picture of the time when the heathen all over the world would be formed into "national Churches"—(a picture never likely to be realised, and not one to be desired, judging from the history of national Churches in the past). Rev. E. A. Stuart urged that the work of missions should be made the life-work of the whole Church of Christ. Rev. H. Williams, of Krishnagar, was more hopeful of Mohammedans than some others we have heard speak of them; he believed they would become Christians long before the Hindoos. Rev. R. P. Ashe told some very touching facts about the devotion of the converts and martyrs in Central Africa. He dilated in gunpowder. He hoped that the Christian good feeling of England and Germany would succeed in keeping the drink curse at a distance. Rev. James Johnson, of Lagos, expressed a good deal of alarm at the spread of Mohammedanism in that part of Africa; and Mrs. Sorabji concluded the speaking with a fervent appeal on behalf of her sisters imprisoned in the Indian Zenanas.

BIBLE CHRISTIAN MISSIONS.

(Exeter Lower Hall, May 3.)

The Bible Christians, a branch of the Methodist body, are not a very large community, and their anniversary was not overflowing in numbers. The report stated that 120 missionaries, and 760 local preachers represent its working force at home, in Canada, Australia, New Zealand, and China. It may be remembered that several workers have lately gone to China under the wing of the Inland Mission. Mr. F. T. Gammon (chairman) rejoiced that so many sons of missionaries are following in the footsteps of their fathers. Rev. Dr. Clifford made an eloquent plea for missions, and spoke of the great good in world-wide evangelisation, done by the printing press. Dr. T. B. Stephenson also recited many encouraging facts connected with mission work, that he had met with in visiting different parts of the world.

WESLEYAN MISSIONS

(Exeter Hall, May 2: Sir C. Warren, Chairman.)

The great blot in the report of this Society was a deficit of over £10,000. With multiplying calls from almost every quarter of the globe this is discouraging, and indicates a leakage of missionary interest somewhere. Sir Charles Warren could speak from varied experience abroad, and he had many things to say in favour of missionary operations. One tribute was pleasant to hear—that missionary work is so well done in many parts of the world where he had been, that he was quite unable to tell to what Church the workers belonged. On the other hand, he made serious charges as to the cupidity of white traders, and said that on many points he would rather believe the word of a native than a European.

Among the other speeches were two excellent ones, full of stimulating facts, from Rev. Owen Watkins (Transvaal) and Rev. G. M. Cobban (India). Mr. Watkins said that in the Transvaal and at Pretoria it was no uncommon thing for a man on his way back from South African towns to tarry at the Missionary Station for three or four months in order to be instructed in the things of God and learn to read the Bible. These men disappear into the darkness, but carry the light with them and publish among their neighbours the good news of salvation. He told of an old chief, who, though not a professed Christian, would have two local preachers with him as "court chaplains." At one place in the region of the Elephant river, Mr. Watkins said the whole tribe turned out to welcome him, and he found a church with over a hundred members the result of the labours of a man sent out by no society, but sent of God. The one trouble now is that there are so many open doors into which they could not enter for want of men and means. At the close of an interesting speech about India, Mr. Cobban said tha if they could not get the men and the money from England, they must go to other continent and make their appeal. We must have Indi brought to the feet of Jesus, if possible, withi our lifetime; for, if we do not give India Christianity, India will give us chaos. China wa represented by Dr. Wenyon, medical missionary who told how this special work is breaking dow prejudice and paving the way for a greater influ of Gospel light and power.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

(Exeter Hall, May 4: General Booth, Chairman.)

As is usual whenever the Salvation Army is the attraction, Exeter Hall overflowed on Wednesday evening, May 4, with an enthusiastic audience.

General Booth was in command, and struck the keynote perhaps as much in his opening prayer as in his speech, by asking for special blessing to rest on the subscribers. But his breadth of sympathy shone forth as he also prayed for all sorts and conditions of men, from the "Skeleton Army" to members of Parliament. The report which followed occupied an hour and a quarter, and the frequent applause which it called forth showed that it was not wearisome. In fact it is impossible to convey a fair idea of the amount of work which the Salvationists undertake, and, by God's help, accomplish, in a very limited space of time.

During the year 939 young men and women had gone through the Training Homes, and "graduated at the Salvation Army University." Since January 1000 had sought entrance into it, of whom 120 were accepted. Then the travelling corps in their vans had broken up new ground, and had, besides supporting themselves, sent £218 to headquarters. They visit a village for five, seven, or nine weeks, and the results of these was an addition of 4300 souls to the ranks. Messrs. R. & J. Cory had given one of these vans, and also the Iona, the first vessel of the "Salvation Navy." The latter gift had unfortunately been lost, but the generous donors presented a second, "and," added the General, "we're open to receive several more."

But perhaps the most Christ-like service of all is rendered by the two branches designated "Slum-work" and "Rescue-work;" of these we cannot speak too highly. Those engaged in the former go and live amongst the poor and destitute, wash the babies, help the mothers with their work, and by innumerable acts of kindness win the hearts of parents and children, and thus gain an entrance for the Word of Life. In the rescue-work fifty godly women are engaged, who with clear heads and large hearts

> Weep o'er the erring ones,
> Lift up the fallen,
> And tell them of Jesus the Mighty to save.

In this manner no less than 1085 women had passed through the eleven Homes during the last two years. Of these 157 had proved unsatisfactory, but 613 are known to be doing well, whilst 75 had been passed on to other Homes. When we think how much restored peace and joy these figures represent, we cannot but thank God for the blessing which He has caused to rest upon this sphere of labour. India now has 14 corps with 114 officers. A gentleman had sent £5000 for "Colonel" Tucker's work in India, and another £1000 for English work. There had been a large increase of officers and corps in Australia, and the Government had sent another donation of £500. In Africa there were 44 corps with 110 officers. Last year the Salvation Army had 3614 officers; now there were 5037—an increase of 1420. Everywhere the Army was advancing.

Such was the burden of the General's note of praise, and he called upon his hearers then to echo that sentiment by a very liberal collection.

We can only mention in passing the three Indian converts present, who sang a hymn in their own language; the young lady of position, attired in Italian costume, who had given herself to work amongst members of that community in a building uneuphoniously termed "the cowshed;" and the fluent address of the Singalese, who described the early experiences of forty Salvationists whom he accompanied to Ceylon, where they have settled as missionaries, wearing native dress, eating native food, and even staining their skin, that they may the more easily win access to their tawny brethren.

Mrs. Booth answered the question, "Does the work last?" by showing that the Army exhibited all the elements of perpetuity, such as abundance of life, and favourable conditions of growth. The Army, she said, was "a big bouncing baby, full of life and vitality," and these qualities were themselves promises of longevity. "Salvation soldiers were not made, but born." Then the conditions of its life were equally favourable. Plenty of food and air are indispensable to life, and by the Word of God and free influence of the Holy Spirit, the Army grows in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. This very earnest and practical address was followed by words of encouragement from Messrs. Richard Cory and T. A. Denny, whose firm friendship for the Army was once more put to the test by the needs of the exchequer, but it stood the test right well.

MISSIONS TO SEAMEN.

(Willis's Rooms, May 5: Bishop of Exeter, Chairman.)

The report told that many more devout officers and seamen of the merchant navy than in previous years had taken an active part in promoting godly living amongst their comrades when at sea. Nearly 10,000 seamen, fishermen and bargemen had taken the pledge of total abstinence. Over 9000 outward-bound ships and fishing vessels carried with them to sea libraries or bags of useful reading for their crews. The heavy gales of last winter made mission work on board the ships in the twelve outer roadsteads unusually hazardous. The crews welcomed the visits paid day by day to their ships, and gladly attended services, bought Bibles, accepted bags of books, &c. The fishing fleets on the east coasts of England and Ireland have received special attention.

Clergymen connected with the Missions to Seamen from Hull, Lowestoft, Southampton, and the Bristol Channel, described mission work amongst seamen and fishermen, whilst H.M.'s Consul in Japan eulogised the Society's work at Yokohama and Hong Kong, and Admiral Field, M.P., spoke of what was done amongst men-of-war's men and Royal Marines in the Queen's ships.

CHURCH PAROCHIAL MISSION.

(Prince's Hall, W., May 4: Bishop of Exeter, Chairman.)

With its large staff of experienced missionaries this is now a very important part of the machinery of the Episcopal Church, and splendid work it does in its special sphere. Rev. S. D. Fox, secretary, was able to report that nearly two hundred Gospel missions had been held during the year. That represents a great amount of honest, earnest evangelising, and, though no man can count up the converts, they must be many. It was stated that the work of the Society is to extend to India during the coming cold season, and that Mr. George Clarke is to work in connection with the Mission for the last three months of the year.

Bishop Bickersteth truly said that the most earnest and faithful pastor will feel the most strongly the need of occasional special efforts, in order to reach those on whom the ordinary services seem to have no effect. He could speak from personal experience of the blessings that attend these missions in the conversion of souls. Every diocese ought to have a special missioner attached to it. Archdeacon Lefroy said it was a great problem how to reach "the classes" as well as "the masses," and these special seasons of effort in the churches would do something towards that. Mr. Eugene Stock referred to the connection between home effort and foreign missions, and said he was glad to receive a letter from Rev. W. H. Aitken, stating that he was to preach a missionary sermon in connection with one of his missions. It should be impressed on converts, at the close of every mission, that Christ's commission to evangelise the world still holds good. Rev. G. Weldon bore further testimony to the work, and Rev. J. Johnson, of Lagos, expressed his indebtedness to Rev. W. Haslam's book, "From Death into Life." Mr. Haslam also spoke briefly.

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE LEAGUE.

(Exeter Hall, May 2: Bishop Temple, Chairman.)

Mr. Robert Rae's report was a cheering one Special note was made of the Colonial Congress; of the progress of Miss Weston's work in the navy, and the spread of the movement among soldiers in India, where the army has over 12,000 abstainers. But, after all, much remains to be done, and progress in the past is only an added incentive to future effort.

Bishop Temple spoke with becoming seriousness of the disgrace attaching to the fact that, wherever the British flag goes, the blighting curse of intemperance goes with it, corrupting not only our soldiers but the native races. We must continue, said his Grace, to make perpetual war upon this terrible evil. Rev. Peter Thompson, of St. George's in the East, enthusiastically expounded his creed, which he declared to be, total abstinence for the individual, prohibition for the State, every Christian man with clean hands and clean money, and every Christian church with a clean communion table. The venerable Mr. Thos. Whittaker said that the temperance movement had shed such a light as all the brewers, and malsters, and dabblers in strong drink could never put out. Miss Weston reported that one-sixth of the men in the British Navy are now abstainers. Rev. J. Gelson Gregson said it had been amply proved in India that the teetotal soldier was superior physically and morally to his drinking comrade. Canon Fleming and Mr. John Taylor added their quota of advocacy, and the large assembly were dismissed better equipped than ever with facts and arguments for a battle which will need to be waged for many a year.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL UNION.

(Exeter Hall, May 5: Mr. G. Williams, Chairman.)

It was very delightful to be told in the report of this Society that during the bygone year nearly 15,000 children from the affiliated Sunday schools had been enrolled in the membership of the Christian Church. A cordial word was said in favour of special evangelistic efforts like those of Messrs. Moody and Sankey, Mr. Hammond, and the Children's Special Service Mission.

In his presidential address Mr. Williams referred with rejoicing to the extension of the work among children on the Continent; he also highly commended the agencies for the spiritual and intellectual advancement of the teachers. Dr. Stevenson, of Brixton, enlarged with great force on the importance of carefully moulding aright the thought and belief of the young in their plastic and impressionable years. The great end of teaching and of life itself, is to form true characters, and this is what the Sunday-school teacher should aim at. A weighty and valuable utterance on home influence followed from Dr. J. Vincent, of America. Alas, there are thousands of children who have no home worthy of the name, and for these the Sunday-school should provide a spiritual home. Dr. Vincent thinks that attendance at Sunday-school, by children of the well-to-do classes, is much more prevalent in America than in this country, and he hinted that missionaries should be sent to these neglectful parents. He also urged that the teaching should not only be sound in matter but attractive in method. The subject allotted to Rev. Hugh Price Hughes was "Our Elder Scholars." He was strongly of opinion that if these are to be retained, the Churches must go forward and invent new means of utilising the week evenings as well as the Sunday, in the great work of interesting and instructing our youths. He declared it to be a monstrous thing for our costly churches to be closed nearly all the week—especially with the public-house temptations ever at hand.

Various interesting conferences were held in connection with the Union at the headquarters, in Old Bailey, and a sermon on Bible study was delivered by Dr. Vincent, in the City Temple.

THE CHURCH ARMY.

(Princes Hall, W., May 5: Bishop of Rochester, Chairman.)

These "uhlans" of the Established Church are still fighting their way to general approval, if we may judge from the cautious remarks of the Chairman at the annual meeting. His lordship himself recognises the need of such an agency, but surely he stopped short of the mark when, speaking of his diocese of South London, with its population of half a million, he did not even hint at the existence of any Gospel agency outside his own denomination. The Bishop was justly severe on those who are so careful in avoiding mistakes that they make the greatest mistake of doing nothing at all. He knew of some good, saintly clergymen who, if they had to stand up on a chair and speak to working men for five minutes without a manuscript, would almost faint. The Church Army furnishes men who can talk to their fellows in their own language and from their own standpoint. His Lordship faithfully admonished the Army officers to eschew irreverence and eccentricity, and anything that would hinder their labours being acceptable to the people.

A perfect stream of testimony followed from clergymen and others, who have experienced in their own parishes the value of the Army's operations. Rev. Evan Hopkins, of Richmond, said the reason why some of the clergy complain of the work of the Army as a failure is because they coldly look on from the outside. It is of no use going in for Army work unless one is in dead earnest. Several of the Army officers spoke, as did also Rev. W. Carlile, the leader of the work, and Rev. F. S. Webster, Principal of the Training Home.

THAMES CHURCH MISSION.

(Willis's Rooms, May 4: Bishop of London, Chairman.)

There was a good muster of friends at this meeting, and if all the absent friends had imitated the example of one, who sent a cheque for £500, they would not have been so much missed. The work of the Society extends, we believe, from Putney to Gravesend, and a good work it is, as Rev. Henry Bloomer's report showed. Over 30,000 craft of various kinds have been visited during the year, and the services have been attended by more than 142,000 persons. There has, in short, been progress all along the river line.

The Chairman said we might be apt to think that the river was a sort of no man's territory, and it was therefore in danger of being neglected. It was, however, of the deepest importance to bring our sailors, with their frank, impressionable natures, under the power of the Gospel. Rev. H. Brenan, of Grays, urged that the Mission should be specially supported by all friends of foreign missions, by reason of the influence that our seamen have for good or evil in all parts of the world. He rejoiced that the pure and simple Gospel was presented by the workers, and that so much prominence was given to temperance effort. After Rev. C. Houlston came Rev. E. A. Stuart, who dilated on a point previously mentioned—the influence of our sailors when away from home. He said the native Maoris had learned from English sailors to curse God, and the Arab boy at Suez might be heard using English oaths learnt from the lips of English seamen. The Christian public, like Jonah, had been too long asleep to the claims of those who go down to the sea in ships, and it was high time to awake and grapple with the work. Prebendary Billing spoke of the value of the Society's work in reaching emigrants who are leaving our shores.

It is a truly excellent work that the Society is doing, but we demur to the Bishop of London's suggestion that nothing is being done for the spiritual good of our seamen, except through the Thames Church Mission. There are many other agencies at work in seeking to reach the thousands of souls always afloat in the port of London; but there is more than enough for all to do.

MORAVIAN MISSIONS.

(Exeter Hall, May 6: Lord Radstock, Chairman.)

The report, read by Rev. J. Henry, contained most encouraging statements concerning the work in Greenland and many other stations. A great work of grace has been going on amongst an Indian congregation at New Fairfield, in Canada, where many Indians have professed to have received Christ.

The Chairman referred especially to the unsparing devotedness of life of the Moravian missionaries, some of whom allowed themselves to be sold as slaves that they might preach to slaves, and went to live amongst lepers that they might tell them of Christ. He was much impressed with the mention of Thibet, for a long time the only fortress not attacked. Now the Moravian brethren have a mission in Little Thibet. One in every sixty of the Moravian brethren is a missionary; if each congregation in this country supplied but one, there would be now 40,000 missionaries in the field.

Rev. B. La Trobe said that lately three volunteers were required—two to nurse the lepers in the hospital at Jerusalem. About twenty offered, and of these there were nine from Germany and three from England. Mr. R. N. Cust said there is no Society which, like the Moravians, has missionaries in all quarters of the world, and that, not amongst the educated, but amongst the most degraded peoples. Their missionaries, too, labour with their own hands wherever they go, and a great part of their income is derived from internal sources. As an open door to which not even the Moravian Church has yet gone, he pointed to the bushmen of Australia. The Moravian Church could do this work as could no other, but there is no time to be lost, for the natives are very rapidly dying out. Rev. S. Hutchinson, Dr. Drury, and Mr. Lydall also briefly spoke.

BRITISH & FOREIGN BIBLE SOCIETY.

(Exeter Hall, May 4: Lord Harrowby, Chairman)

The report furnished, of this great Society, appeared to have as much reference to the Jubilee as to the work of the year. During that period some four million Bibles, Testaments, and portions were issued at an expenditure of £231,000. The chairman lamented the fact that his predecessor in the presidency of the Society (Lord Shaftesbury) had not lived to testify from that platform to the triumphs of Bible distribution during the last half century. His lordship rejoices in the fact that nineteen-twentieths of the books issued are sold at their proper value, and not given away. This, of course, is well enough where people are able and willing to buy; but it is not probable that the Scriptures will find its way into every household in Christendom without much free giving. Not everybody who buys a Bible sets great value on its teachings, and many who receive it gratis do. The chairman was on strong ground when he said that, notwithstanding all the attacks of critics, the Book of books holds a higher place than ever in the minds of those who have followed its teachings. We wish we could believe that he was also right in the statement that the working classes generally are showing an increased interest in it.

An Archbishop, two Bishops, two missionaries, and two home pastors make a strong platform of speakers. The Archbishop of Canterbury commented with satisfaction on the growing readiness in Roman Catholic and other non-Protestant countries to further the circulation of the Scriptures, and also pointed out the vast regions of China and Japan as fields for the development of the Society's work. Dr. Young, President of the Wesleyan Conference, in the name of that section of the Church, expressed thanks for help rendered by the Society. He urged a more assiduous and devout personal study of the Bible, as well as larger distribution. Bishop Moorhouse verged on somewhat delicate ground, when he asserted that the prevailing infidelity was largely due to those Bibliolaters who thought the Bible was the sum of all kinds of knowledge, scientific as well as religious. His Grace's idea is that the Bible records a gradual unveiling of mystery, until at last the Son of God entirely withdrew the veil. Bishop Parry, of Sydney, rejoiced to believe that, notwithstanding variety and divergency of interpretation, there is substantial agreement in the Church of Christ on all the fundamental verities of the faith. Rev. E. Bryant, agent for the Society in China, spoke of that country as a gigantic field of operation, and of the importance of its work in furthering evangelistic effort. Rev. Theodore Monod related something of what is being done by colporteurs and others in France in circulating the Scriptures, and pressed home the truth that the Bible was not only inspired of old, but is still a living Book, a channel for the working of the Spirit of God. Rev. S. Macfarlane, of New Guinea, contented himself with thanking the Society for its aid.

YOUNG ABSTAINERS' UNION.

(Exeter Hall, May 7: Mr. S. A. Blackwood, Chairman.)

The seventh annual report shows that this Union, which now numbers over 8000 members, has done much in removing ignorance as to alcohol being necessary to health. One case was mentioned in which a Band of Hope has been started in a village by three lads, who were formerly members of the Union, and another in which a whole family had become total abstainers through the little ones joining. Seven new branches have been this year started. One of these is at Bathurst, N.S.W., and another at Foochow, both having been formed by young people who had left London branches.

The Chairman impressed upon all that this is a work for eternity; and temperance work he counted as second only to Gospel work. An Egyptian, a slave rescued by General Gordon, gave an animated address, dealing chiefly with the horrors of slavery, of which he has had such bitter experience. The power of influence was vividly portrayed in the addresses of Mrs. Aukland and Mrs. Reaney. The former said that such associations would doubtless prove the nurseries in which many a Livingstone, and Williams, and Elizabeth Fry would be trained. Mrs. Reaney gave some illustrations of what can be effected by personal effort, which manifestly impressed the large audience.

RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY.

(Exeter Hall, May 6: Sir F. Buxton, Chairman.)

Like its neighbour, the Bible Society, this is a great trade organisation, and also a helper, by free grants, of all evangelising agencies. The trade receipts for the past year have shown a considerable falling off, but nevertheless the Society could from that source supplement the contributions to the tune of £18,000 and more, besides paying all expenses. An immense quantity of good literature has thus been scattered broadcast, through innumerable channels. The new issues for the year were 665, including 167 tracts: "Leaves for Leisure Moments" is the name of a new series. As usual the Society has done much in providing copies of the Scriptures for prizes.

There seemed to us to be on the whole a lack of substance in the speeches, but we recognise the great difficulty of saying anything fresh on such a subject. The Chairman remarked on the fact of this being a universally reading age; the great question is, What are the people to read? The Society supplies an ample answer. Rev. E. A. Stuart said he had been struck, in attending the anniversaries of many societies, to find that the R.T.S. is a friend to them all. He praised their tracts, as being both orthodox and gently persuasive in tone. This led him to administer a hard rap to certain religious papers—"penny spitefuls" he called them. He closed effectively by relating the story of his own conversion, brought about by an unknown friend handing him a tract in a railway carriage (which he declined), and by the parting remark, "Young man, remember you have a soul." Dr. Vincent eloquently pleaded for wisdom in Christian service, and adaptation to the state of those we seek to benefit. The Doctor is a good actor, but much of his vigorous speech seemed a little wide of the mark; at its close, a fellow reporter observed, "Pity he didn't mention the Tract Society!" Rev. J. Chalmers, the sturdy Scot from New Guinea, gave some interesting leaves from his missionary experiences, and hoped that when the people among whom he labours are somewhat further advanced, the Tract Society would help by grants. One very good incident he told: A prayer-meeting was held one evening in Raratonga about sending Christian teachers to New Guinea. Just at that time he had transferred to his native paper some details of the Franco-Prussian war. At the meeting a chief, who had read of the war, said that instead of sending teachers to New Guinea he thought they should send some to France and Prussia! In a brief closing address Mr. Eugene Stock commended the work of the Society.

POOR FRENCH IN LONDON.

THE work of evangelisation which for twenty years M. Barbier has carried on amongst his poor countrymen in this metropolis is one the importance of which is very great. As is pointed out in the report lately issued, very few of the French people here either possess a copy of the Bible or know anything of the Gospel. In various ways it is sought to reach this large community, and of these, M. Barbier says, open-air preaching, which is carried on in Hyde Park, is of the utmost value. Several converted by the Word heard there are now regular attendants at the services held at the Chapelle Evangelique in Portland-street, Wardour-street, Soho. The Sunday-school held here has an attendance of sixty children, and the day-school, where the Bible is not excluded, has been so successful that the premises are becoming too small. A reading-room and literary institution, with a Home for governesses and others, as well as a registration agency, are valuable aids to the efficiency of a mission which for so many years has done a most gracious work.

M. Barbier's address is 11, Portland-street, Wardour-street, Soho, W.C.

HOME FOR DESTITUTE BOYS, MUSSELBURGH.—The annual sale of work on behalf of this Home will take place on November 4 and 5. Contributions will be thankfully received by Mrs. Logan, 26, East Claremont-street, Edinburgh.

Y.W.C.A. HOME for Young Women in Business, Pyrland-road, Highbury, N.—With heartfelt thankfulness we record that it has become necessary to take the next house, No. 41, and, by turning it into our present one, we are able to double the number of boarders, and to assemble as many as one hundred young women in the evenings to Bible-classes and meetings. Last Monday we celebrated our fourth anniversary by holding a service in the afternoon, dedicating the enlarged premises to God, and in the evening a meeting of our members, when ninety-two were present. The extension of this much-needed work has entailed expenses which the young women themselves can do but little to meet. The work can be still further extended as means are provided, as many applications for admission into the Home have even now to be refused. E. LANCASTER, Hon. Supt.

CHRISTIAN WORK IN EGYPT.—In connection with evangelical work of the Egyptian Presbytery, which recently held its twenty-eighth annual meeting, it is gratifying to state that there are sixty-five schools, including a training college, and boys and girls' boarding and day schools. In these schools there are over 5000 native pupils. Some of them are in the low Arab quarters, and waifs and strays are daily gathered in and taught the Scriptures by devoted young Christian women. The American missionaries have opened a hospital some distance up the Nile, and are doing a good work in Cairo, which, however, is not confined to the natives. Temperance work is carried on every Saturday evening, and there is a united prayer meeting on Thursday evenings besides the usual services on Sundays. There are also four Women's Missionary Societies, with a membership of over two hundred, and book and colportage work has long been established

EVANGELISATION SOCIETY.

THE report of this important Society is one that will be read with deep thankfulness of heart for the wonderful way in which God has made good his promise that his word shall not return unto Him void, and for the many who have been brought to Christ from the very lowest classes. The Society, which has now entered upon its twentieth year of work, last year held about twenty thousand meetings, the attendances at which, at a very low estimate, were about three millions. These meetings have been held in about 1100 places, in all parts of the United Kingdom—in the thickly-populated centres, in many a hamlet and village, where "every prospect pleases, and only man is vile," in more than one hundred places north of the Tweed, and amongst the inhabitants of the Shetland and Orkney Islands.

Tent missions form a very important feature of the work, and it is through these, for the most part, that country districts are reached, as they could be indeed in no other way. Last year, by means of forty-six tents, 162 different places were visited, and there were many dark spots brightened by the glorious Gospel light. Several pages are occupied with letters from ministers and others, who tell of the blessing that God has been pleased to bestow on the preaching of the evangelists, and of hundreds now living good and useful lives who before were sitting in darkness and in the shadow of death, as well as of peace, joy, and gladness brought to many hearts and homes in which these priceless blessings had never before been enjoyed or known.

The work in Scotland is of comparatively recent date, and it is only during the last three winters that the distant Shetland Islands have been visited by the agents of the Society; but nothing is more encouraging than the intense gratitude which these poor people display for the labours of the missionaries, and the liberality with which they give of their little to help the cause. "This appreciation," Rev. L. Williamson, of Reawick, Shetland, writes, "is abundantly testified by the people coming out night after night, often through darkness and storm, many of them crossing miles and miles of moss and heath and bog to be present at the services." Dr. Andrew Bonar, Rev. John Mackay, and other ministers also speak highly of the work done by the evangelists sent forth by the Society. The various incidents recorded make the report one of unusual interest.

It might be well to add, though this is generally known, that the country is not the only sphere of the Society's operations, 157 places in the Metropolitan district having been supplied with preachers during the year. The Society's office is at 21, Surrey-street, Strand; and Capt. Wm. E. Smith is the hon. secretary.

A TOKEN OF GOOD-WILL of a very thoughtful and sympathethic nature has just come from New Zealand to the British metropolis. A sum of money, amounting to £51, has been received by the Lord Mayor on behalf of the fund for providing poor children with dinners. This has been collected in schools in New Zealand for this purpose. The Lord Mayor has had the pleasure of handing the amount to the London School Board, to be spent according to the desire of the donors.

TRAINING FOR DOMESTIC WORK.—In that interesting little quarterly, Little Women, we learn that a training centre has been opened at 41, Wigmore-street, Cavendish-square, for the development of the system of training young people in domestic work, with which the name of Miss Headdon is inseparably connected. Arrangements will be made for girls and teachers to attend classes at this centre, and others, it is hoped, will soon be opened in different parts of the country, each working upon its own lines, under this central organisation. One will be formed in Gloucestershire, where middle-class girls from seven to fourteen years of age will receive a good English education, and be trained to gain their livelihood as teachers of this system, or as domestic workers. Miss Headdon's system is taught in three standards, the first adapted to the instruction even of infants. The great object in view is well worthy of support.

MR. HASLAM IN KENSINGTON.

A TEN days' mission has been concluded at St. Mary's Church, West Kensington, by Rev. W. Haslam. This honoured and veteran representative of the Parochial Mission Society pleaded his Master's cause with great unction and fervency, and with manifest tokens of the Divine blessing. The interest continued to deepen, and though the large church in question can accommodate 1700 persons when well packed, many were unable to obtain admission on the evening of the second Sunday.

Mrs. Haslam's Bible-class for ladies was a great success, the parochial hall proving too small to accommodate those who wished to attend. Upon this the vicar, Rev. H. J. Alcock, placed the church at her disposal. Many written thanksgivings for benefits received were sent in.

THE GOSPEL IN SPAIN.

PASTOR Segundo Sabio del Valle has issued a very interesting report of work in connection with the Free Protestant Church at Saragossa. A Sunday afternoon meeting for youths is held, at which, after a Bible exposition by the pastor, portions of Scripture are learnt. Meetings in private houses are held on two evenings in the week, and these are sometimes attended by forty persons. Those who have become Protestants are emboldened to stand forth and make confession of their faith amongst their neighbours. There is a school connected with the Mission, and much help is given to the sick.

Through the generosity of some English friends the pastor was enabled, on one of the great feast days, to distribute gratuitously 350 New Testaments, and the way in which these were received shows that there is here a very considerable feeling in favour of the Gospel. Five new members were admitted during the year, "and several more," the report says, "will be received shortly. Others, alas! are hindered by the fear of persecution," from which even the sick and dying are not exempt at the hands of the priests and nuns. The pastor's address is, Saragossa, Spain.

Y.W.C.A., WESTGATE-ON-SEA.—This branch of the Y.W.C.A. was started in July, 1886; but the members have not as yet a suitable room for their own use, therefore the work is hindered. We earnestly ask for prayer and sympathy. Visitors to Westgate-on-Sea will be welcome at the meetings. EDITH ALLEN, Hon. Sec.

9, Adrian-square, Westgate-on-Sea.

METROPOLITAN RAILWAY MEN.—Much blessing was given at our annual tea; nearly seven hundred were present. After a bountiful repast, addresses were given by Rev. W. R. Mowll, Mr. Stoney, General Anderson, and Dr. Schofield and were listened to with great attention. Mr. Mowll seemed to make a deep impression, and we believe many realised their sinnership that night. We are full of praise to God for putting it into the hearts of the company to build an iron room for mission work amongst their employés; we trust it may be the birth-place of many a soul. I will gladly give any information about the work, or names and addresses of men still unsupplied with monthly packets. (MISS) E. JACKSON.

21, Stanley-gardens, London, W.

ENGLISH PRESBYTERIAN SYNOD.—The discussion on the state of religion, says The British Weekly, was on the whole encouraging. One of the best speeches was made by Mr. Lundie, of Liverpool, who said that the children of the working classes were found to a large extent absent from the ordinary Church services. He considered that the Churches were doing a very foolish thing in allowing hundreds of youths, who should become members of their churches in the future, to lapse under their eyes. Mr. Bruce spoke hopefully, and said that at no time in the history of their Church was more evangelistic work being done. Good progress was reported in Jewish missions. The medical missionary at Rabat has entered on his work under encouraging circumstances. Foreign missions attract great, and, happily, increasing interest in the Presbyterian Church, and their mission in China is in a most satisfactory state. Mr. Hugh M. Matheson congratulated the Synod on their mission in China having attained a membership not reached by any other Protestant Church in that country.

CENTRAL AFRICA.

Our knowledge of this vast region is comparatively recent; five-and-thirty years ago Central Africa was thought to be a desert land, and our maps were almost a blank. The peculiar form God has given to this continent has added to the difficulty of its being explored. In other continents, access to the interior is easy through the great rivers, but in Africa, owing to its "inverted-dish" shape, cataracts are found near the mouths of the rivers, and vessels cannot ascend. Especially is this the case with the Congo. For four hundred years the mouth had been known, but only in 1877, when Stanley, crossing Lake Tanganyika from the east, hit upon and descended that river, was its great extent understood. Through the discoveries of other travellers also, especially Livingstone, we have now some idea of the great features of the interior, but that is all. Enormous lakes, very many rivers, and mountainous ranges have been found out, and each year adds to our knowledge.

This beautiful land is also now known to be peopled by numerous tribes, whose languages or dialects may be reckoned by the hundred. It has long been the "slave-ground of the world," though the slave-traders' traffic was only pursued near the coast. To procure these slaves, constant wars were encouraged among the tribes, and though the traffic in slaves is now carried on with greater difficulty, tribal wars are still very constant. For centuries the chief traders have been Arabs from Zanzibar on the east, and Portuguese from both coasts; and cloth, beads, weapons, and spirits have been exchanged for slaves and ivory; but this trade has, of course, only injured the poor Africans, and there has been scarce a thought of benefiting them.

Now, through God's mercy, a better day has dawned upon Africa. While European governments have been seeking to appropriate large portions of "the dark continent," missionary efforts in South Central Africa have multiplied on all sides. The Congo is being especially made a highway for missionary societies, and already two American and an English one are working there. Several steamers, carried in pieces past the cataracts and then put together, now proceed up this river and its branches, which form a waterway of thousands of miles. Some of the large missionary societies have sought to establish themselves by the great lakes. The "C. M. S." have aimed at Victoria Nyanza, the "L. M. S." at Lake Tanganyika, but not without serious losses from fever in crossing from the east coast, and in one case, that of the Church of England bishop, Hannington, a valuable life was lost by cruel murder, and perhaps two hundred native converts have since been killed. The tribes in the south centre, however, appear to receive Europeans well, especially where Livingstone was known.

THE GARENGANZE COUNTRY.

But we must now say a little about the part most interesting to many of our readers. On our map, Lake Bangweolo looks very small, but if we think of any two towns 150 miles apart, we may form some idea of the length of this lake, its breadth being about 50 miles. We specially point out this lake (discovered by Livingstone in 1868, and on the southern shore of which he died in 1873), because about 100 miles to the west of it is the Garenganze capital, Mukurru, which our brother Arnot reached early in 1886. His toilsome journeys from Natal to the Zambesi, and thence to Benguella, are known to many by the little books which give a brief account of them, and particulars, so far as we have received them, of the journey from Benguella, which occupied him in 1885, are fresh in the minds of our readers. But this long and tedious route from the west coast (taking six months at least) will we hope give place to a shorter one from the south-east coast. Since 1875 the Free Church of Scotland has had missionaries at Lake Nyassa, and through the efforts of the African Lakes Company, the journey from Quilimane, on the coast, to Lake Nyassa is being made more and more easy, so that now the passage from London to Bandawe can be accomplished in about fifty days by steamers, the only land-travelling being seventy miles viâ Blantyre (Church of Scotland station), past the falls of the river Shiré, which flows from the Nyassa into the Zambesi. The African Lakes Company seeks to work in harmony with missionary societies, and to put down the slave trade and wars by establishing lawful commerce, avoiding also the debasing rum-traffic. They have succeeded in making a road from Lake Nyassa to Lake Tanganyika (the Stevenson road), and have not only transported steamers (in pieces) past the Shiré falls to Nayassa, but even along this new road from Nyassa to Tanganyika. By the adoption of this new route the great loss of life caused among the members of the L. M. S. by the trying overland journey from Zanzibar to Tanganyika is much diminished. Most thankful, indeed, should we be if a route is opened up by this company from Bandawe to Garenganze. As yet, only some 70 miles have been traversed westward from Bandawe, but Livingstone went over part of the district, and we trust that communications may soon be established. On Lake Bangweolo, Livingstone found large canoes in use (40 ft. by 4 ft.), and visited two out of the six islands; they contain many inhabitants. If the lake could be crossed by boat, 150 miles land journey would be saved from Garenganze, and only about 350 would remain instead of the 1000 miles (as the crow flies) from Benguella to Garenganze. The best time for travelling is probably the dry and cool season from May to November. During the wet season, Bangweolo overflows its southern and eastern shores for many miles, and the natives then resort to the higher grounds, which form islands during this season.

Lake Nyassa is 1000 feet above the level of the sea, Lake Bangweolo much higher, 3688 feet, and Garenganze is evidently far higher, according to our brother Arnot's description, and we might expect, from its lying so near the very sources of the Congo.

While the low African coast is often very unhealthy, we believe that the elevated land of the Garenganze, when once reached, would prove comparatively healthy for Europeans. It only remains for us to add that though, in the providence of God, an opening has been made by our brother Arnot to a most needy part of Central Africa, many more true labourers will be required if it is to be duly occupied. Anyone having a knowledge of languages and a taste for them would find useful employment in reducing the native languages to writing, and in translating the Scriptures, which would then require to be printed. Medical knowledge would also be a valuable addition.

We had written thus far when the Benguella mail, to our great joy, brought us further tidings from our brother Arnot, up to a comparatively recent date. We give extracts from letters to ourselves, but in order to make room for communications from other labourers we purpose publishing separately his diary and several letters to friends, which have been kindly placed at our disposal. They extend over a period of six months, and are deeply interesting, giving us some idea of this almost unknown Central African kingdom, and telling of trials in health and circumstances which, while they manifest the grace of God in our dear brother, call for our tender sympathy.

We have not heard from our brother Swan, but know that he left Benguella early in January for Bihé, expecting to meet our brother Arnot's messengers, Ocinyama and Kasoma. They appear, however, to have missed him, taking perhaps another road, and arriving at the coast early in February. About March 6, the steamer conveying our brother Faulknor was expected to reach Benguella, by which time we hope that brother Swan would have returned there, and that in two or three weeks they would set off for the interior, if carriers could be found. But even then a year would elapse from the date of brother Arnot's latest letter (Sept. 17, 1886), before they could reach him.

We purpose sending letters and funds for our brethren both to Bandawe and Benguella, with a view to their getting them either way. Our brother Arnot seems likely to be cast on God for daily bread for a year, owing to the difficulty of communication, but his confidence in God seems steadfast, and He will not fail him.—Echoes of Service.

CASUALS AT GRAY'S YARD.

The number of homeless poor in our great city is very large, and on account of the depression in trade, is continually being augmented by relays from the country, for hundreds flock to London in the vain hope that here at least work is to be found. Only lately, three men, who had never been to Gray's Yard before, said they had just come up from Glasgow, Edinburgh, and Newcastle respectively. Fourpence a night will provide them with a bed in a common lodging-house, but not having enough for this many of them are obliged to walk the streets night after night, hiding in doorways and under archways, or as a last resource taking shelter in a casual ward. Anything is, however, preferable to this, and they have often been heard to say how greatly the comforts of prison life exceed those of the casual ward or the workhouse itself.

It is the custom at Gray's Yard after short Gospel services, to distribute bread and hot tea or coffee, during which time opportunity is afforded to the friends present to enter into conversation with the casuals, and thus many have been reached. The workers are continually encouraged in the work by seeing these poor outcasts brought to the feet of Jesus. At the evening meetings for the past few weeks, there have been several respectable, well-dressed men present, who were brought to the knowledge of the Lord at Gray's Yard. They are now in good employment, and two of them have several times contributed some of their earnings to the work. One of them said, he had gained so much himself that he must do something—adding, "you must let me give it for if I were not living with the Lord, I should be spending more than that in drink or something else."

The work has for some years increased to such an extent, that on several occasions a large number of these poor outcasts have had to be sent away for want of space, and there has long been a great need of new premises. A large and airy room is required for such a work, to render the atmosphere at all bearable; but hitherto the audience has been divided, and two or three small and most unsuitable apartments have been from Sunday to Sunday filled to overflowing, so that the workers are obliged to pass several hours in low unventilated rooms, closely packed with hundreds of the lowest and most unwashed of our population in a stifling and almost pestilential atmosphere, from the effects of which many suffer severely.

A freehold has at length been obtained at a cost of £6000, and £2000 more will be required for the erection of suitable premises for this Mission, and the work in connection with it for the poor of the neighbourhood. Until the £6000 have been raised it has been thought advisable not to commence the building.

The following six gentlemen have very kindly identified themselves with this scheme and given it their support. Messrs. F. A. Bevan, T. A. Denny, E. M. Denny, George Hanbury, Samuel Gurney Sheppard, and Dr. Habershon. The treasurer for the building fund is Dr. Habershon, 70, Brook-street, Grosvenor-square, W.

MIDLAND COUNTIES VIGILANCE ASSOCIATION.—The objects of this Association need scarcely be stated here, being well known to all. Especially it has been established to form a central union of Vigilance Associations in the Midland counties for the purpose of creating and sustaining a healthy public opinion on subjects which all are seeking to promote. A new periodical has now been started as the organ of the Association, in which information concerning its work will from time to time be given. Rev. W. Wastell, 20, Paradise-street, Birmingham, is the secretary.

FAR-ADVANCED CONSUMPTION AT CREWKERNE (SOM.), REPORTED BY REV. CHAS. BARNES.

Mr. Barnes is Curate in the Parish of Crewkerne, and writing me March 26, 1887, he says:—

"I have seen the wonderful effects of your treatment on two persons in this parish.

"The First is Mrs. ——, about 28 years of age. Her doctor, who is a friend of mine, asked me to see her as often as I could, as he considered her departure from this world to be only a question of a few days. She looked like a skeleton.

"As soon as the patient commenced your medicine, it effected a marked and marvellous change. She put on flesh; grew stronger; symptoms abated. And these effects were not evanescent. She passed comfortably through the winter of 1885—6 and this last winter, and during the bitter winds of the last six weeks I have frequently met her out for a walk! Hers has been truly a resurrection."

ALSO A CASE OF COMMENCING PHTHISIS.

"The Second.—I know a family named Pattemore, who have reason to be truly grateful to you. One daughter had been swept off by consumption very rapidly—and immediately another sister (her close companion and fellow-worker) showed signs of the same. She was wasting away; and the doctor said she was going into a consumption like her sister, and would follow her.

"However, your medicine at once began to reinvigorate her. She has passed well through the winter, and this day week Mr. Barnes found her at her work—sewing again!

"I am not one to exaggerate, and I ignore advertised remedies—but since I have had these cases under my eyes, I give the honour where it is due—and under God, it is due to your treatment."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

Letters to the Editor.

CHRISTIAN UNITY.

Dear Sir,—Do you think politically there is a much more important religious question than this? Is it not positively certain that spiritual work and progress must be terribly hampered with so many divisions in the Church? St. John xvii. 21—23 is conclusive to my mind, while such statements as are contained in 1 Cor iii. 1—3 put the matter beyond the shadow of a doubt. Why, if sects and divisions are immaterial, are they so deprecated in the New Testament, and why is Unity of an almost ideal perfection so passionately and powerfully urged? Surely the easiness of a new community, the indifference and false toleration with which divisions are regarded, is quite sufficient to show how little of the mind of Christ and his Apostles exists in the Christian Church.

Some time ago you published in The Christian some excellent papers on "Prayer rather than Conference," and, good as they were, they yet came short of the whole truth. Prayer, why we are deluged with it! How many thousands of prayers go up from our own little place of New Farnley! Is there no efficacy in the tens of thousands of Church and chapel prayers that are offered in the services? But where are the answers? We want something upon which to build our prayers, and that is Christian life. "Ye ask and have not."

I can fancy an Isaiah saying to us, "Hear the word of the Lord. To what purpose is the multitude of your prayers? I am full of them. Bring no more vain petitions. Wash you, make you clean," &c. We have prayer, preaching, conference, Christian literature, in abundance, and yet from all quarters comes the confession of apathy, lukewarmness, inconsistency, and questionable Christianity. Stagnation seems to prevail, and a dead weight of suppression to rest upon the Church. In accounting for this, many causes may be shown, but not the weakest among them is that of Christian Division.

Think of the uncharitableness it means—the conversion of the brother into the enemy, the magnifying of things immaterial or less important, the violence to the unity of the Spirit, above all the carnal mind it betrays, which, according to St. Paul (1 Cor. ii. 14), renders the Christian and the Church under its influence impervious and dead to the things of God. And then ask if it is not inevitable that a low state of spirituality must prevail with the Church of Christ in her present condition.

Is it any wonder that religion is practically so discredited and so powerless in her labours? Comforting as it may be to the Christian, the world cannot understand a true spiritual union of believers, any more than we can read in the armies of the world the great truth of the brotherhood of man. I feel sure myself that as long as our present divisions continue in all their force, circumstance, and accentuation, the Church of Christ will never rise in real religious life and power to anything like the extent of her privilege, let the preachers and the people be never so sincere. The showers must be withheld, because the Church has no ability to receive them, and no capacity to retain them. The Spirit of the Lord is undoubtedly and lamentably straitened. Apart from economic considerations—the waste from overlapping, both in means and energy—Christian unity would be a most powerful agency of conversion and evangelisation.

I do not commend to your readers any scheme, nor terrify them with thoughts of absorption into another Church, but simply invite them to prayer, and to a sympathetic attention to this subject. We are far off yet (in condition) from a united Church, and details can wait. What is wanted first is a quickened conscience, an overwhelming sense of shame that He who came to teach love, to form a brotherhood, and to gather together in Himself one great family of God, has for his followers companies of aliens, without much of the appearance of a family, and by no means noted for habits of love, but effecting rather a religious reproduction of the North American Indians.

God grant that He may soon say of this great and costly stumbling-block, "Who art thou, O great mountain?—thou shalt become a plain."

Believe me, yours very sincerely,

The Parsonage, William Fisher.
New Farnley, Leeds.

THEOLOGICAL TRAINING IN INDIA.

Dear Sir,—With reference to the letter signed "C." in a recent issue, permit me to say that I am aware natives of Hindostan are trained to preach the Gospel to their countrymen; but, when I offered to receive contributions for the required Theological College at Scharumpur, N.W.P., India, I simply meant that in the opinion of many, if India is to be won for Christ, it will be necessary to employ many more native Christian evangelists than hitherto has been done, because they stand the climate, and there is not, of course, any passage money, &c., to be paid on their behalf.

I have been much struck lately with the success vouchsafed to some British Missions in China, where the services of the native preachers are largely made use of; and when I mentioned the need of a theological college for Scharumpur, I simply observed that our American Missionary brethren were moving in a good direction!

I share in the greatest respect and admiration for the many missionaries I knew in India, and would regret exceedingly if my former letter could be misunderstood.—Yours truly, Blackheath. G. G. Anderson.

SUNDAY POSTAL WORK.

Dear Sir,—It is most necessary that we should be ready with well-authenticated evidence to lay before the next Committee of the House of Commons on Sunday Postal Work. May I beg you to give me space to ask your readers to help us by sending me facts and figures to illustrate the following points?

1. Distance walked on Sunday by the letter-carrier of their district. 2. Hours on duty on the Sunday. 3. Whether such distances and hours are done every Sunday, or on alternate Sundays. 4. In towns, the time employed in the Sunday sorting and delivery. 5. Time occupied in Sunday collection and despatch of letters. 6. Whether more than one duty is laid upon the same man—i.e., does he collect as well as deliver?

We have had many facts already sent to us, but every friend who will send me answers to the above will help us in the struggle to free our Postal servants from toil on the Day of Rest. No time should be lost in replying to this invitation.—I am, &c., John Gritton.

SUNDAY SCHOOLS AND MISSIONS.

Sir,—Following the article on "Churches and Missions" in your issue of March 24, I shall be glad if you can find space for a few facts and figures showing what can be done by our Sunday-schools if the matter is systematically gone about.

Even our poorest Sunday scholars, although they may seldom appear to have money to put into the Mission boxes, always seem to be able to procure a supply of nuts, sweetstuff, and such like. Supposing that each one of them were to give on an average one-halfpenny per month to Missions and our teachers one-halfpenny per week, we should have the following results, calculated from the statistics of the Sunday School Army:—

Sunday-school scholars in the United Kingdom	151,516	18	6
Sunday-school teachers in the United Kingdom	67,470	8	0
Total for the United Kingdom	218,987	6	6
Sunday-school scholars in Canada and Australia	19,125	15	6
Sunday-school teachers in Canada and Australia	8,555	2	0
Sunday-school scholars in U.S. America ..	170,520	17	6
Sunday-school teachers in U.S. America ..	93,228	6	0
Total for America, Canada, and Australia	291,430	1	0
Grand totals	£510,417	7	6

The sum thus collected in the United Kingdom alone is equal to about one-fifth part of the amount sent to Foreign Missions from this country annually. D. A. H.

AN IMPORTANT QUESTION.

Dear Sir,—While sitting on Sunday afternoon with the children in our church, listening to an address given to them by our curate, he made use of the following expression, "The gift which was given to you at Holy Baptism." Now I was christened and have been confirmed, consequently, I am writing simply to ask some good clergyman to explain why conversion is needed, if, as my Church teaches, we receive the Holy Spirit in our infancy.

I am sure I did not; and should not dare to indulge the hope that the precious gift was mine now, had I not experienced a thorough change of heart at a mission not four years ago, when I was led to trust in the Lord Jesus Christ for salvation.

WORKHOUSE CHILDREN.

Under the head of "Notes and Comments" of April 14 there is a paragraph in which allusion is made to a speech by Mr. S. Smith, M.P., respecting the emigration of children to Canada, in which it is stated that "Between the Poor Law Guardians and the Industrial School authorities there are no fewer than 80,000 children in keeping in England at present, the larger proportion of whom, tainted from birth, are likely to be paupers or worse."

As honorary secretary of a Girls' Reformatory, and a Boys' and Girls' Certified Industrial Schools, for twenty-five years, and a guardian of the poor, and vice-chairman of the Workhouse School for twelve years, I have some practical knowledge of both classes of children, and of their life after leaving these institutions. I regret very much that such a paragraph should have been published without any facts being furnished in support of such a statement.

With respect to industrial schools, by the last annual report, up to the end of 1885, presented to the Home Secretary by the Inspector of Reformatory and Industrial Schools, 81 per cent. of the boys and 81 per cent. of the girls were doing well three clear years after they had left the schools. With respect to Workhouse children: for the last six years in our Workhouse school we have kept a register of all the children who have left, or who had been in the school a year or upwards. During the last month we have gone carefully over this register, and find that 80 per cent. of the boys and 82 per cent. of the girls who left us during that period are doing well. I have little reason to doubt that other Unions in Durham and Northumberland could report similar favourable results.

Within the last fortnight I have seen the sixth annual report of the "Marston Green Cottage Homes" (the schools for the children of the Birmingham Union), known as well-managed Workhouse schools. The report gives the result for six years, the time during which the Cottage Home system has been in operation; their result is 70 per cent. of boys and 84 per cent. of the girls doing well during the same period. Three or four years ago I visited the Liverpool Workhouse School at Everton, and from what I saw and heard from the superintendents of these schools, who had filled that post for many years, I gathered that their results were very favourable. I cannot but think that a majority of our Workhouses will be able to show a similar good record, unless our Metropolitan and Southern Counties are not equally well managed with those in the Northern and Midland Counties.

Excellent work has, no doubt, been done by institutions for the emigration of children, such as Miss Rye's, Miss Macpherson's, and Mrs. Birt's, the latter of which I visited with much pleasure. No doubt Mr. Smith, M.P., and others have done good service in promoting the emigration of destitute children, but I think their enthusiasm in this direction sometimes leads them to under-estimate the results of other agencies, long established, for helping a somewhat similar class of children.

MISSION TO ITALIANS IN ENGLAND.—The object of this Mission is to secure to poor Italians living in London the blessings of Christian ministry and worship. By means of mothers' meetings, Bible-classes, night schools, &c., an earnest effort will be made for the welfare, moral and spiritual, of those who are at present utterly neglected. A petition for the establishment of this agency was drawn up and signed by the poor Italians living in and around Clerkenwell. Signor Mola (who worked for some years under the C.M.S. amongst the Tamil population in and around Colombo) and his wife have the superintendence of the Mission.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give a portrait and sketch of Rev. Wm. Haslam, the veteran Church Missioner, and author of "From Death into Life."

Mr. Henry Varley has gone to the seaside to recruit. We are glad to learn he is gaining health each day.

An anonymous correspondent makes the assertion that in Liverpool, where there are hundreds of Frenchmen, there is neither hymn, nor prayer, nor sermon in the French language, nor any public worship of God, from Sunday to Sunday, from the beginning of the year to the end. If this be so, it constitutes a loud call for some servant of Christ to supply the lack.

In this issue we commence the promised series of papers on the life of Elijah, by Rev. F. B. Meyer, of Leicester. We believe they will be found to be equally interesting and profitable with those recently published on the life of Jacob, which met with such acceptance from our readers. We are glad to announce that the latter can now be had in a volume, under the title of ISRAEL, A PRINCE WITH GOD. We doubt not many who enjoyed the perusal of the stirring chapters from week to week will like to possess them in this permanent form. Our publishers have produced the book in an attractive style, which renders it well suited for presentation.

We have received more than one animadversion on the review of Dr. Parker's latest volume of the "People's Bible," in our issue of April 21. In reply, the reviewer writes:—

> I am by no means one of Dr. Parker's admirers. It is very far otherwise. Ever since I read his presidential address, given some years ago, my mind in respect to him has been strongly adverse. But I felt, on receiving the volume from you, that I must do my duty by it impartially. The volume, unquestionably, is the production of a singularly gifted man. I could not but say so. At the same time I strove to set forth the Doctor's lack of evangelical perception. Your correspondents admit all that, and I am sorry they should have expected more. I could only judge the book as I found it. It is a very able work; but it is weak where I said it was, and on that point I enlarged. The same applies to Dr. Parker's other writings, some of which are more faulty. I could not in reviewing his Judges and Joshua bring in Ecce Deus.

That seems to us the spirit in which a reviewer should write. A book is given to him to review, and he points out what appear to him its merits and its defects. We have not forborne to express our judgment as to Dr. Parker's action when we have had occasion; but when a book is sent to us for review, we think it fair to the author and to our readers to give them our candid opinion of it. When we say that the reviewer was Rev. J. Douglas, who is referred to in another note, it will be seen that he is generous as well as courageous toward those from whom he differs.

A little paper, with the taking title of Brotherhood, comes to us from Ireland, the noble words of St. Paul appearing on its front page, "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ." Edited by Rev. Bruce Wallace, it must necessarily contain much that is excellent, and we shall watch its progress with interest. Nevertheless, we cannot but think that time is lost in advocating drastic theories with regard to land and capital, and the distribution of wealth, instead of teaching that higher development of the Christian life, which must of necessity include the everyday practice of duty to the neighbour. With the reformation of the unit the reform of the society must come.

Any weak-kneed believers who may have been troubled about Mr. Cotter Morrison's recent shallow attack on Christianity, will do well to read the able and crushing rejoinder by Dr. Fairbairn in the April and May issues of The Congregational Review. Mr. Morrison had the temerity to assert that the true service of man, and the service of God as enjoined by Christianity, are incompatible. On this point Dr. Fairbairn well says:—

> There can be nothing more absolutely alien to the Spirit of Christ than a service of God without any service of man. Nay, such a service He declared impossible: "Inasmuch as ye did it not unto one of these least, ye did it not unto Me." If the author had so studied as to understand the faith he so glibly criticises, he would have come to know that the religion which rose as love to God and love to man, has never allowed that God was either loved or served where man was hated or unblessed.

The current Nineteenth Century has an important article by Herr Katscher on German Life in London. The love of adventure, or sordid motives, he says, are bringing thousands from Germany to London every year. Many become shameless beggars, or go to the bad altogether. There are German settlers, as everyone knows, of high character, but of late years London has become one of the head-quarters of Nihilism and Communism. This foreign element among us may seem unimportant, but it is one of which we ought to take serious account.

The paper by Mrs. Fawcett in this month's Contemporary contains unwelcome revelations concerning young people employed in theatres. Baby children of four or five are bound by indentures to an apprenticeship of nine years to a theatre manager. At an age when they cannot throw out their little legs without tumbling over, they are kept in training three or four days a week for five hours. They are paid sixpence and upwards a night, the money too often going to dissolute parents. After ballets at the Crystal Palace, a child of seven, with her ankles swollen, arrives in London between ten and eleven o'clock, all alone. Mrs. Fawcett asserts that the moral risks they run in the dressing rooms can be better conceived than described.

The question may be naturally asked, Why does not the law interfere, as in the case of factory children? Mrs. Fawcett shows that there are holes in the education net which allow all manner of evasions. Even if these theatre children are got to school, they are fit for nothing on account of fatigue. It is greatly to be hoped that this womanly appeal may arouse public attention to a crying evil.

The history of Christianity has not, since the days of Judas Iscariot, furnished a more painful and deplorable example of treacherous backsliding than that of Mr. Baker, of the Tonga Islands, in the South Pacific. We know of a persecuting Saul becoming a Paul, the great Gentile missionary. Here we have a professed Christian missionary turning into a persecutor of the most cruel and malignant kind. The story of the crimes and outrages committed at the bidding of this recreant apostle of peace, as told in several issues of The Pall Mall Gazette, last week, reads like a chapter out of the history of the Neronian era. Of course, the attempt on Baker's life is not to be excused or condoned, though it is by no means surprising that a semi-savage people, goaded to despair by his cruelties, should adopt the only means of reprisal at their disposal.

The matter has come before the House of Commons, and it is to be hoped that the Government will take steps to avenge the wrongs perpetrated on a defenceless people, whose sole crime has been that they desire to worship God according to the dictates of conscience.

Nothing looks more ridiculous than an inverted pyramid. No kind of argument is more contemptible than that of which the inverted pyramid is the proverbial symbol. The Daily Telegraph of last Thursday illustrates this. A young woman appeared at Westminster Police-court on April 28, declaring "she had been married at Brighton the day before to a gentleman, who had brought her up to London, and then deserted her." On inquiry, the Police Inspector was soon convinced "that the Deserted Bride was an unblushing adventuress, and that her story was a fable." Whereupon The Daily Telegraph begins its homily thus:—

> Feather-brained people, who believe all they hear or read—especially when it implies the gross depravity of their neighbours—will do well to ponder the story of "The Deserted Bride," which, after having attracted much public attention, has just come to a conclusion. No tale could have been better adapted to their passion for sin and scandal.

After describing the statement of the girl and the proof of her imposture, the writer asks, "What could be worse, what could present a greater social peril, than such a woman as this?" and answers his question by showing that equally dangerous are the "highly moral persons who smell about for sin and crime, and would have taken everything for granted against the accused, and inflamed public opinion," &c., this last inuendo being intended apparently for The Pall Mall Gazette. He then proceeds:—

> In presence of these two characters—the immoral hussy who swears to any lie, and the inexperienced provincialist and new hand at London journalism who will swallow any tale if it be gross and filthy enough—the community stands seriously endangered. No one is safe......The public will do well to bear this ugly case in mind when next its indignation is invited upon a similar charge.

It will occur to every one, except the experienced Metropolitan and old hand at London journalism, that for every such fraud as this there are a hundred cases in which women are the victims of men's cruel appetite, and still more cruel desertion; that the present case is not the rule, but the exception; and that the old hand at London journalism here, as usual in matters of this kind, turns the truth upside down, and builds his pyramid with the apex for its foundation.

"The New Journalism," which The Pall Mall Gazette claims to have inaugurated, is a pretentious name; but to displace the old it must acquire sobriety, solidity, weight. It must be less partisan; more catholic and less Roman Catholic. Mr. Matthew Arnold thus dilates upon it in The Nineteenth Century:—

> We have had opportunities of observing a new journalism, which a clever and energetic man has lately invented. [That is, we suppose, Mr. Arnold has occasionally purchased a Pall Mall Gazette.] It has much to recommend it. It is full of ability, novelty, variety, sensation, sympathy, generous instincts. Its one great fault is that it is feather-brained. It throws out assertions at a venture because it wishes them true, does not correct either them or itself if they are false, and to get at the state of things as they truly are seems to feel no concern whatever.

[The interjected sentence between the brackets is the remark of The British Weekly.] The use and exposition of the term "feather-brained," which is the first word of the article from The Daily Telegraph quoted above, seems to identify Mr. Matthew Arnold with the writer who there poses as an experienced old hand at London journalism. We fully endorse Mr. Matthew Arnold's testimony to the "ability, novelty, variety, sensation, sympathy, generous instincts," of the New Journalism. But to his uncomplimentary and undignified compound adjective, and his exposition of it, The Tablet, referring to the Langworthy atrocity, well replies:—

> It may be that there was something chivalrously "feather-headed" in this resolve to venture for the poor and the weak in her quarrel with the rich and the strong, but assuredly there was nothing light-headed about the patience that has penetrated into all the long windings of a woman's grief, or the tireless, ruthless industry that has hunted down the wrongdoer, and brought him at last to bay, at the bar of public opinion. It is something for the New Journalism to claim that it has taken this one instance of insufferable wrong—of a wrong that lay buried away and rammed down by the hurrying of a thousand indifferent feet—and dragged it into the light of day and brought it to the very doors of redress. It was only a woman's fate, perhaps—and that may seem a slight thing compared with the vaster issues with which the editor of a great journal has need to busy himself. But at any rate a difficult justice has been begun, light has been let in upon one of the dark places of the earth, and it may be that here and there the thought of this will make some journalist a little happier and a little prouder in his profession.

Power ought to be employed on behalf of weakness; and it is a worthy exercise of the New Journalism, that this principle should be plainly inscribed on its banner.

We have followed with deep and growing interest, mingled with inexpressible shame and disgust, this "Strange, True Story," of "The Langworthy Marriage," in the columns of The Pall Mall Gazette. We wish to express our sense of the public service rendered by that courageous journal in thus exposing, in all its naked and revolting ugliness such character and conduct. Some men seem so lost to all feelings of honour, and even of common humanity, that no adequate punishment can be awarded them in this life; even the pillory of the press is robbed of its terrors, for their wealth enables them to escape to regions where a healthy public opinion is non-existent. Nevertheless, their judgment slumbereth not; God will one day arise and vindicate the cause of the seemingly helpless victims.

But in last Thursday's instalment of the story, there occurs the following passage:—

> There is in all London hardly any more un-Christian and inhuman sight than the locked door of a Christian church. All the week long, from Monday morning to Saturday night, these hallowed oases, dedicated to the worship of God and the service of man, stand locked and barred against the children of men. Quiet resting-places they are in the midst of the city's din; retreats where —if London had still been Catholic—the sorely wounded and heavy laden might have crept at all hours for a moment's seclusion, from the turmoil of the world; but which—London being Protestant—are locked up more closely than the gaol, so that no weary foot may wake the silence of their consecrated aisles. The comfortable and prosperous never think what a godless waste of opportunities for the silent ministrations of Divine things is represented by every locked-up church.

We must protest against this misrepresentation of the facts, both as regards Popery and Protestantism. No one who has seen the ever-open Romish churches can think of them, but in exceptional cases, as above described. It is disingenuous, not to say Jesuitical, thus to cast a glamour over Rome's demoralising confessional; her pagan idolatry; her blasphemous displacement of the Risen Christ, the Great High Priest, by a heathen Pontifex Maximus; her rejection of God's Melchizedek Priest, who, because He continueth ever, hath an intransferable priesthood, in favour of a crowd with no more title to be priests than those whom Jeroboam made priests from the lowest of the people. Every truth of the Gospel has been counterfeited by the harlot Church, who, like her ancient mother, has built a Babel-tower with brick for stone and slime for mortar.

If the locking-up of our churches on week days had been the sole result of English Protestantism, we might regret, as much as our contemporary seems to do, that it ever gained ascendancy in this realm. But it is only throwing dust in our eyes to suggest that there is any necessary connection between Protestantism and closed churches. Moreover, in its zeal, our contemporary has overstepped the limits of strict veracity in saying that our Protestant churches stand locked and barred from Monday morning till Saturday night. Many, if not most of them, are frequently opened during the week for some good purpose.

Nevertheless, Protestants of all denominations should be thankful that this "rib of dry rot in our ship's stout side" is once more denounced. While the devil's churches—whisky saloon and wanton playhouse—are open all the working week, it is a grave reflection on our methods of propagating the Gospel that during that period our churches should to a great extent be as sealed and silent as the grave. Every working and well-ordered Christian congregation in our populous towns ought so to arrange its forces that the church building will be used every evening for 365 days in the year. The superstitious idea of the special sacredness of church pews and bricks and mortar, has much to answer for.

We are glad to quote the following from Dr. R. W. Dale, of Birmingham, lately spoken at a Recognition service in that town:—

> As he got older he got more courage to talk to people about what they knew, and became less anxious to speak on matters of which they were ignorant. When he was young he was more venturesome; wanting to lead others in untrodden paths. But he had found that unfamiliar truths rarely sustained life and strength. It was the common truth, transmitted from generation to generation, that was likely to sustain and develop the highest and most heroic forms of Christian life.

A correspondent writes:—I have lately met with the following lines (author unknown), and would like them to have a wide circulation:—

Not to Thy cross, but to Thyself,
My living Saviour, would I cling;
'Twas Thou, and not Thy cross, that bore
My soul's dark guilt, sin's deadly sting.

The British Weekly has the following noteworthy comment upon two of the most prominent of English Nonconformist bodies:—

> Among the Baptists there has been less theological controversy than among the Congregationalists, and a more general adherence to older statements of truth. For this there are obvious reasons, in the importance attached to baptism, and consequently to conversion. For a Baptist to deny the need of an actual turning to God would be to stultify himself. Further, whatever may be said as to the question whether immersion was the primitive form of baptism, the defenders of infant baptism now-a-days prefer to rest their case on the contention that immersion was an Eastern form, not intended for all the world and for all time, rather than to contest the point of the primitive mode. Baptists are thus bound to support the authority of Scripture, and if they maintain that the Epistles are authoritative as regards a matter of ritual, they would be sadly inconsistent if they denied the same authority in matters of doctrine.

The nomination of Dr. Clifford as Vice-President of the Baptist Union was opposed by Rev. James Douglas, of Brixton, and a small minority. Mr. Douglas, in making his objection, and Dr. Clifford in his reply, were each courteous and brotherly, though each thought the other heterodox, and that that heterodoxy was deplorable and mischievous. Mr. Douglas is somewhat conservative, and Dr. Clifford liberal in politics and in theology, and they probably represent the extremes of thought within the Baptist body. It means no disrespect to Dr. Clifford personally, that Mr. Douglas should object to his holding a position so representative as Vice-President of the Union. The question is, What amount of strain will the Union bear? How far may views diverge, and the bond not break? Mr. Douglas thinks that one who has travelled so far out of the range of orthodox thought and orthodox methods of interpreting Scripture, as to teach that Abraham made a mistake in offering up Isaac, cannot be a representative of a body "bound to support the authority of Scripture."

A man convinced that he and those who feel with him are one in loyalty to Scripture with their brethren who have crossed the flood, if not with all those who are crossing now; and having enough of the courage of his convictions to express them, though expecting to find himself in a minority of one, is not a man to be lightly esteemed in these latitudinarian days, by a body "bound," above everything, "to support the authority of Scripture." In saying this, we are not expressing any judgment as to the Vice-President, for whose boldness, philanthropy, liberality, and ability, we have the highest esteem, and as to whose views on evangelical doctrine we are not sufficiently informed to do so.

HOME OF REST FOR SUNDAY-SCHOOL TEACHERS.—A convenient house at Hastings has been taken by the Committee of the Sunday-school Union as a holiday home for female Sunday-school teachers needing rest and change of air. Such an auxiliary to Sunday-school work has long been needed, there being many teachers whose circumstances, much as they need it, do not permit of their obtaining such a change as this Home will offer. All communications on the subject should be addressed to Mr. A. J. Scrutton, 56, Old Bailey.

The Book World.

Gospel Narratives in Verse. By Mrs. Marshman. 1s. 6d. John F. Shaw & Co. To offer to the young pages of such lines as we find here, instead of the majestic prose of the Authorised Version, seems to us a mistake.

My Later Ministry: Sermons. By Richard Roberts. T. Woolmer. One of the comparatively few volumes of sermons really worth reading. They are in no way tame or overdrawn, but full of sound, solid matter, clothed in strong racy language; above all, they are true to the Word of God they seek to expound.

Land, Labour, and Liquor. By Rev. D. Burgess. 4s. 337, Strand. The student of the many problems that cluster around these three subjects will find in this book a mine of information. The indictment against strong drink contained in the many statistical tables and arguments put before the reader could scarcely be more crushing.

A Garland from the Parables. By the late Rev. W. Edensor Littlewood, M.A. Second Edition. 2s. W. Mack. These flowers of thought are not unworthy of the garden from which they are gathered. Mr. Littlewood possessed the best qualities of a Christian singer—an observant eye, a harmonious ear, an imaginative mind, deep sympathy with human nature, and true love to the Saviour of sinners. The book also contains a portrait of the author.

How to Study the English Bible. By Canon Girdlestone. 1s. 6d. Religious Tract Society. A rich store of valuable information and eminently wise counsel is contained in this little manual; indeed, with so many handbooks to Bible study as exist, it is wonderful that so much that is original and suggestive can be supplied. Bible-class teachers will do well to follow the Canon's lead in reference to their work, and also to use their influence in placing the book in the hands of those they teach.

Surpassing Fable; or, Glimpses of our Future Home. By Rev. R. Hardy Brenan, M.A. 2s. J. Nisbet & Co. The author of this book has a pleasing style, a fertile imagination, and quotes freely from divers poets anything that supports his theory. Unhappily, however, he fails to see the distinction between the millennial earth and the postmillennial "new heavens and new earth," about which the Scripture reveals nothing. When, therefore, he describes the present earth purified by fire as "the eternal abode" of the saints, he connects what God has not joined together, and his book as a guide to the future becomes not only fanciful but misleading.

Sickness and the Gospel. By Otto Stockmayer. 1s. Bemrose & Sons. The great fact that Jesus Christ has borne our sicknesses and pains on the cross is the subject of the first part of this little work, which has now reached a second edition. The testimony of Scripture on this point, as also the conditions by which the believer may realise that to which Scripture testifies, are also clearly shown. The author, in discussing the subject of the healing of the sick by the prayer of faith, carefully distinguishes between the various lessons taught in the school of sickness, and avoids a too general conclusion. In the second part, it is shown that only at Christ's coming can we look for the complete redemption of the body. The chapter entitled "From my own experience" will be read with great interest.

The Dictionary of Religion. Cassell & Co. 21s. In this bulky tome a vast array of information relating to the religious world has been collected, and stated with admirable clearness and precision. The student will here find a description of the religions that have influenced the world, of the various sects that have sprung out of Christianity itself, and their distinguishing features. There are also valuable articles on the different doctrines held by Christians, and sketches of the great men who in their time have been the leaders of religious thought, and whose power is felt to the present day. The value of such a work cannot be over-estimated. Living persons, as a rule, are not included in the scope of the work. The point of view of the compilers is that of "orthodox Christianity as understood by intelligent members of the Church of England," but there seems to be an honest desire fairly to represent the beliefs and practices of other denominations.

Rest and Reaping (1d. Morgan & Scott) for this month speaks of the coming of age, in September next, of Miss Mason's "House of Rest," and suggests a suitable way of celebrating the event. There are, besides, several articles of considerable interest.

Daily Bread; or, Communion with Jesus. The title of this little book (1d. Partridge & Co.) reveals the nature of its contents, which may be briefly summarised by the words, "living upon Christ," as manifested in that Word which is, to the soul of him that truly feeds on it, what bread is to the body.

The Pilgrim's Progress. 1s. Marlborough & Co. This new edition of Bunyan's matchless allegory is admirably adapted for the general reader. It is printed in good type, is embellished by nearly three hundred engravings, very happily and forcibly illustrating the many phases of the pilgrim life as here depicted, and is also of a very handy size for carrying in the pocket.

Music Jubilee: A Service of Praise and Thanksgiving for the Times (1s. 6d., Sunday-school Union), is composed and arranged by Dr. Stainer, the well-known Organist of St. Paul's Cathedral. The compositions of eminent musicians are pressed into the service, and the whole forms a national Cantata that ought to become popular. The Mother of Jesus (2s., Curwen & Sons) is a Sacred Cantata, by T. M. Pattison. The melodies and harmonies are at once simple and expressive, and well within the compass of an ordinary choir. Both pieces are in the staff notation.

SPREADING THE GOOD NEWS.—A correspondent wishes to suggest that Christians going abroad for the summer should not forget to take with them a good supply of Gospels and other Scripture portions for distribution among those whom they may meet. These portions can be had in foreign languages, at a very cheap rate, from the various Bible Societies.

TRACTS FOR ALDERSHOT.—This large camp offers a fine field for tract distribution. The 8000 men now there will soon be increased to 80,000, besides women and children, and it is supposed there will be 100,000 present for the review by the Queen in July. Thousands of visitors will also be attracted during the summer months. Special appeal is therefore made for 200,000 tracts, leaflets, &c., for distribution. Letters and parcels sent to Mr. John Poate, Sherbourne-road, Farnborough, Hampshire, will be gratefully acknowledged.

SUMMER WORK.—The summer months are upon us, bringing with them the usual difficulty in attracting people to hear the Gospel. On every hand we hear of spiritual work being dropped until the autumn season. This is a terrible blunder on the part of the Church of Christ, for every fine evening crowds of people will be seen perambulating the streets and parks. It therefore behoves Christian men and women to go and proclaim to them the "good tidings of great joy." I would appeal for the assistance of ladies and gentlemen willing to engage in open-air work. I shall be pleased if all such will write to me.

THE BLESSED LIFE.

How blest are they in heart and life
  Whose precious things are stored above;
Who, ever 'mid the surge and strife,
  Can rest in the Eternal Love!

For them the barren waste is glad,
  And hope makes bright the toilsome way;
And when the sky looks drear and sad,
  A glory shines behind the grey.

Because they simply trust and love,
  And do not seek to understand;
Fearless, along life's path they move,
  Safe guided by a Father's hand.

Their human hearts so closely lean
  Upon the heart of love Divine;
No gloomy shade of care is seen,
  And, all undimmed, heaven's mercies shine.

They thank their Lord for mercies past,
  They praise Him for the good in store;
And by his strong hand, holding fast,
  They trust to reach the farther shore.

Annie E. Lyddon.

THE "NATHANIEL" BAND OF MERCY (in memory of Nathaniel Heckford, founder of the East London Hospital for Children) enforces practically on the members the duty of kindness to all creatures, arising from the belief that rich and poor alike are but stewards of God's gifts for the good of others. Gifts of clothing, toys, books, flowers, &c., will be gratefully received by Mrs. Heckford, 6, The Crescent, Minories, E.C.

MEDICAL MISSIONS IN INDIA.—Mr. W. A. Redwood, writing lately to us from Malvalli, Mysore district, points out that there is a good opening for medical mission work there. Malvalli is a town of about 8000 inhabitants, and in the surrounding towns and villages there are quite 80,000 people entirely without medical help. Mr. Redwood draws a vivid and painful picture of the necessities of the district in which himself and wife are almost the only workers, and pleads earnestly for some who have consecrated their lives to the Lord to go out and help in spreading the Gospel amongst a people who seldom or never hear its sound. A school, attended by many Brahmin boys, has been established at Malvalli, and many such openings can be found in the adjacent towns and villages.

ROYAL NATIONAL LIFE-BOAT INSTITUTION.—The committee of this Institution have decided to offer a gold and a silver medal for drawings or models of a mechanically propelled life-boat best adapted to meet the conditions under which life-boats are called upon to perform their work. Also a gold and a silver medal for models or drawings of a propelling power suitable for the boats of the Institution. All models and drawings must be forwarded to the Institution not later than October 1 next, under cypher, accompanied by the fullest detailed explanations, and a sealed cover containing the name and address of the competitor, not to be opened until after a decision has been arrived at. The models and drawings will be examined by three judges, appointed by the committee, who reserve to themselves the right of withholding all or any of the medals. All communications should be addressed to the secretary, Mr. Charles Dibdin, 14, John-street, Adelphi, London, W.C.

MISS MACPHERSON'S JUBILEE PARTY.—We have received from Miss Macpherson a detailed account of the voyage of the Jubilee party of boys that recently left her East-end Homes for Stratford, in Canada. Pressure of matter prevents our giving the narrative, which does not differ greatly from those we have frequently given on former occasions. The weather was cold and rough, and most of the lads, of course, succumbed for a time. Many were able, however, to have little meetings of song and reading and prayer, and the evening prayer-meetings were times of much soul-refreshing. The lads themselves freely took part, and Mr. W. Merry, in his letter, says there is every reason to believe that many of them will go to their situations with Jesus in their hearts. Stratford was safely reached on April 1, after the long railway journey, and a hearty welcome was accorded to them. The next party of girls sail under care of Mr. and Mrs. Merry; their farewell will be at the workers' meeting on the 18th inst.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, MAY 15.—PSALM XCIX.

Delitzsch calls this Psalm "an earthly echo of the 'thrice holy' of the seraphim" (see Is. vi. 3). This refers to a division of the Psalm (missed in A.V., but marked in R.V.) into three parts, marked at the end of ver. 3, and of ver. 5, by the words "Holy is He," and at the last verse by "The Lord our God is holy."

5.—Worship at his footstool; for He is holy.—One of Rome's perversions of the Word of God is found here. The Douay Bible, following a mistranslation of the Vulgate, renders this, "adore his footstool for it is holy," on which they further add in a note, "The ark of the covenant was called in the Old Testament 'God's footstool;' but, as this Psalm evidently relates to Christ and the New Testament, where the ark has no place, the holy fathers understood this text of the worship paid by the Church to the body and blood of Christ in the sacred mysteries." This only shows how unable "the fathers" were to find a text to justify the superstitious idolatry that was gradually creeping in, even from the times of the Apostles ("for the mystery of iniquity doth already work," 2 Thess. ii. 7), and how little they are to be trusted as interpreters of Scripture.

6.—Moses, and Aaron among his priests, and Samuel among them that call upon his name.—The above punctuation saves the necessity of any long explanation, such as commentators give, as to why Moses is called a priest. "Call upon his name" should be "proclaim or publish his name," the prophet's function. See Deut. xxxii. 3. These three great names in Israel, the great leader Moses (all but 'king,' Deut. xxxiii. 5), the priest Aaron, and the prophet Samuel, all of them failed in their respective offices, and so enhance by contrast the glory of the Great Prophet, Priest, and King, who fails not.

MONDAY, MAY 16.—PSALM C.

This Psalm "is closely connected with the preceding series of Psalms, of which it forms the fitting conclusion."—S.P. "Psalms xci.—c. belong to the same time and same author...a decalogue of Psalms intimately connected together, characterised by a confident expectation of a glorious revelation of the Lord, which the Psalmist sees with the eye of faith as already present."—Hengstenberg. "All these Psalms are occupied with the destruction of enemies that have been sufficiently long endured, and with the deliverance of the people of God."—Venema.

3.—He hath made us, and not we ourselves; we are his people.—There is no "we are" in the Hebrew. It is better rendered by Hengstenberg, "He has made us, and not we ourselves, his people and the sheep of his pasture." "It is not we that made ourselves his."—A. A. Bonar.

4.—Come unto his gates with thanksgiving.—"The summons to manifest this joy in a religious-festive manner springs up out of a world-embracing love, the spontaneous result of living faith in the promise that all tribes in the earth shall be blessed in Abraham's seed."—Delitzsch.

5.—For the Lord is good; his mercy is everlasting, &c.—"This sums up his character, and contains a mass of reasons for praise. Everlasting mercy is a glorious theme for sacred song. Our heart leaps with joy as we bow before One who has never broken his word or changed his purpose."—C. H. Spurgeon.

TUESDAY, MAY 17.—PSALM CI.

"This is the Prince's Psalm, or as it is inscribed in Luther's version 'David's mirror of a monarch.' It belongs to the time during which the Ark was in the house of Obed-edom where David had left it behind through terror at the misfortune of Uzzah. David said at that time 'How shall the ark of the Lord come to me?' (2 Sam. vi. 9). In this Psalm, however, he gives utterance to his determination as king to give earnest heed to the sanctity of his walk, of his rule, and of his house; and this resolve he brings before Jehovah as a vow, to whom in regard to the rich blessing which the ark of God diffuses around it (2 Sam. vi. 11) he longingly sighs; 'When wilt thou come to me?'"—Delitzsch.

"It is full of a stern exclusiveness, of a noble intolerance, not against theological error, not against uncourtly manners, not against political insubordination, but against the proud heart, the high look, the secret slanderer, the deceitful worker, the teller of lies. These are the outlaws from King David's court; these are the rebels whom he would not suffer to dwell in his house or tarry in his sight."—A. P. Stanley.

1.—I will sing of mercy and judgment.—If the view given above by Delitzsch of the circumstances which suggested the Psalm be accepted, this may be an allusion to the case of Uzzah (2 Sam. vi. 7), where judgment was seen, joined with "mercy" to Obed-edom and all his household (11). To the Christian, however, the words have a more glorious application in reference to Him on whom "judgment" fell, that "mercy" might flow forth to us; and whose coming reign of righteousness will be a more perfect fulfilment than David ever attained of the vow of rectitude as king which forms the subject of the Psalm.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 18.—PSALM CII.

The title of this Psalm, "a prayer of the afflicted when he is overwhelmed and poureth out his complaint before the Lord," points to Him who above all others could say, "I am the Man that hath seen affliction." "It is a Psalm which, without apostolic teaching (Heb. i. 10), I doubt if any of us would have the boldness to apply to Christ, for in many respects it is the most remarkable of all the Psalms."—A. Saphir.

4.—My heart is smitten.—It is the same verb which occurs in Isa. liii. 4, "smitten of God." "Smitten and withered like grass." "Like a plant parched by the fierce heat of a tropical sun."—C. H. Spurgeon.

6.—I am like a pelican of the wilderness.—"I have seen a pelican of the wilderness. . . . It was certainly the most sombre, austere bird I ever saw; no more expressive type of solitude and melancholy could be found."—W. M. Thomson.

12.—But Thou, O Lord, shalt endure for ever.—"This Psalm opens with the complaint of 'the Man of Sorrows.' He sees Himself deserted by his followers, reproached by the foe, and sustaining the righteous anger of God (1—11). We then listen to God's answer to this; and that answer pledges Him life and a kingdom, and display in his glory, rehearsing also the theme of praise with which Israel and the nations will then celebrate Him (12—22). Then Messiah is heard a second time solitarily musing on his griefs (23, 24), and God in like manner again answering Him—reminding Him, so to speak, of his ancient glories at creation, and pledging Him, as before, life, a kingdom, and a seed" (25—28).—J. G. Bellett.

25.—Of old hast Thou laid the foundation of the earth.—"The quotation of this verse in Heb. i. 10 seems to give it this structure and character; for it tells us that 25—27 is the language of God to the Son, and this leads us to conclude that 12—22 is the same."—Ibid.

27.—But Thou art the same.—"Jesus Christ the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever" (Heb. xiii. 8).

28.—Their seed shall be established before Thee.—"He shall see of the travail of his soul, and shall be satisfied" (Isa. liii. 11). "Who for the joy that was set before Him endured the cross" (Heb. xii. 2). This Psalm is, as it were, an echo of Gethsemane, and we may possibly have in 12—22 and 25—28 the very message from God, with which the angel "strengthened" the Lord Jesus (Luke xxii. 43).

THURSDAY, MAY 19.—PSALM CIII.

As the last Psalm was occupied with the sufferings of Christ, so is this with the main feature, at least, of the glory that should follow: viz., "the praise of the glory of his grace" (Eph. i. 6). Hengstenberg regards ci.—ciii. as a trilogy of Psalms. If so, the opening words of ci. may extend to the other two, "I will sing of mercy and judgment." Ps. cii. gives "the judgment" on the Substitute. Ps. ciii. the mercy to the sinner. See the praise of "mercy" in ver. 17.

1.—Bless the Lord, O my soul.—"Soul music is the very soul of music...By 'his name' we understand the revealed character of God."

3.—Who forgiveth all thine iniquities.—"Pardoned sin is, in our experience, one of the choicest boons of grace. Till iniquity is forgiven, healing, redemption, and satisfaction are unknown blessings. Forgiveness is first in order of spiritual experience, and in some respects first in value. The pardon granted is a present one—forgiveth; it is continual, for He still forgiveth."—Spurgeon. Comp. 1 John i. 7, "The blood.. cleanseth from all sin."

Who healeth all thy diseases.—The five verbs, "forgiveth," "healeth," "redeemeth," "crowneth," "satisfieth," are all participles, and thus set forth not so much the work done as the attitude of the doer. One who is to the soul the "healer of all its diseases," may be so none the less though the soul is still sick. Earthly physicians require first that we should apply to them, and put our case in their hands; secondly, that we should patiently apply their remedies, not disappointed if the cure is not instantaneous.

12.—As far as the east is from the west.—"When sin is pardoned it is never charged again; the guilt of it can no more return than east become west, or west east."—Charnock.

FRIDAY, MAY 20.—PSALM CIV.

"God's rule in the kingdom of nature, as in the last Psalm, in the kingdom of grace, is the theme of praise. It is a Psalm of nature, but such as no poet among the Gentiles could have written. It is an echo of the history of the seven days of creation in Gen. i. Corresponding to the seven days, it falls into seven groups, 1—4, 5—9, 10—14, 14—18, 19—23, 24—30, 31—35, in which is expanded the 'behold it was very good.' Not, however, so that each single group celebrates the work of a day of creation. The standpoint of the Psalm is the commingling whole of the finished creation; nevertheless, it begins with the light, and closes with an allusion to the Divine Sabbath."—Delitzsch. "The purpose of the Psalm (as that of Job xxxviii.—xli.) is to make man bow in lowly faith before God's boundless wisdom, believing that He whose power created, and whose good Providence rules, the whole order of nature, is no less wonderful in his governance of the moral world."—Kay.

4.—Who maketh his angels spirits.—Better rendered in R.V.: "Who maketh winds his messengers." The next clause meaning that He uses the fiery flame to execute his commands.

16.—The trees of the Lord are full of sap.—"Literally, 'are satisfied' or 'have their fill.' He satisfies with his abundant rain the world of plants and trees."—Speakers' Commentary.

32.—He toucheth the hills, and they smoke.—See Exod. xix. 18: "And the Mount Sinai was all of it on smoke, because the Lord descended on it in fire; and its smoke ascended as the smoke of a furnace."

35.—Sinners shall be consumed from the earth.—"The one jarring string in this great concert, the one dark spot that marred the beauty of this goodly picture, shall exist no longer. Then the eternal Sabbath shall begin (Rev. xxi. 27)."—Kay.

SATURDAY, MAY 21.—PSALM CV.

"A Psalm nearly resembling Ps. lxxviii., and containing an epitome of God's dealings with his people, from the time of his promise to the occupation of Canaan. Its purpose is to stir up faith in Him to all time. The first fifteen verses begin the Psalm recited in 1 Chron. xvi. 8—22, when the ark was installed upon Mount Zion."—S.C.

6.—Ye sons of Jacob his chosen.—Out of the two sons of Abraham (not to speak of the others by Keturah), Ishmael and Isaac, God chose Isaac, and out of his two sons chose Jacob, who thus became the head of the family that swelled into a nation.

17.—He sent a man before them, even Joseph.—As in Stephen's speech (Acts vii. 9—18) so here Joseph is alluded to as a striking type of Christ, and as such his sufferings are specially noticed.

19.—Until the time that his word came.—"Till the season of his word's coming to pass, the promise of the Lord tried him."—Kay. That is, tried his faith.

20.—The king sent and loosed him.—The turning point in Joseph's history (Gen. xli. 14) is at the words, "Then Pharaoh sent and called Joseph." So was it at Christ's resurrection.

The Queen's Jubilee
AND THE
TWENTY-FIRST YEAR of 'Dr. BARNARDO'S HOMES.'

AFTER careful consideration, the Trustees and Committee of "Dr. Barnardo's Homes" have decided to celebrate the 50th Anniversary of our beloved Sovereign's accession to the throne of this realm, and the Majority, or 21st Year of life, of the "Homes" themselves, by an endeavour to enlarge the scope of these comprehensive and national Institutions, thereby placing them upon a still wider and more solid basis.

THEY are convinced that no object can well be conceived more in harmony with the tender and womanly sympathy ever displayed by Her Most Gracious Majesty towards the suffering and the sorrowful, or more likely to be in accordance with Her own wishes, were she free to express them, than a project to promote the extension and increased usefulness of Institutions like these, whose chief work it is to rescue friendless and orphan children from the perils of the streets, and to afford to them not only education, useful training, and Christian care, but also all that is involved in the endearing names of "Home" and "Friend."

HERE, then, is the Scheme proposed for the hearty co-operation of all loyal subjects of Queen Victoria who love and pity helpless little children, and who may be willing, at one and the same time, to raise in Her honour and on their behalf an Enduring Memorial, the benefits of which shall be lastingly recorded in the history of multitudes of young lives.

1. TO establish in a central position a Shelter for Homeless Street Children, to be called the Jubilee Shelter, which shall be always open, night and day, to afford immediate and temporary succour to any little waif or stray who seeks admission. This Shelter would soon become an important feeder of the Parent Homes —a kind of net thrown out into the wide sea of London child-life, into which many of those "ready to perish" would be gathered.
2. TO develop, under skilled and competent control, the 5,400 acres of land already acquired in Manitoba (N.W.T. of Canada), by the establishment thereon of an Industrial Farm for the employment of the older and rougher lads rescued from the streets and low lodging-houses of our great cities and towns, and trained in the Labour House for Destitute Youths in East London. The whole settlement in Manitoba, some seven miles square, and charmingly situated near Birtle, on the Shell River, is to be called, in honour of the Queen, Victoria Regina.
3. TO rebuild the Infirmary, for Sick Children of the absolutely Destitute and Homeless class, already in operation in Stepney, but which, owing to its small size and grave structural defects, is unfitted for its purpose, and which has therefore long since been condemned. The new building, which will have all modern appliances needful for the medical and surgical treatment of 65 little patients, being most urgently required, has already been begun, and will be called Her Majesty's Hospital for Sick Children.
4. TO erect in our Village Home for Orphan and Friendless Girls at Ilford, Essex, a Memorial Cottage, to shelter in perpetuity twenty little rescued "waifs," who will therein find a happy home. A freehold site stands ready amid the fifty other buildings which constitute the Village; and there it is hoped may soon arise the new Memorial Cottage, to be called simply The Queen's Villa.
5. TO redeem and set free from Rent, Mortgages, and all other Charges, several of the Parent Homes (already in occupation) upon which rents and interest of mortgage have to be paid, thereby relieving the Annual Income of a heavy and continuous drain.

TO accomplish the whole of this Scheme, the Committee and Trustees of "Dr. Barnardo's Homes" propose to raise a Jubilee Fund of £50,000, in two several sums of £25,000, one of which shall be collected from among the existing Donors, and the other from the General Public.

AS regards the first of these amounts, it is estimated that if the very large number of Donors already on the books of the Institutions are willing each to contribute The Small Sum of Ten Shillings, the £25,000 required would be at once supplied.

BUT the Committee and Trustees of Dr. Barnardo's Homes now earnestly appeal to Christian people generally for donations towards this Jubilee Fund, in the hope that they will respond in sufficiently large numbers to secure the collection of the other moiety of £25,000.

IF each reader of this advertisement will, within one week of observing this notice, send to the office of the Institution a Jubilee Gift of not less than Ten Shillings, the sum required from the General Public (£25,000), will in all probability have been received before the Twenty-first of June, the day fixed by Her Most Gracious Majesty for the celebration of the 50th Anniversary of Her Reign.

JUBILEE GIFTS of any amount in response may be sent direct to the Offices, 18—26, Stepney Causeway, E.; to the Bankers (London and South Western Bank, Bow Branch, E.; and Messrs. Dimsdale, Fowler & Co., 50, Cornhill, E.C.); or to any of the following:—

AFRICANS FOR AFRICA.

Sir,—The African Prince referred to in a recent issue (copied from L'Evangéliste) is not labouring under the auspices of the Moravian Missionary Society, but under that of the United Brethren of America (quite a different body), in connection with whom the Freedmen's Missions Aid Society is labouring in Africa. He is the son of the late Chief George Caulker, and was taken to America about five years ago by Mr. Gomer, the Superintendent-in-Charge of the Mission. This Mission, as many of your readers are aware, is carried on by means of men of the African race. These are able to stand the climate of tropical Africa, which is so fatal to white men.

There are at present 47 coloured agents in the field, and these, with their helps, have at present 387 towns and villages under Christian instruction. The Lord has very greatly blessed their efforts, especially during the last three years. Rev. Dr. Flickinger, who established the Mission 31 years ago, and who has during the whole of this time paid periodical visits to it, has just returned to this country. The report which he brings is most encouraging. No less than 1311 were added to the Mission churches last year, making 3426 in three years.

A large Training College for missionaries has just been erected at Spaingay, our chief station. This will greatly facilitate the work, as the agents can now be trained on the spot, instead of being sent to America or England, to complete their education. There is a very interesting fact in connection with this building; many of the stones in it, including the "Memorial Stone," have been taken from the ruins of a large slave-pen, on Plantain Island, once used for that purpose by the celebrated John Newton.

CHRISTIANS AND MISSIONS.

We cannot wonder that when heathen races come to know the actual practices and manner of life of Christian nations, they lose all desire to become like us. If drunkenness, selfish trading, immorality of every kind, be the fruit of Christianity, where is its attraction? We are told on unquestionable authority that the increase of Christian converts during this century does not nearly equal the increase of population among the heathen—in other words, that there are more heathen in the world to-day than there were a hundred years ago. Can we wonder the growth of Christendom is so slow? It is more to be wondered at that we make converts at all. The best help we can give to our overtaxed missionaries is to cleanse our own lives, and seek, by every means in our power, to make Christ's rule actual in the persons and places around us.

Naturally, Christianity should extend evenly and uniformly from the centre to the circumference, not by sporadic efforts made here and there, in this place or that. The Church should be on all sides taking in what lies next to it. It would do so were the Church true to her calling, and were all her members truly Christian. Until our trade and commerce are Christianised, until our army and navy are Christianised, until our legislation and literature are Christianised, our Missions are fighting at terrible odds against treachery within, as well as against the foe without. Well might our missionaries despair, and well might the Church at home despair, were they and we not sure that Christ is King, and shall possess the world—were we not sure that, being lifted up, He will draw all men unto Him. —Dr. Marcus Dods.

TEMPERANCE SUNDAY.—The last Sunday in November has been recommended as a day to be observed in furtherance of the temperance cause throughout the kingdom.

MR. PASCOE'S WORK IN MEXICO.

The last Occasional Paper issued by this intrepid preacher of the Gospel contains not only an account of Gospel work and triumphs, but also of great dangers which threaten both the existence of the Mission and the life of our friend. At Toluca there is an excellent congregation, with two schools at which the teachers work gratuitously, and there was a very impressive gathering at the Lord's Supper. The city, however, was in a state of great excitement, a Catholic rising being expected almost hourly. This was in October last, and the danger was so imminent that Mr. Pascoe left in the middle of the night. On the road he was met by the commander of the Catholics, but his appearance on the scene at a critical moment warded off this danger.

During the next four months, the state of affairs got worse and worse. Threats were openly made that San Telmo was to be attacked and the Mission people exterminated, and for three weeks before the issue of this paper in March last, Mr. Pascoe says, "We were almost in a state of siege, hundreds of armed and bloodthirsty Catholics watching for a chance to pounce upon us like a tiger upon his prey." The Indian outlooks, however, were now on the alert, and a surprise was almost impossible, "the position of the house rendering an open assault a difficult task, even for 200 Mexican bravos."

Mr. Pascoe has incurred considerable odium by espousing the cause of the Joconusco Indians in a matter in regard to which they were being greatly wronged, and at length the award has been given in their favour—"a grand triumph of right and truth over wealth and injustice." We sincerely hope Mr. Pascoe's many friends in this country will, by prayer and in other ways, endeavour to sustain him at this critical juncture. Mr. J. Mercer, 29, Queen's-road, Southport, represents in this country Mr. Pascoe's Mission.

THE LATE EDWIN BAINBRIDGE.

The Bainbridge family have long been honourably known in Newcastle-upon-Tyne. Mr. Cuthbert Bainbridge, who was ever, during his short life, most earnest and zealous in the promotion of all Christian and philanthropic effort, was conjoined with the late Rev. W. Pennefather in giving an invitation to Mr. D. L. Moody and Mr. Sankey to undertake an evangelisatic mission in this country in 1873 — a mission which had such important results. When the two American brethren landed in England, both the Christian friends who had invited them had "fallen asleep;" and Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey had to commence their work in this country without the support and countenance of either of the two honoured men who had requested their co-operation. Rev. W. Pennefather was only fifty-six years of age when so unexpectedly called to his rest on April 30, 1873. Five weeks previously (on March 22), Mr. Cuthbert Bainbridge was cut off in the midst of activity and usefulness, at the early age of 32.

It is of Edwin Bainbridge,* the second son of Mr. Cuthbert Bainbridge, that we would now speak. Left fatherless at seven years of age, he, a few months later, was doubly bereaved by the death of his mother. Thus early orphaned he and the other young children fell to the charge of the grandparents, by whom they were carefully trained. When nearly thirteen years of age the lad was sent, along with his brother, to the Leys School, Cambridge, of which Rev. Dr. Moulton is head master. Here he passed the next five or six years; excepting, of course, the vacation seasons, which were spent with his relatives. He gained the affectionate regard of his teachers and his school-fellows. He appears to have made fair progress in his studies, and to have acquired some distinction for his prowess in athletics.

The father on his death-bed had given utterance to a sentence, which probably was half-wish, half-prophecy: "And the children will grow up to be what they have seen their father be." Some passages in Edwin's school-life seemed to give promise of soul-surrender; but it is admitted that the religious history of his school-days was of a fluctuating character; and that the anticipations of earnest friends as to his personal consecration were once and again doomed to disappointment. Had the testimony of his latter days risen no higher than that of his school-life there would have been perhaps little to chronicle; but the tragic closing hours of his earthly existence were distinguished by a confiding faith, a Christian courage, and a fidelity of witness-bearing, that should not be permitted to go unrecorded.

Passing from the Leys School, he soon afterwards entered the well-known house of Messrs. Hitchcock, Williams & Co., of St. Paul's Churchyard. Here, as the result of various influences which affected him, he was led to renewed consecration, and from this period onward his Christian course seems not to have been disturbed by the fluctuations of the earlier time. In June, 1885, he wrote an interesting letter, addressed to the members of the "Leys Christian Union," a religious association formed by the "old boys" of the school, in which he gives some particulars of what was either his conversion or his re-consecration; he considers it to have been the former. This letter was published in a little monthly magazine issued by the "Union." In the autumn of this year, Cuthbert Bainbridge, Edwin's eldest brother, lost his life by a gun accident; and in less than two months his younger sister died of consumption. Cuthbert's sudden death was the means of leading another brother to form earnest resolutions as to change of life.

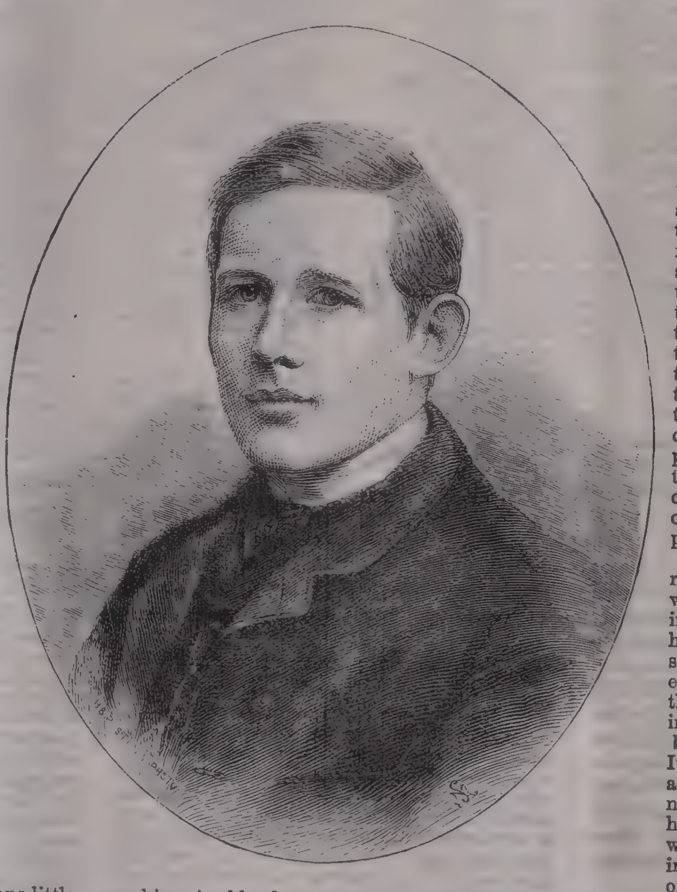
With a view to benefiting Edwin's health, as well as with the object of enlarging his mind by a wider acquaintance with the world, it was thought desirable that he should make an extended tour. Accordingly, in January of last year (1886) he started for Australia, in the steamship Paramatta. This tour was to embrace Fiji and New Zealand, and it was intended that the return journey should have been viâ San Francisco, and through the United States.

Landing at Sydney on April 3, he proceeded to New Caledonia, and then on to Suva, in the Fiji Islands. After a month's sojourn in the Fiji group, he started by steamer for New Zealand, reaching Auckland on May 24. Here he made the acquaintance of Mr. J. P. McArthur, who showed him much kindness; he also met the Hon. Granville Waldegrave, son of Lord Radstock, who was then on a mission tour to Australasia. The first Sabbath after landing Edwin went to hear Mr. Thomas Spurgeon preach, and was greatly interested in his address.

On June 4 he started for the Hot Lake district, a volcanic zone of 6000 square miles in extent, that renowned region of geysers and boiling springs. Here were to be seen the cones and craters of volcanoes that were deemed extinct. Here, too, were those wonderful "Pink" and "White" Terraces, which counted as among the wonders of the world. These terraces have now disappeared for ever; not a trace of them remains. One of the last party whose eyes beheld their beauty was Edwin Bainbridge, the subject of this sketch. On the night of Thursday, June 9, forty-eight hours after the young man had returned to the Wairoa Hotel, from the terraces, a rather smart shock of earthquake was experienced; this occasioned but little alarm, for slight seismic disturbances were not unknown in the district. M'Rae, the landlord of the hotel, went to Bainbridge's door, and called to him that this was "one of their earthquakes." But the present was not one of the familiar movements—a slight upheaval, a momentary oscillation, succeeded by quiescence. Away across Lake Tarawera rose the summit of Mount Tarawera; and suddenly, after a silence of centuries, the whole crest was blown away, and the mount burst forth in terrific eruption. There was a distance of ten miles between Mount Tarawera and Wairoa Village, and Bainbridge, M'Rae, and others stood gazing at the wonderful sight of those belching flames, scarce dreaming of possible danger. In half an hour a fall of what they believed to be rain took place; it was the first shower of volcanic dust. The noise was deafening; a terrific roar was occasionally alternated with tremendous explosions. The party of spectators, now numbering about a dozen, hurried to the hotel for safety. Some details of events connected with this volcanic explosion appeared in The Christian of August 5 and October 21 of last year.

The house proved no protection in that alarming crisis. Showers of stones, mud, sand, and ashes poured upon the hotel, and crushed in the roof and floors. The little party was gathered in a lower room; and there, face to face with death, young Bainbridge with calm self-possession called upon all present to unite in prayer, and besought God to help them in this their extremity. A Bible was searched for and found; and from it he read several passages, and then exhorted those present to avail themselves of this brief opportunity, urging them if they had not already given their hearts to God to do so now. He also entreated that any who might escape would let this crisis prove the turning-point in their lives . . . A terrific roar and crash now drowned his voice, and prevented his proceeding. He closed the Bible; and going to his writing-case he penned the lines, a fac-simile of which appears on the opposite page.

Another tremendous crash interrupted him. He shut the unfinished writing in his writing-case, and, leaving it on the table, he, with the party, hurried from this room, and took shelter in another. This proving equally insecure, they sallied forth in the darkness of night in hopes of finding some safer refuge. When morning broke, one of the party was missing. It was Edwin Bainbridge. Two days afterwards his body was found underneath the balcony of the hotel, which had been borne down by an enormous weight of volcanic mud, and which, in its fall, had crushed out the life of the young man just as escape seemed possible. Of the party at the hotel all were saved except young Bainbridge. And, although about a hundred Maoris are believed to have perished, no other Europeans were killed except good Mr. Hazard, the Christian schoolmaster, his three younger children, and his little nephew. These were all interred on the Lord's Day in the cemetery at Ohinemutu; and on the following Monday, after digging amongst the mud and ashes of the hotel ruins, the writing-case with these last words of Edwin Bainbridge—words so precious to his sorrowing relatives—was brought to light.



AN AWKWARD WITNESS.—M. Dœllinger and his friend, M. Reusch, who are the leaders of the "Old Catholics" in Germany, are about to publish the autobiography of the celebrated Cardinal Bellarmine (1542—1621). This autobiography was not intended for publication; it contains many facts that the Church of Rome would be glad to keep to herself, for they would not add to her glory; she has therefore done her utmost to prevent the publication of the work in its entirety; the fear that some day it will be given to the public has prevented the Church of Rome from placing Bellarmine's name in the Calendar of the Saints.—Le Protestant.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. Gordon Forlong, aided by Mr. George Bruce, has lately held successful meetings at Wellington, N.Z.

Northern New Brunswick has a great religious revival in progress, which is said to be unequalled in the history of the British provinces.

Rev. J. Sprunt has concluded an eleven days' mission in the People's Gospel Hall, Northampton. The services were most helpful, and resulted in a goodly number of professed conversions.

Plymouth.—Mr. Thomas Payne has concluded a mission in St. Andrew's Hall which has been greatly blessed of God. Many hundreds gathered to hear; numbers remained to the after-meetings for prayer and conversation, and were thus led, we trust, to decision for Christ.

Dublin.—Mr. George King has held a series of very successful meetings in the Salvation Gospel Hall, Lower Abbey-street, where for a fortnight the large numbers who attended were greatly impressed by his earnest appeals. Many sinners found refuge in the Rock of Ages, and God's own children were helped by his addresses. J. S.

Rev. Geo. C. Needham has been at work in Beverly, Mass. Baptist and Congregational churches have united in the work. Large numbers of young people have been reached, and profess faith in Jesus. Mrs. Needham has given Bible-readings of an exalted character. The pastors expect much reaping during the days to come. Mr. and Mrs. Needham go next to Philadelphia.

Dr. Pentecost's mission in Cleveland, Ohio, was to close on April 24. It has been a time of great blessing to the churches of the city. A correspondent of the New York Independent speaks in very high terms of the Biblical and practical nature of Dr. Pentecost's preaching, and says the campaign, instead of five weeks, should have extended over six months. Still the results of the work will be far-reaching.

The Bible and Gospel Van.—Messrs. James Wharton and Leonard Weaver have worked their van during five summer seasons. In that time they have circulated about 68,000 Bibles and Testaments and 750,000 Gospel books, besides preaching the Gospel to more than a million and a half of people. They are anxious to continue and extend the work, commencing at Oldham. Communications may be sent to Mr. Weaver, at Ebenezer, Leominster.

Exeter.—Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes, of Birmingham, has been conducting a very successful eight-days' mission at the Congregational church in this city. Large congregations have been brought together, and many tokens of distinct blessing have been given. The Lord's people have been edified, and the Gospel of God's grace clearly set forth every night. The services on the last Sunday (May 1) were exceedingly rich in power and blessing.

Revival in Virginia, U.S.—An awakening of remarkable scope and intensity is reported from several cities of this Southern State. The religious interest is said to be without parallel in the history of the State, and is confined to no denomination. A leading worker has been Rev. Hugh W. Brown, who is described as "a medium between Mr. Moody and Sam Jones." Among the converts in Charlottesville and Lynchburg there are many prominent citizens. The result of the meetings held by Mr. Moody two years ago are still being felt for good. College students have been specially reached, and the interest among them with respect to foreign missions is very encouraging.

The Church Army.—Prolonged missions have recently been conducted by working-men evangelists from the Church Army at Kensal, Heanor, Croydon, Birkenhead, Dorking, Scarborough, and others are about to be begun at Bolton, Dublin, Belfast, Bristol, Birmingham. Arrangements are being made to use the light evenings in tents and barns in country places to which the working people flocked last year, when great good was done. The committee of the Church Army, 130, Edgware-road, London, W., would be very thankful to hear from any persons willing to lend them small tents for short or long periods. They are prepared to send qualified evangelists to any parish where the incumbent is willing to invite them.

Cinderford.—Those who prayed for the blessing of God to rest on the services conducted by Mr. Opie Rodway at this place in February, will be glad to know that during the last month the pastor (Rev. W. Thomas) had the joy of receiving 110 into the church. There are besides a considerable number still waiting for admission, and the Spirit of God is working mightily among the people. Some of the worst characters in the neighbourhood are being brought to the knowledge of salvation.

Rev. W. H. Aitken in Ireland.—In a warm notice of the mission at Enniskillen, The Fermanagh Times says:—As the mission progresses the services grow in favour, and night after night the church is crowded by congregations of devout and deeply impressed listeners. Much permanent good, we believe, has been already effected. A new spirit has been stirred up; a renewed and more healthy interest is manifested in religion. Mr. Aitken spares not himself in the labours he has undertaken, and it is astonishing to find him, notwithstanding the continuous and arduous work he has already gone through, with vigour as undiminished as on the first day. One Sunday morning he referred in a most kindly manner to the help given him by the choir, while to the co-operation and assistance of the clergy and laity of other Protestant denominations he alluded with unmistakeable warmth and feeling. And these tributes were well deserved. There has been no appearance of sectarian narrowness on the part of any members of the Protestant churches. All are aware that in promoting the mission they are furthering not the interests of a denomination but the glory of God, and in presence of such an aim all minor differences have sunk out of sight.

This is the most awful moment of my life. I cannot tell when I may be called upon to meet my God. I am thankful

Mr. Charles James, of the Gospel Purity Association, returned on Thursday from his extensive lecturing tour in the United States and Canada.

Mr. Edward Hurditch, who arrived in Melbourne in February, has been holding large and fruitful meetings in various churches of Melbourne, also in the theatre, and rooms of the Y.M.C.A., these services being arranged by the committee of the Evangelisation Society of Melbourne, connected with the Y.M.C.A. A considerable number of inquirers remained to the after-meetings, and were being dealt with on many nights down to a late hour. He is now visiting Ballarat and other parts of the colony, and purposes paying a brief visit to New Zealand for similar services.

Revival in Shropshire.—For several months past there has been a marked spiritual awakening in the little town of Oakengates, in Shropshire, which has been intensified by a series of mission services conducted by Rev. Henry Sturt, of Dewsbury, Yorkshire. All the Nonconformist bodies—Congregational, Wesleyan, Baptist, Primitive and New Connexion Methodists—united in the mission, the services being held turn by turn at the chapels of each. The results have been most encouraging, especially in regard to the young people of the Sunday-schools, on the minds of many of whom a deep, and, it is hoped, a permanent impression has been made.—Christian World.

VENEZUELA.—There is no Protestant mission work here, though the Government is tolerant and liberal, and there is perfect freedom of speech and worship.

CHRISTIAN WORKERS' COMMITTEE,

UNITED STATES.

Our friend, Rev. J. C. Collins, New Haven, Conn., writes with respect to this young organisation:—"The work all over the country is unusually hopeful. From every direction we hear of revivals, and the good thing about it seems to be that they are of a permanent and substantial sort. There is coming to be more system in the work, and it is being carried on with energy and persistence. It looks as if we were on the eve of one of the greatest revivals that this country has ever seen. So far as concerns the special work among those outside of the churches, our Christian Workers' Committee are getting things into shape. The Evangelical Alliance of the United States, of which Rev. Dr. Josiah Strong is general secretary, are forming plans looking towards the same thing. Our Committee, and the Alliance, will co-operate in the mutual strengthening of work."

In a bulletin of this Committee we find the following summary of its operations:—"(1) Correspondence Bureau of Information concerning Christian work; (2) Employment of young men, College and theological students and others during term time and in vacations, in practical work under capable mission workers; (3) Speaking in churches, and otherwise stimulating Christians by the distribution of tracts, pamphlets, &c., to a more active practical interest in efforts for the spiritual welfare of the classes outside the churches; (4) aiding pastors and other Christian workers in the formation of Societies or Unions for Christian work; (5) strengthening and encouraging agencies already engaged in mission work.

SOUTH SPAIN.—The schools and church that had been illegally closed last year at Puerto have, since their reopening, had daily increasing attendances. The work, under the superintendence of Rev. W. Moore, is spreading and deepening. There will probably be thirty members of the new church.

E. J. Whately.

AN ITALIAN NEWSPAPER.—A correspondent in Florence states that Signor Cav. Corazzini, of Leghorn, proposes to establish an Italian newspaper of a religious as well as a secular stamp. No newspaper of this character exists in Italy, and it would be of immense importance to have such a paper, which would be taken in by the newsrooms and read by the general public.

Y.W.C.A., DUBLIN.—This Association having arrived at the conclusion that two houses, one on each side of the Liffey, would be most suited to the requirements of the work, opened the one on the north side, at 8, Rutland-square, some time since. This is now in occupation as a Young Women's Boarding House and Institute, and one on the south side is about to be opened at 75, Harcourt-street. In this, besides the accomodation for young women in shops, &c., it is proposed to have an apartment for the use of lady members coming to Dublin, and a few bedrooms for secretaries and others. Communications may be addresed to Miss Marrable, 49, Waterloo-road, Dublin.

EDINBURGH FREE BREAKFASTS.—This Mission has now carried on its beneficent work for twelve years. Every Sabbath morning the workers go out and distribute tracts and invitations to the loafers and stragglers in the streets. In addition to the adults, from 300 to 400 boys and girls are breakfasted in an adjacent hall, and a touching sight this is. The children are visited in their homes, and many also attend a Sabbath-school in the afternoon. Many of the guests have been in good positions previously, and not a few have by the kindly help here afforded been enabled to return to comfort and prosperity, and have returned to praise God for what He has done for them. It is proposed now to erect new mission buildings, with class-rooms, &c., in the heart of the district from which the people come, and a meeting in furtherance of this object has recently been held. Mr. Thomas Dymock, 20, Dalrymple-crescent, Edinburgh, is the honorary secretary.

Among the Churches.

 We shall be happy to receive from our readers brief items of news for this page, respecting Christian work carried on, or progress achieved, in connection with any evangelical church at home or abroad.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

One thousand officers and soldiers of the Church Army were in London for the Conference last week.

Nearly 2000 children and young people are being taught, and about 1500 adults attend the Bible-classes in connection with St. Alphege Mission, Southwark (Rev. A. B. Goulden, vicar). The Mission is amongst costermongers and waterside labourers, and the seven different services held every week are attended by over 1000 people.

The Bishop of Manchester is promoting a scheme for the employment of working-men evangelists in his diocese. An initiatory step has been taken in furtherance of this object by Rev. E. S. James, rector of Chorley, who has engaged the services and guaranteed the stipend of an able and experienced missioner to begin the work of carrying the Gospel message to the homes of the careless and the lost.

BAPTIST.

The report of the Young People's Missionary Society states that in India alone fourteen new schools have been opened, one Young Men's Missionary Society alone finding the money for ten of them.

At the Monday prayer-meeting at the Metropolitan Tabernacle, last week, a contingent from the British and Foreign Sailors' Society was present. The meeting was greatly moved by the prayers and speech of these rough and honest men.

At the opening of the new Beulah Chapel, at Thornton Heath, 150 of the friends met Mr. C. H. Spurgeon at the first dedication service at six o'clock in the morning. In the afternoon he preached from the words, "By his stripes we are healed;" in the evening there was a public meeting.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Dr. Monro Gibson and others will take part in a series of evangelistic services to be held in Upper Norwood Church, in June.

The United Presbyterian Church has now 564 congregations, with a membership of 182,063, an increase of eight congregations and 917 members in the year.

Rev. Peter Carmichael has been giving a series of lectures at Park Church, Highbury, and the closing one, on "The Covenanters," attracted much attention.

The United Presbyterian Church is considering the withdrawal from its missions to Spain and to Japan, in consequence of continued reduction in the income for foreign missions.

The Women's Missionary Association of the English Presbyterian Church, which held its annual meeting during the Synodical gatherings in Manchester, supports several lady missionaries in the foreign field.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Mr. Archibald E. Hunt, of Hackney College, has been ordained as missionary to New Guinea.

Mr. James B. Wookey has been conducting a mission at Willmore-street Chapel, Sunderland.

Thirty-three new members have been received into Argyle Church, Bath, and there is a goodly number more to follow.

At the annual meetings of the Dorset Association, encouraging reports of the work done in the county were presented.

Mr. Leonard Weaver has been conducting successful evangelistic services at Stanley Church, Liverpool, and at its mission at Knotty Ash.

The series of services at Stapleton-road Chapel, Bristol, conducted by Rev. Alfred T. Jones, of Maindee, Newport, Mon., were much blessed. Over sixty anxious souls were dealt with through the week.

Dr. Parker has completed arrangements for his visit to America. The Beecher eulogy is to be delivered in October, and not in June. Dr. and Mrs. Parker intend to spend September in some quiet resting-place.

The church at Liverpool, in which Dr. Raffles formerly ministered, was crowded, when Rev. Hugh Price Hughes preached the annual sermon for the London Missionary Society, about 2000, mostly young men and women, being present.

In his address, as President of the Essex Union, Rev. W. Legerton said the need of the Church is a 'perennial revival." Not in ecclesiastical machinery or ritual, but in a fresh and fuller baptism of the Holy Spirit, is to be found the remedy for the weakness of the Church.

At the annual meeting of the Wilts and East Somerset Union there was a Pastoral Conference on "The Higher Spiritual Life, and how to attain it. Rev. T. Stephens, of Bath, and Rev. G. Robinson, of Mere, gave addresses on "Prosperity within the Church the only security for the progress of the Gospel without the Church."

The Congregational Union of Scotland reports that the capital of the Ministers' Provident Fund has been increased to £11,129, and of the Ministers' Widows' Fund to £11,791. Four churches have been surrendered, while no new church has been added during the year. Rev. Edward White delivered a lecture on "Wasted Lives" at the closing meeting, and Rev. Jas. Chalmers spoke on mission work in New Guinea.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

A Conference of all the yearly meetings willing to join for mutual and brotherly intercourse, is to be held in the autumn in America.

The Peace Conference at Dublin was largely attended. On the Sabbath crowded meetings were held in four meeting houses in and round the city. Early in the last week the meeting was saddened by the sudden death of Sir John Barrington, a Dublin Friend. He had attended meetings on Friday and Saturday.

At the Dublin yearly meeting of ministers and elders, epistles from London and the American yearly meetings were read, and replies prepared. Indiana reported three thousand conversions during the year, half of the number joining the Friends. Dublin, on the other hand, had to deplore a decrease of sixty-one. New York appears to have united men's and women's yearly meetings in one perfectly equal body, and thus practically superseded the yearly meeting.

SALVATION ARMY.

During five months' work at Coleraine, in Ireland, eighty souls have professed conversion. "Some of these were noted drunkards."

A second German corps has been opened at Esslingen. The first station in Amsterdam has been opened, and a hall has also been secured at Copenhagen.

At the "Grecian" slum post "the lasses" are getting a splendid hold of the children, some of whom have given decided evidence of change of heart.

A good work has been commenced on behalf of the French population in London. Five meetings are held weekly, in French, at the Prince of Wales' Theatre, Tottenham Court-road. Several have already professed faith in Jesus.

On two of the Army lasses visiting, one Sunday, a lodging-house, two policemen stayed near the door all the time they were inside. Most of the men were gambling, and very few listened. The next Sunday the gambling was stopped, the men listened to the plainest truths, and not an unkind word was spoken.

Mr. Cooke, at Marylebone police-court, last week, sentenced a fellow named Mable to fourteen days' imprisonment for committing a brutal and unprovoked assault on a Salvation Army captain. It was, said the magistrate, too much the practice for people to interfere with the Salvation Army and other bodies in their marching through the streets, simply because they did not approve of their principles and practices. But the Salvationists and other bodies were entitled to the same protection as any other persons.

METHODIST.

The Juvenile Missionary Society, at Huddersfield, has raised £107 in aid of missions.

The statistical returns presented to the April quarterly meetings (New Connexion) show a considerable increase of members.

Upwards of £500 has already been received towards the mission debt of the New Connexion body as the result of the week of self-denial and prayer.

At Colchester, a farewell tea was given to the Wesleyan soldiers of the 13th Hussars, on the eve of the regiment's removal to Manchester and Liverpool.

Mr. and Mrs. Webster, of Rochdale, have been conducting a week's mission at Belton, in the Epworth Circuit, and, as a result, the life of the church has been transformed.

The mission of Mr. Hutchinson ("Joyful News" evangelist) to Chipping Norton, has been greatly blessed. The inquiry-room was filled again and again, and young and old felt the power of God's Spirit.

Rev. Mark Guy Pearse and Rev. Hugh Price Hughes have accepted invitations to conduct missions in the City Temple and Christ Church, having been invited to do so by Dr. Parker and Rev. Newman Hall.

At a Young Women's Convention, held at Hull, there was an attendance of upwards of 1200. Miss Adeline Waddy (daughter of the late Dr. Waddy) gave a plain and powerful address on the subjects of drink, dress, and social purity.

The interest in the meetings and work carried on at Houghton-le-Spring is being kept up with vigour. The lodging-houses have been visited, and the inmates induced to come to the meeting. About thirty pledges have been taken already.

During a twelve days' mission at Launceston, conducted by Rev. Thomas Cook, 138 persons entered the inquiry-room, only 20 being under fourteen years of age. A farmer's son, his two sisters, and three others belonging to the farm, were all brought to the Saviour. Some of the scenes are blessedly affecting.

"FALLEN ON SLEEP."

Rev. Thomas Powell, for forty years a missionary of the L.M.S., in the Samoan Islands.—Rev. Alex. Westwater, a United Presbyterian Church missionary in China for the past six years.—Rev. Stevenson Horne, Presbyterian minister of Slamannan.—Rev. W. M. Imrie, senior Presbyterian minister of Penicuick.—Dr. Samuel Trail, Professor of Systematic Theology at Aberdeen, and for many years minister of Harray and Birsay, Orkney.—Dr. Hibbert Binney, Bishop of Nova Scotia.—Bailie Messer, treasurer of the Galashiels congregation for twenty years.—Mrs. Catharine van Rensselaer Hall, one of the oldest religious authoresses of America, in her 89th year.—William Lawrance, for twenty-two years a class leader in the Cannock Circuit.—George Coltherd, for many years an active worker and office-bearer in the Congregational churches of Victoria.—At Cowell, New South Wales, Rev. Wm. Kimberley, an old Camden College student.—Rev. S. Dowen, minister of Townley-street Congregational Chapel, Macclesfield. — Rev. G. W. F. Gregg, for many years pastor of Northam Congregational church.

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

THE WOMAN'S BOARD of the American M. E. Church, South, will reinforce its China Mission by sending out five young ladies the coming season.

NEW YORK.—Meetings were recently held to bid farewell to twelve missionaries about to join Bishop William Taylor's band of fifty-six missionaries on the Upper Congo.

INDIA.—While preaching at the Tulsipur mela, Rev. Mr. Knowles was overcome with heat and an attack of nervous prostration. He had made all his preparations to spend April among the Tharus, and this affliction is a great sorrow to him.

COL. GEORGE R. CLARKE still conducts nightly meetings in the Pacific Garden Mission, Chicago, with Mrs. Clarke and a company of devoted Christian men and women as helpers. The results are as wonderful as in times past. Hundreds are seeking and finding Christ.

MR. F. MURPHY'S WORK.—Mr. Joseph Cook lately was present at Farwell Hall, Chicago, and spoke in his characteristic way, and with hearty appreciation, of the efforts put forth by Mr. Moody and Mr. Murphy. Miss Willard also assisted Mr. Murphy in one of his temperance services.

PEACE ASSOCIATION IN ITALY.—A conference has been held in Rome by Mr. Hodgson Pratt, of the International Arbitration and Peace Association, in favour of founding a similar association in Rome. Many leading politicians were present at the conference, and a resolution was passed in support of the scheme.

THE AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY has compiled the results of its work for the past year. It has issued 977,605 volumes, besides half a million in foreign lands. The corrected proofs of the last pages of the New Testament in Ponape have been returned from Micronesia, and the last pages of the Muskogee Testament from Okmulgee. The Dakotans want a new edition in their language.

THE JEWS OF NEW YORK city complain of the hardship of having to close their stores on the Sabbath day, as they have no conscientious scruples about its religious observance. Mayor Hewitt, in replying to the editor of The Jewish Standard, says, "Doubtless this inflicts a hardship upon the minority, but under our theory of government it is a hardship which cannot be avoided." This is about as good prohibition doctrine, and as patly put, as anything we have read lately.—N.Y. Witness.

SOUTH SEA MISSION.—Finding that the work in the mission fields among the South Sea Islands, projected by the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of New South Wales, could not be carried out satisfactorily with one vessel at their command, viz., the well-known schooner Dayspring, the Board of Missions of that Church recently purchased an additional vessel, Cairndhu, and one that should prove very suitable for the work. It was to be despatched early in April for the New Hebrides with a number of missionaries, who are to plant new stations on different islands of that group.

THE FULHAM GOSPEL MISSION has started a rescue branch to work amongst fallen women in that neighbourhood. Tracts and Christian books for distribution would be gratefully received and acknowledged by Mr. E. C. Roper, 11, Rosaline-road, Dawes-road, Fulham.

MISS MACPHERSON'S EMIGRANTS.—At the central noon prayer-meeting, 186, Aldersgate-street, to-day (Thursday), 12 to 1 o'clock, Miss Macpherson will be present with about sixty girls and a few boys on the point of leaving for Canada. Mr. George Williams presides. These meetings are always times of deepest interest. The Christian public are heartily invited.

MEXICO.—Rev. Matthew A. Crawford, missionary of the American Board, writes to us from Hermosillo, Sonora, Mexico, April 18, as follows:—"We have been here nearly six months, and have sold over one hundred and fifty dollars' worth of Bibles and other books, and have had many conversations upon the Bible. Hope to open public services soon. We have been much interested in reading Mr. Grattan Guinness's lectures on Romanism, &c. It would be a great boon to Mexico if the lectures could be translated into Spanish. I believe God would greatly bless them to the conversion of many, and to the strengthening of others.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—Prayer for blessing on the following special evangelistic efforts:—Rev. William Haslam, at the Rink Hall, Blackheath, May 17 to 23; Mr. John B. Bain, at the Y.M.C.A., Hastings, for ten days, commencing on Sunday, May 15; Sunday evening tent services at Godalming, Surrey, conducted by Mr. D. Beresford Gahan; tent mission at Wells-road, Shepherd's Bush, W., being conducted by Messrs. G. Hefford and W. Taylor; services for children and young people, being held by Mr. Banaster at Waterford.——For mission at Down Lodge Hall, Wandsworth, by Mr. Joseph Cleworth, from May 15 to 29.——For services by Mr. E. Hurditch, in Australia and New Zealand.——For special services by Mr Opie Rodway, at Mitchell Dean, Forest of Dean, Gloucestershire, on May 14, 15, and 16.

"What a comfort it is to find that the Bible saints, who now shine as stars in the firmament of heaven, were men of like passions with ourselves! They were not always saints: they sinned, and murmured, and rebelled—as we do. Heaven's rarest blades were not wrought of finer metal than that which is within our constitution. God's choicest vessels were not turned from superior earth to that of which we are made. REV. W. HASLAM, M.A.

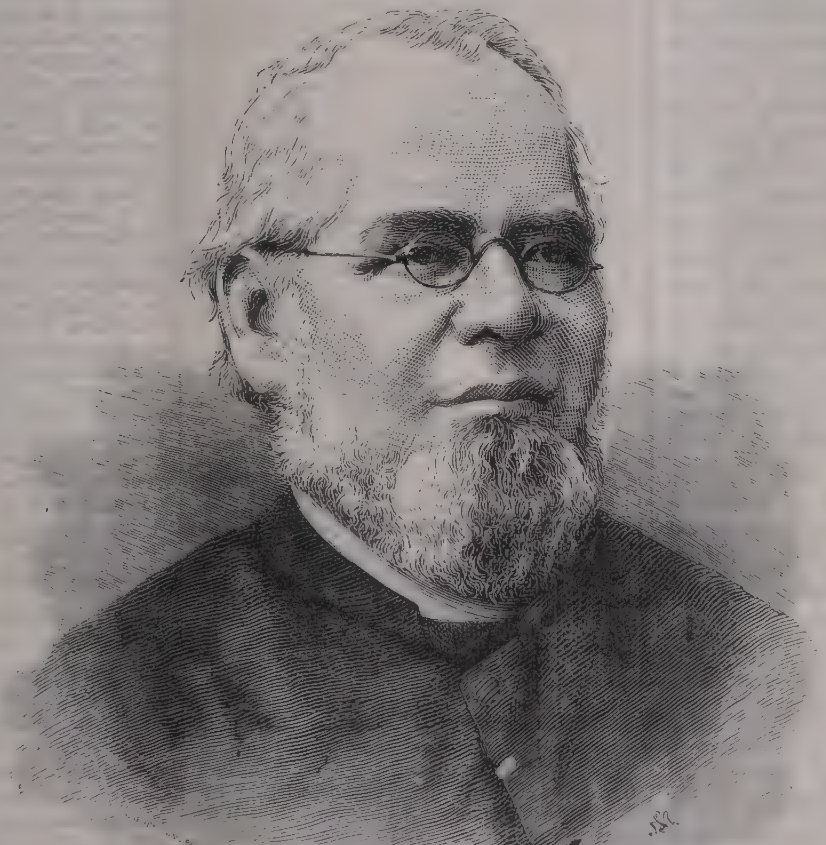
THE biographical value of a life lies not so much in its events as in its experiences. This should hold specially true of a minister's life. The distinctive changes through which his thinking passes can alone throw a satisfactory light on the actions which owe their existence to these changes. Believing this, we shall confine ourselves in the following sketch of Rev. W. HASLAM, the well-known Missioner, to a simple account of how he was led to be and do what he has been and done.

In 1841 the future looked very bright to Mr. Haslam. In the flush of early manhood, engaged to be married to one he dearly loved, and on the eve of ordination in the calling he had chosen, he felt happy and contented. All at once a thunderbolt from the blue burst upon him. He was summoned in hot haste to the bedside of the woman he thought would be his wife. She was dangerously ill, and if he wished to see her alive, he must lose no time in coming to her. After thirty hours of hard and rapid travelling, he reached the sick chamber to find a corpse in a coffin. The shock prostrated him. At first wild rebellion surged in his heart, but gradually the calm of submission stole over him, and with the calm came a sense of nearness to God new to him. Fatigue and grief brought on an illness, which threatened to be fatal. The doctor held out no hope, and death stared him in the face. But longer days were appointed to him. He slowly recovered, and went back to his duties, determined to live for the glory of God. A warm glow of gratitude animated him, and made him pray for a deeper sense of Divine love; but this gratitude was because God had saved—not his soul—but his life. He was religious, but he was not converted.

The state of his health, and his success in applying for a curacy near Truro, led him to Cornwall, where he had his first experiences of ministerial work. Of the responsibility involved in "the cure of souls" he was entirely ignorant; devotion to the Church was the controlling force in his activity. The parish was large, and he was kept very busy. With conscientious assiduity he baptized the children, married the young, visited the sick, and buried the dead. Through his labours the church was changed from an ugly into a beautiful building; and, what was better, its empty pews began to fill. His great grief was the unsympathetic way in which the people received his favourite doctrine, that being a member of the Church and partaking of the Holy Communion were the sole conditions of salvation. They knew better than that. The zealous curate never wearied of thundering against the sin of schism. He carried this to such a length that one Sabbath there was a noisy exodus of the choir and part of the congregation. He took their departure coolly, and posed as a martyr to Church principles. Fortunately for him and his hearers the death of his vicar ended his connection with the parish, and he had to seek a new sphere of service.



(From Photograph by Mr. A. Debenham, Ryde.

In 1846 he was presented by the Earl of Falmouth to the newly-formed parish of Baldhu. With characteristic energy he set himself to the task of gathering a congregation and building a church. The latter sprang into being in the course of a week; it was commenced at 5 o'clock on Monday morning, and by Saturday night the chancel was ready for Sunday use. This temporary erection gave place later on to a handsome permanent church. The people came to it, and listened respectfully to their vicar; but it was evident even to him that they found little joy in what he said. Though earnest and faithful, according to his lights, he was committing the terrible mistake of "building from the top without any foundation; teaching people to live before they were born."

Closer knowledge of his parishioners convinced him in part of his error. The truth dawned on him that souls were at least as valuable as the services of the Church. Long hours were spent by him in meditation and prayer, and facing the problem how to do good to those under his care. He could not understand what men and women meant when they talked to him about their conversion. Conversion was an enigma to him, but he thought it was not a thing of great importance, for he noticed that many of those who professed to have passed through that mysterious change did not attend God's house or come to the Lord's

Table. Little did he dream that he himself was the cause of their remaining away. During all this time he was a wanderer in the dark, yearning for light, and groping after peace of heart. His work he felt to be a failure. He had done his best, but that was powerless to influence the people. Something was wanting, and he was conscious of its absence, but what the something was he could not tell.

The time of his enlightenment was drawing nigh. The way in which it came was striking and unexpected. He paid a visit to Mr. Aitken, of Pendeen, to advise about the church that truly evangelical clergyman was then building. In the course of the conversation which ensued, he complained bitterly about the schismatics in his parish, and especially about the conversion of his gardener. Mr. Aitken rebuked him, by saying, that if he had been converted himself he would have rejoiced with the gardener, rather than complained of him. An argument followed, in which Mr. Haslam was worsted. One saying of his friend, "You do not seem to know the difference between the natural conscience and the work of the Spirit," pierced him like an arrow. He retired to his bedroom, but he could not sleep. Next morning he had to endure some more home-thrusts from Mr. Aitken, who showed him that he was a stranger to peace with God, and pointed out how the living waters of satisfaction were to be obtained only in Christ. John iv. 10 was quoted: "Thou wouldest have asked of Him, and He would have given thee living water." "Shall we ask Him?" broke in Mr. Haslam. "With all my heart," was the quick reply, and Mr. Aitken knelt down to pour out his heart in fervent prayer. That prayer melted Mr. Haslam to tears. He shook with suppressed emotion, and at last sobbed like a little child. Conviction had seized him. A sense of his being in the wrong made him miserable. It seemed to him as if he were adrift on a shoreless sea. The burden of souls led astray by his pernicious teaching weighed heavily on him. In agony of mind he rushed away from his friends, but he could not rush away from the torture of an awakened conscience.

This was on a Wednesday. Thursday, Friday, and Saturday saw him in the depths of despair and remorse. Sunday came, and the mental strain reduced him to such a state that he felt unable for the work of the pulpit. Weak in body and wretched in mind, he resolved just to read the morning prayers, and dismiss the congregation with a few words in explanation of the Gospel for the day. In that Gospel was the question, "What think ye of Christ?" While expounding the circumstances in which it was asked, a wonderful light and joy crept into his soul. Whether the light which dawned on him affected his look or words, he could never tell; but simultaneous with it came the cry from a local preacher who happened to be in the church, "The parson is converted! the parson is converted! hallelujah!" In a moment the building rang with eager shouts from joyous hearts. Mr. Haslam did not check this strange outburst. He simply asked his people to sing the Doxology. They did it enthusiastically, over and over again. Staunch "Churchmen" fled in dismay, but believers remained to bless God. There and then a revival took place, and more than twenty anxious souls found peace. The pastor's conversion was the inauguration of a blessed era for the parish, in which many were brought from darkness

For three years Mr. Haslam and his people rejoiced in the sunshine of times of blessing from on high. Great and lasting good was done. Bitter opposition had to be faced, but it was powerless to put out the fire which burned in warm Cornish hearts. Mr. Haslam was taken to task by his brethren. They accused him of being a fanatic, and of preaching doctrine different to that authorised by the Church (the latter charge came from the fact that ever after his conversion he fearlessly and constantly proclaimed that there is no salvation by the Church and sacraments, but by simple faith in the Lord Jesus Christ). He met their accusations boldly, and showed that he had solid ground to stand on. At a special meeting of clergy, convened to sit in judgment on his doctrine and action, he won a striking victory over his opponents. A proposal to censure him, and a protest against revival gatherings, had both to be abandoned. With the courage born of conviction, he kept true to the Gospel, strengthened by God's blessing on his manifold labours. Baldhu soon became too strait for him; invitations from other districts, asking him to conduct missions, reached him, and he complied with them. Wherever he went, sinners were saved, and believers edified.

It is not our purpose to sketch Mr. Haslam's subsequent activity; we must restrict ourselves to the outstanding experiences which moulded that activity. For a time conversion was the one truth and aim of his preaching, but he was gradually led to see that more than this was necessary. The place and power of sanctification began to occupy his attention. One day it flashed on his mind that his message to men included justification for believers as well as pardon for sinners. He realised that Christ rose again as well as died. Gaining heaven and escaping hell through the Atonement had been his theme, to the exclusion of the life to be lived in Christ. When the truth of the risen Christ got firm hold of him, he passed through his second great experience. In the enthusiasm which it stirred in his heart, he almost ran into the extreme opposite to that he had formerly pursued, by emphasising too much (if such a thing were possible) the need for the Christ life in believers. He exhorted converts to be unceasing in prayer to God that He might cleanse their hearts by the inspiration of his Holy Spirit, and help them to walk in close communion with Him. This pleased some, but it displeased others who did not regard sanctification as an essential accom-somewhat impatient with those who were content to live on the lower levels. He was anxious that they should rise to the heights with himself, but the wise counsels of a friend taught him that he must be gentle and patient in leading people upwards.

Close on his realisation of the truth of sanctification followed a firm grasp of Christ's second coming as the hope of the Church. He had been in the habit, like too many Christians, of looking forward to death instead of expecting the Advent as an event which might happen at any moment. He thought of judgment and the Judge, but he had not the wistful yearning of a bride for the appearance of the Bridegroom, in whom all her desires are centred. The belief that Christ might come soon, filled him with hope and confidence, and stimulated him to the unresting diligence of the servant who may see his Master at any moment. Thus Mr. Haslam's preaching grew in comprehension of the message it had to set forth. The sun of truth which now rose upon his vision was full-orbed. He saw clearly and declared faithfully that salvation is through Christ alone, that the indwelling Christ is the believer's strength and life, and that the coming of Christ in glory is the object of the believer's faith and love.

The story of Mr. Haslam's labours as a missioner, and the rich blessing which attended them, cannot be told by us, but we will not regret that, if it leads the interested reader to get the story as told by Mr. Haslam himself. It is contained in "FROM DEATH TO LIFE" and "YET NOT I;"[*] two of the most striking volumes in the department of religious autobiography our century has seen. They have many qualities to recommend them. Fascinating as a romance, fertile in suggestions to Christian workers, strong in character studies, and written in racy English, they are not books which will be tossed aside if once begun. Their chief value, however, lies in their showing that Pentecostal blessings belong to the nineteenth as much as to the first century, and that in service done for Christ, "It is not by might nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord."

THE EVANGELISTIC MISSION.

FOR nearly twenty years this Mission has carried the Gospel to some of the outlying masses of the people, not ordinarily found within churches and chapels, by means of tent meetings. On some occasions as many as fifteen tents are in use at the same time, in London and the country, most of which are crowded every Sunday and well attended on week-nights, with the very class whom it has been sought to reach by this means. Innumerable instances of apparently genuine conversion to God have been witnessed, as the result of the Gospel preached therein by ministers and evangelists of all denominations.

Mr. Russell Hurditch writes:—"With summer again upon us, I am most desirous of renewing this tent campaign in many most needy places; but though I have had the marquees now in hand placed in thorough repair and readiness for work, I am absolutely without means to commence operations in any one district, the need for pecuniary help at the present time for the general expenses of this Mission being very great, specially in consequence of the loss, through death, of many of its most liberal contributors." The headquarters of the Mission are at 164, Alexandra-road, St. John's Wood,

LAODICEA.

We are not told whether the city of Laodicea, in Asia, where was one of the seven churches to whom our Lord sent special messages of warning, was large or small. There is no description in the Bible of the plan upon which it was laid out—whether its architecture was of this style or that. From all the information we can gather, however, it was a city in which all the tastes of its inhabitants seconded by their wealth, had been fully displayed. It had at least one famous street or avenue extending three or four miles east and west, broad and beautifully paved. The houses on the avenue, each one a palace, were built after plans drawn for the owners, and representing their individual taste, located not less than a hundred feet back from the street on spacious lots of ground of not less than an acre in extent, and not infrequently in lots twice and thrice that size. A few other streets after this style, though not nearly so handsome, characterised the city. These were the second choice of such of the inhabitants as were "rich and increased in goods," and in any other city would have been thought magnificent streets. To have a residence on the principal avenue was the ambition of every young and aspiring citizen. To secure such a prize in the game called "The Pride of Life," many a young man had withdrawn capital from his business which he could ill afford to spare and which crippled him in all his after life, and in not a few cases ruined him.

Strangers coming to the city took the first opportunity to drive the length of the avenue and have the houses, or rather, palaces, of the most distinguished citizens pointed out.

"This is Mr. So-and-So's house." The driver tells you that twenty-five years ago he was a poor young man, a clerk in a grocery store; now he can draw his check for a "million."

"That is Mr. This-One's residence. He has made his fortune in the last ten years by a lucky investment in 'mines.'"

"That is the famous Mr. Z.'s residence; it is one of the finest houses in Laodicea. He came here poor less than fifteen years ago. He discovered a new principle in material science and has so successfully applied it that he has become a millionaire."

"The man who built that house had an ambition when he began business to attain to a fortune that would yield him an income of 1000 dollars for every day in the year. He reached that point, was a most estimable man, and gave away a good deal of money; but just as he was in the height of his fame and at the summit of his prosperity his health failed, and, in a fit of despondency, he shot himself."

Well, every house has its story, and one is charmed as he passes by these magnificent residences, and cannot but sigh that it is given only to a few to have such worldly splendour and comfort; though it is said there is much sorrow in some of the houses whose exterior only suggests affluence and comfort. Some of them are shut up, the owners off to a warmer clime in this inclement season. They will hardly get back before it is time for them to go away for the hot season, to the mountains would ever care to go away from such homes.

In answer to a query once made by a stranger who was enraptured by the beauty of that famous avenue in Laodicea, as to whether "any of the inhabitants of that avenue ever died," "Oh yes, they die; but it is said to be very hard for them to do it, even after they have made up their minds that they must. They hardly expect to find anything equal to it in the other world, if indeed there be another world; and they suppose themselves entitled to the best in that world because they had the best here." The stranger was struck with this remark.

It was also observed that many stately churches grace this principal avenue, or were located very near to it. "Do the Laodiceans go to church?" "Oh yes, most of the people who live on this avenue are church-members, that is, the families are represented in the membership of the church; if not the husbands and fathers, the wife and some of the children, especially the daughters, are members; but even those who are not members go to church, especially on fine Sunday mornings, when the sun shines and it is pleasant to be out and greet one's friends after the services, or walk home together and admire each others' houses."

It was remarked that this city was famous for the number of wealthy men and fashionable women who are connected with the church. It is thought to be a great thing for Christianity that such leading citizens "patronise" it. It is pre-eminently a Christian city. "Do many of the poor people in the city who live on the back streets go to these principal churches on and near to the avenue?" was asked of the guide. "No," was the reply; "you see that these churches are built 'a little high in the threshold' for the poor, and really they would not be comfortable in them; besides, they have churches in their own quarter of the town; but these churches are the principal ones; they set the fashion both in society and religion."

It is thought to be a great card for a minister to be called to the pastorate of one of these churches; and if he will only conform to the habits and customs of the city, especially the avenue portion of it, he may have a very easy time, for they are quite content with a Sunday morning service and a short sermon. As a rule they do not go to church in the evening, though they keep the churches open in deference to an ancient custom.

"Do these churches favour revival and evangelistic meetings?"

"Well, the truth is there are a few good souls among them who are really anxious about the religious condition of the churches," was the answer; for some do doubt whether there is such genuine spiritual life in them. The pastors are somewhat anxious, and if only they could get some of their leading men interested they would be glad to do something more vigorous in the religious line. But you see they are as a rule so rich and increased in goods, that they really have need of nothing."

Nevertheless, upon further inquiry it was found that there were some very earnest souls in Laodicea, who were mourning over the "lukewarm" condition of the church, and were seeking "some gold tried in the fire," and some "white raiment" and "eye-salve," such as the Head of the Church is said to be urging upon them. It is to be hoped that they will yet hear a remonstrance and warning that is said to now awaiting their reply, though the outcome of it is doubtful. The individual members who are in fellowship with Christ will be saved, whatever happens to the Church.—N. Y. Independent.

"THE SPIRITS IN PRISON."

Several correspondents dissent from the view of Archdeacon Campbell (see article under above title, April 28) that the sons of God of Gen. vi. 3 were angels. Some seem unaware that such a view was ever before expressed. We readily admit that they have ground for their own opinion, and that there are difficulties on the other side. But we have not space to pursue the discussion. And, after all, it is much more important to learn the lesson conveyed in the narrative, which is unaffected by the question whether the sons of God were angels of God or descendants of Seth.

The lesson taught is this: That when that which is good is mingled with that which is evil, the result will not be good but evil. The good does not overcome the evil, but the evil overcomes the good. "The Nephilim (see Num. xiii. 33) were in the earth in those days; and also after that, when the sons of God came in unto the daughters of men, and they bare children to them, the same were the mighty men which were of old, the men of renown" (Gen. vi. 4). Not men mighty in faith and holiness, but mighty men of the earth: mighty hunters like Nimrod; men like the builders of Babel, who sought thus to make themselves a name; men of renown like Korah, Dathan, and Abiram (Num. xvi. 2); not like the Plant of Renown whom God raises up (Ezek. xxxiv. 29).

There is no such thing in nature or in history as good leavening evil and making it good; but nature and history abundantly testify that evil leavens the good and reduces it to its own likeness. It is pre-eminently in Christendom that the throne of iniquity, which frameth mischief by a law, claims fellowship with God. Not by the union of sons of God with daughters of men; not by the mingling of seed, but by death and resurrection, is a seed of God to be attained.

THE OPIUM QUESTION.—A breakfast was recently given by the Anti-Opium Society to several Chinese missionaries and others. Sir Joseph W. Pease, M.P., president of the Society, occupied the chair. Mr. Donald Matheson, chairman of the Executive Committee, moved, "That this meeting cordially approves of Dr. Dudgeon's proposals for concerted action among missionaries and others, with a view to the enlightenment of both Chinese officials and people on the subject; and pledges itself to do all in its power to promote the establishment of a special agency in China, for the complete suppression of the opium vice." This resolution was seconded by Mr. Mark Stewart, M.P., and after an interesting discussion, was unanimously carried.

SOUTHSEA MISSION.—For six years we have had permission from the town authorities to pitch a tent on Southsea Common for Gospel services, where we have had the opportunity of preaching to people of all classes of society and denominations, and hope to be thus favoured again this summer, and to commence about the end of May, and to continue until September, holding meetings once or twice every day. The blessings given during the past have been great, and there are many in our midst to-day who are living witnesses to the power of God to save and to keep, besides the numbers who have gone to other parts of the world, and are bearing testimony for Him; and being stimulated by the past and strengthened for the future by God Himself being with us, we go forth expecting to reap more abundant blessings than in any previous year. JOHN DENNING.

STUDENTS AT CHRISCHONA.

ON Sunday, April 17, we called early on Mme. Rappard, the daughter of Bishop Gobat, at 42, Karthausgasse, Basel, and found her heart very full of Chrischona. She lived there for many years, and has been earnestly devoted to its welfare. All her children were born there, and two of them were very willing to walk with us to their birth-place as our guides, their mother remarking that to their minds there is no spot on earth so near heaven as Chrischona. We walked for some distance along the beautiful Rhine, and then commenced ascending, for Chrischona is 800 feet above Basel, on the summit of a hill, commanding on a clear day fine views of the Jungfrau, the Eiger, the Faulhorn, and many other snowy peaks of the Swiss Alps.

On the route we met several detachments of students who were going out on the Sabbath day to evangelise the surrounding towns and villages. They touched their hats and gave us a cheerful smile of recognition, as they saw where we were going. Forty different localities are thus visited regularly by the young men from Chrischona. Several Young Men's Christian Associations have thus been formed in the neighbourhood. Much prayer is offered for a blessing on these early missionary labours, and a time of careful preparation is appointed for them on the previous day. One of the caretakers told us that at five o'clock in the morning the voice of the students was often heard in the woods "reciting their sermons" and preparing for their appointed work.

The institution was established many years ago by the late Rev. Chris. Fried. Spittler, for the training of missionaries for the Home and Foreign field, and hundreds have since gone out to a great variety of service. The origin was amid much prayer and much hard work, if not positive hardship. It is called the "Pilgrim Mission," and there is a great deal of the simplicity and honest endeavour of the pilgrim spirit throughout. The present neat church on the summit of the hill was formerly like a stable, and the farm, which now covers about one hundred acres, was formerly held by a bad farmer, who entailed much trouble on the early student cultivators.

Pastor Spittler may have made some mistakes, but he set before himself a high and noble aim, and that was effectually to train young men for missionary life, and while providing for them means of education to inure them by real hard work for the vicissitudes that lay before them. The men do not now devote so many hours to manual labour as they did formerly, but the efficiency and the simplicity of the Pilgrim Mission are well maintained. The remark made to us on our arrival shows the spirit in which the work is carried on :—"When we remember how poor people give their pennies for the support of the Mission we think it ought to be all very simple."

The household to which we found ourselves introduced consists of 113 persons. In the first place, there is Inspector Haarbeck, and his family of seven; then there are four tutors, three female assistants, sixty-seven students, three farm labourers, one gardener, three shoemakers, three tailors, fourteen printers, and eight bookbinders. The students are divided into four classes, but the whole household sits down to meals together, and it was a lovely down to dinner with them. Farm servants and students, printers and tailors, all sit down together with the inspector and his family. Our hearts were lifted in praise to God for the privilege of mingling with them in their frugal meal. Before dinner was finished, a portion of Scripture was read by one of the tutors, and a German hymn of thanksgiving was solemnly sung, and then the students dispersed to their rooms.

We found the class-rooms especially well stored with Christian literature, and books for Bible exposition and study. The bedrooms are very plainly furnished, and each student selects for himself a text which answers the purpose of a motto. One of the most prominent mottoes consists of the words, "ICH-ER," the former word being crossed out, while the latter stands in full, signifying, "Not I, but Christ." Each house and every room appeared to have its appropriate text. The motto inscribed in large letters on the exterior of the building is "Alles was Odem hat lobe den Herrn," "Let every thing that hath breath praise the Lord." Other favourite quotations are 1 John iv. 16; 1 Pet. ii. 24; Ps. cv. 1, 2, 3; but the leading thought of Chrischona is, "DEIN GOTT IST KONIG"—"Thy God is King;" and the practical theology of the institution seems to be: (1) God is our loving friend and house father, and (2) "As for me and my house we will serve the Lord." The students are mostly between twenty and thirty years of age, but some are younger. They are understood to consecrate themselves for life to the Lord's work, and to be willing to go wherever they are sent, due regard being paid to their varied qualifications. To use their own words, they consist of those "that can say of a truth, 'The Lord is my Shepherd.'" They are all expected to do some manual work, the first class working one hour a day, the second class working two hours, and the third class working three hours, daily.

The careful preparation and training of missionaries is a matter of such very great importance at the present time in connection with the development of Home and Foreign Missions, that it may be helpful to give more in detail the daily life of the students.

They rise at five in summer and winter. Before breakfast they have a quiet time for reading and prayer. They write remarks on the chapter read, and these notes are examined by their tutors. They breakfast at 6·30, and family prayer follows. After this the household work must be done, that is, sweeping and cleaning the house and its surroundings. From 8 to 12 lessons are given. Twelve is the dinner hour, after which there is a recess, when they can play on the piano or the violin. At 1 o'clock there is some manual work in the house, or on the farm, or in one of the workshops. At 4 o'clock the bell rings, assembling the whole household to a cup of coffee, and from 5 to 8 all the students are again engaged in their studies. Supper is at 8 o'clock, and at 10 o'clock everyone retires for the night, and the "senior" student extinguishes all the lamps, and locks the doors. Each of the men in the first class acts as "senior" student in turn, his duty being to see that absolute punctuality and order are observed, also to convey the wishes of the students to the inspector, and to receive and give the instructions of the inspector to the students.

Theophilus Waldmeier was trained in this Institution, and during the last thirty-seven years a large number have gone forth to distant parts of the world. Brother Argawi, an Abyssinian, is now working in his native country, and reports that "several hundreds of Jews have been brought to the knowledge of Jesus their Messiah." Brother Schneller is working other of their men have been engaged in the Galla country. But by far the larger number are located in Switzerland, Germany, Austria, and the United States, forming a sort of "Inner Mission" for the German-speaking populations and colonists. Many of them are doing exceptionally good work, while they report in all simplicity that a certain brother who was sent to Russia, "lost courage," and they were obliged to sever their connection with him.

The whole of the missionaries, present and absent, are compacted together in a way that affords them mutual cheer and strength. A number of the "Brothers"—sometimes forty or fifty—come up to the annual gathering at the old "Mother House." Regular correspondence with those at a distance is maintained. Their work is daily brought before the Lord in prayer in the household community, and the assurance, wherever they are, that intercession is being made for them, strengthens their faith. In addition to all this, their beloved friend, Inspector Rappard, is devoting his life to visiting each evangelist, spending a few days with him, and holding meetings among the people. At the time of our visit he was in this way travelling through the United States, visiting the isolated workers among the German colonists in the West.

One peculiarity in the work is the Home of Rescue at Pilgerhütte, adjoining the Institution. The house is for repentant prodigals, contains accommodation for sixteen or seventeen men, and is generally full. The oldest inmate is sixty-seven years old, the youngest eighteen. Some are educated men from wealthy families, others are agriculturists, but all live together in this pretty country house, and all are engaged in vigorous manual work, either on the farm, or in chopping wood, or in the printing establishment. Men who have lost position and character by their own misconduct, are thus raised up again, and restored to society. They remain in the Rescue House from three months to two years. Such work is naturally surrounded with great difficulties and discouragements. They told us that "many leave the Home of Rescue without having really forsaken the path of sin, or having turned to the Lord," while others repay the efforts bestowed upon them a hundredfold. Thus one who had ruined himself through strong drink, and was more than once on the brink of suicide, was brought to the House of Rescue. It became indeed a Home to him. He found forgiveness through the blood of the Lamb, and strength to lead a new life, and he is now working in Paris in the cause of Gospel Temperance.

The printing office is a large establishment, and sends forth light that cannot be hid. It is to a large extent on a purely commercial footing, and its funds are independent of the Pilgrim Mission. One of the most charming of its periodicals is the Glaubensbote, or "Faith Messenger." This has not only a large circulation among subscribers, but is a messenger of joy and instruction to the scattered workers.

After making a complete circuit of the premises, it was with thankful hearts that we turned to the house of prayer, as the bell summoned them to their afternoon service. The students formed a large part of the audience. The sermon was an exposition of Luke i. 67—80, the thanksgiving of Zacharias for the coming kingdom of the Messiah. The speaker was one of Ritualism has made but slight inroads on this happy hill-top. The preacher wore no surplice, and no white cravat, and used no notes. He spoke with all the earnest simplicity of an address in a Friends' meeting house, and there was no intoning in his voice. The burden of his theme was the necessity for holy living, and the Gospel he declared, was the power of the Lord Jesus to enable us all to walk before Him in holiness and righteousness all the days of our life. Thus Chrischona is giving a clear message to the world, and is doing its best manfully to solve one of the great problems of the day. H. S. Newman.

EVANGELISATION IN SICILY.

From the eighth annual report respecting this work by Signors Varnier and Scuderi much cheering information may be gained. The daily evening meetings for prayer and evangelisation have been kept up uninterruptedly in Messina, and many have been the instances of people who, drawn to them by the singing of hymns, have gone home deeply impressed by the word of God. Many of those who have been converted, having gained sufficient Scriptural knowledge, are themselves voluntary evangelists, and frequently silence the arguments of the priests.

In a recent visit to Mandanici, Signor Scuderi was used by the Lord to evangelise more than three hundred labourers engaged in constructing a road. The contractor, though before intensely prejudiced against Protestants, after hearing this evangelist speak, was convinced of his error, and, having himself received the word with joy, invited Scuderi to address the men. These, encouraged by the example of their leaders, listened most earnestly, and from that time the contractor himself read to them in the intervals of cessation from work. In many other places striking incidents of the power of the word of God have been seen.

Full liberty is given for the preaching of the Gospel to the military, and an awakening has taken place. Some of the soldiers, having determined to follow the Saviour, petitioned their officer to be allowed to join the Protestant Church. They were told that they were free to do so, and at the close of the regular service, conducted by Signor Scuderi, they stepped forward, and boldly declared before all that they would follow the Lord Jesus. Many of the officers have also asked to be enlightened in the Gospel truths.

The method of evangelisation adopted is that of not inviting or pressing the converts formally to separate themselves from the Church of Rome, or to join a separate body; but to believe the word, to adhere to Christ, and to leave sin. The plan is working well, and is one that tends very much to strengthen the converts, and to give their witness for the Gospel greater weight in the society in which they move.

THE WAYSIDE BIBLE-CARRIAGE.—During the past month Mr. John M. McAuliffe, with two brethren, have held a series of deeply-interesting meetings in connection with his carriage, in South Bucks. Many copies of the Scriptures have been distributed, upward of three thousand Gospel books sold, and five thousand tracts and papers gratuitously circulated. For thirty days there have been three hours per day of house-to-house visitation by these three servants, making for each ninety hours of cottage-door preaching. Twenty-four villages have been thus visited, and forty meetings held from the carriage, or in chapels or rooms. The average attendances at these village gatherings have been 280. Many conversions have resulted from the meetings. In this statement children are not included, but in all the meetings they have gathered to the carriage to listen to the "Baby Organ," and to join in the singing of the hymns. Mr. McAuliffe during May is visiting Northamptonshire villages.

A RABBI CONFESSING CHRIST.

RABBI LICHTENSTEIN OF TAPIO SZELE.

Dear Sir,—Referring to the interesting communication in your issue of April 28, regarding Rabbi Lichtenstein, allow me to add a few particulars:—More than two years have elapsed since he first came to see me in this city, and I have had continued intercourse with him since. Through the reading of the New Testament he was led gradually into the light, and he was soon moved mightily by the desire to testify to his brethren that Jesus is the Christ. His idea, however, from the first was that he might carry his people with him, and so he indicated that he did not wish to separate himself from them by being himself at once baptized.

A year ago, having seen some of his manuscripts, I urged him to give publicity to his views through the Press. He hesitated for some time, but at length consented. I undertook to get his pamphlets printed. The first, "The Talmud on its Defence," was not much noticed by the Jews. It was, as one of them afterwards described it, "a harmless thing." His object was to introduce himself to the public as a man who was heart and soul a Jew. The appearance of the second pamphlet, however, "My Testimony," in which he declares his belief that Jesus Christ is Israel's and the world's Messiah, was like the bursting of a bombshell. The excitement and wrath of the rulers of the synagogue here and elsewhere knew no bounds. He was summoned to a conference with the chief Rabbis and other leading Jews in our city. They maintained at first that he could not have written the pamphlet himself. He was a humble man from the country, who had attended none of the modern schools of learning, and it was obviously impossible that he could thus wield the pen; it was a "mystification," they said, he had only lent his name to what had been written by another.

One gentleman who was present said that he would lay a thousand florins on the table, if the Rabbi would take the pen and show that he was capable of writing such German. The Rabbi replied that he had not a thousand florins at his disposal, but that he could procure the sum, would lay it on the table, take up the pen, and write on any Biblical subject which they might choose to name. "And, gentlemen," he added, "you will lose your thousand florins."

When they saw that they were mistaken on this point, they pressed him to make over to them, for a sum of money, his rights of authorship with regard to the pamphlets. The offer made to him must have been tempting, for he felt, he said, as if he might have left their meeting-room almost a rich man, but he refused. They then said that if matters stood thus with him he must leave them at once, and be baptized. It will not be the first time, they thought, that a Rabbi has left their community and been baptized; but that a Rabbi in office should confess Jesus as Christ, that is not to be endured.

As he did not resign, efforts were made to get him deposed, but without success. As each Jewish congregation has its independence, a Rabbi cannot easily be removed unless the people dismiss him; and the people at Tápio Szele are by no means disposed to part with Rabbi Lichtenstein.

For pamphlets sold the Rabbi has received fully 100 florins from me, and I am glad to hear that he has given my 100 florins to the priest as a first instalment in payment of his debt to him. I shall be very thankful for any aid which friends may send me on the Rabbi's behalf.

Yours very truly, Andrew Moody.

Rudolf Quai 8, Budapest.

The following is from the Vienna correspondent of The Times:—

The New Testament, which was translated into Hebrew by the late Rev. Isaac Salkinson, missionary among the Jews of Vienna, has been reprinted here in a second edition of 120,000 copies. Of this number 100,000 have been bought by the subscription of one generous Scotch donor, who requested that they might be distributed gratis among Hebrew-reading Jews all over the Continent. Two missionaries lately came from England to make a distribution from Vienna, and they have been sending copies to about three hundred Rabbis, many of whom have undertaken to circulate these Scriptures among their co-religionists. Very few have stated that they had any objection to read the New Testament.

In connection with this movement it may be mentioned that one of the most learned and respected of Hungarian Rabbis, Dr. J. Lichtenstein, who has been thirty-five years Rabbi of Tápio-Szele, has lately startled his co-religionists by two pamphlets in which he affirms the Divinity of Christ. The pamphlets, being very ably written, have been noticed by all the leading newspapers, and have raised much controversy, for Dr. Lichtenstein professes to remain obedient to the Mosaic dispensation while recognising that Christ was the Messiah.

CHILDREN'S HOME IN SWEDEN.

In the parish of Ström. North Jemtland, is the Fridsberg Children's Home; an institution for Norwegian and Swedish Lapp children, and, as far as accommodation permits, for other poor and friendless little ones. The first thought of beginning a Children's Home was suggested by a sight of the spiritual and bodily needs which exist among so many of these travelling nomads, who, among the mountain districts, struggle hard to find the means to sustain life. A voice that could not be silenced said: "Build a Children's Home yourself, so a place will be prepared for many neglected children."

It appeared so impossible, but we laid the plan before the Lord, and, after prayer, the ground was bought. Some Christian friends interested in the plan gave us the timber gratis, and a suitable building was raised. The first year we took sixteen children, but soon we increased that number, and since then we have had from twenty-five to thirty-six at once within our walls. They receive a Christian training and education, together with the ordinary school course, and teaching in the various household branches.

The present position of the Home is such that, however painful it may be, we find ourselves compelled to decrease our numbers. The land around would bring in considerable help towards our sustenance, had we only the means to cultivate it; besides this we are in want of the necessary outhouses, though both timber and planks are on the spot. May the Lord kindle a fire of love in many hearts for this Home among the mountains. We cannot do otherwise than tell our needs and wait, looking up to Him from whom all help comes.

SAILORS' REST, NAPLES.—At a social meeting, held on April 20, it was stated that the influence of the work among sailors here is seen in a great diminution in the cases of outrage at Pozzuoli. A reunion of British residents from Naples, and of those employed in Sir William Armstrong's works, was recently held; and at other ports the influence of this movement, fostered by the Seamen's Rest Aid Society, is also spreading. The hon. secretary of the Society is Mr. D. M. Cameron, Thurlow House, Wandsworth-road, Clapham, S.W.
